Collucci was released after he made a deal with the US Immigration Service that he would testify against the others in the ring. They made the mistake of releasing him after he gave his word. He then returned to Canada, but of course promptly reneged on the deal, and that was the end of that. No one went to jail as the result of catching them redhanded.

Collucci is a naturalized Canadian citizen. He's known by the Toronto police and the RCMP to be tied to organized crime groups in Toronto and Montreal.

The man who was in charge in Toronto was one Tomasso Buscetta. He was born in Palermo and lived there for a number of years. But he had to leave Palermo suddenly in 1963 because, unfortunately, he had a little accident. He filled a car with dynamite, intending to blow up several Mafia leaders from a rival family. Unfortunately, he parked it in the wrong place, someone came to investigate; and in the confusion that followed, it blew up and seven policemen and two bystanders were killed.

Buscetta felt it was unhealthy to remain in Palermo; so he came to Toronto. He came here under the name of Manuel Lopez and he was using a Mexican passport. He lived here for two years from 1963 to 1965, during which time he developed a heroin and immigration trade from Toronto to New York.

He went to the States in 1965 but came back to Toronto in April 1970, using the name of a naturalized Canadian citizen; and while using this name he procured a genuine Canadian passport under this name. From here, he travelled back and forth to New York using this passport. Late in 1970 he was arrested on a trip to New York City, where he was charged on two counts of smuggling aliens from Canada; but the charges were drawn up faultily and he was dismissed on a legal technicality. The Americans were a little upset with Buscetta and they promptly charged him again with extortion, together with another man by the name of Rosario Gambino—he's a cousin of Carlo Gambino's—and they had been going around to Italian businessmen in New York threatening dire things would happen to them unless they paid for a certain amount of protection.

Buscetta put up bail, or actually had a bondsman put up bail, but decided not to wait for trial. He fled to Brazil and he promptly went into business in Brazil. Shortly after that he was arrested for smuggling Italian labourers into that country. He was then deported to Italy where he is now serving 14 years for the Palermo bombing.

After he had to leave Toronto so suddenly the post was left vacant, one might say. During his Canadian smuggling operations, Buscetta was followed fairly constantly by the undercover squad of the RCMP. He was seen meeting with three very interesting Canadians; one is a Montreal butcher—I'll tell you more about him later; one is a certain man named Guido Orsini; and the third was a fellow by the name of Frank Cotroni. More about those men later.

Buscetta had a deputy and this deputy was a chap by the name of Vincenzo Cuffaro, also a Torontonian; at least he lived in Toronto—he wasn't a Torontonian. Unfortunately, he disappeared in late 1970 and it is the belief of the police that he was murdered by rival gangsters. He was the enforcer and he was known as an extortionist.

They were the leaders. Now we come to the current leaders of the racket. The present chief of the ring in Canada is a Montreal butcher in his late 30s. He has no convictions against him. At the present time he is up before a Quebec court on charges of having possession of stolen bonds but that case hasn't come to trial yet.

He is Sicilian born. He lives in Montreal mostly but he travels frequently back and forth to Toronto. He originally organized the racket from Montreal but he now runs it from Toronto because most of the immigrants are now flown from Rome directly to Toronto rather than to Montreal.

Last year, the RCMP gathered a great deal of evidence against this man. They went to the Department of Justice and asked for permission to charge him.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): On a point of order. I'm not clear, Mr. Speaker, on what the member said when he got up. The Star gave him this article to present to the House and he implied that the paper didn't want to take the chance of being libellous and that they had given him the job of presenting this to the House. I'm wondering if he is in bed with the Star that the paper won't print the thing? I'm not clear on how he gets to be so that he could ruin a man's reputation if the Star won't. The Star will print it tomorrow, sir.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Sargent: He says that the paper won't take the chance but it will let him take the chance in the House here.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): There's no point of order there.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That sounds like a point of order to me.

Mr. Sargent I think we should define, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The member's speech comes later!

Mr. Foulds: He didn't want to speak tonight.

Mr. Sargent: I think he should define just what the deal is with the Star.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What is the deal?

Mr. Sargent: What is the deal?

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park, please.

Mr. Shulman: There can't be any ruling on this. It's not a point of order but I'll explain it to the member.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): That gives the member for High Park a little more credibility.

Mr. Shulman: The Star, let me say, is not aware I'm giving this speech tonight. The Star gathered the material. Let me say I'm not giving it with or without its permission.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Is the member asking a question? I'd be perfectly willing to answer any questions. Is the member asking a question?

Mr. Sargent: I am not sure he knows what he is talking about.

Mr. Shulman: I'm not sure the member knows what he is asking. I will make it quite clear this speech is not being given with the Star's permission. I have the material. I'm not even sure if the Star is aware I have the material. I suppose by now it is aware.

Mr. Sargent: The member told us!

Mr. Shuman: The member should go back and read Hansard. I gave the paper thanks for not printing it. I chose my words very carefully but I'm quite sure that the brass of the Star right now is gulping hard, I assure the member. If I'm in bed with the paper it's without its knowledge. I snuck in, one might say.

Mr. Foulds: Did the member for Grey-Bruce not detect a note of irony in his voice at the beginning?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: It's a fairly big outfit to sneak into bed with.

An hon. member: It is a very big bed.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The paper had to consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Please carry on. Let's get this thing on the road.

Mr. Shulman: I lost the trend of my story.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Well said, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Well done, Mr. Speaker, it was a perfectly timed observation.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid I lost the trend of what I was saying. I am going to go back to the beginning and start again to make sure that no one missed anything.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: You are a credit to the chair.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that I am not spoiling anyone's reputation. There is only one person who is alive and who has never been convicted of a serious international criminal offence, and I am using a pseudonym for him. I am describing him as a Montreal butcher, and I want to make that very clear.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Call him Mr. X.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I could call him Mr. F, that would be all right.

An hon. member: Call him Mr. Sargeant.

Mr. L. Maeck (Parry Sound): Maybe that is why the price of beef went up.

Mr. Foulds: Call him Roy for "king".

Mr. Shulman: At the end of last year the RCMP had gathered a great deal of information against this Mr. F.

Mr. Foulds: "Roi", for Mr. King.

Mr. Shulman: They wanted to lay charges against him and the charges were actually drawn up. They were charging him with "conspiring with a person or persons unknown to circumvent the Immigration Act." They went to the Justice Department and asked for permission to lay these charges. The Justice Department refused permission because they stated in their opinion the charges would not stick.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: That applause wasn't for the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman); it was for the Provincial Secretary for Justice.

Mr. Shulman: Also, apparently it was the feeling that any damage that was being done by these acts was not being done to Canada, it was being done to the United States of America and as such they couldn't get too aroused about it.

The RCMP officers who were involved in this investigation were very upset at the time of the ruling. They are still very upset at this ruling because, of course, they worked in close co-operation with US police authorities and if this co-operation is to continue it can't be just a one-way street. American authorities have complained for some years that they have not been getting co-operation from our authorities on a number of these international crime matters.

Mr. F works very closely with two men whom I am going to name because I can't hurt their reputations anyway; they've already been completely destroyed. Those two men are Guido Orsini, whom I mentioned previously, who is aged 38, and Mr. Frank Cotroni of Montreal.

Orsini has two minor convictions so far; one is for possession of a Quebec Liquor Board seal. And he was convicted in the USA for crossing the border illegally. He was caught on a back road while he was smuggling aliens into the United States and was given a suspended sentence for this. Orsini is currently up on charges of possession of $9 million worth of heroin in Montreal.

The other man, Frank Cotroni, is a capo in the Cotroni family.

He is a brother of Vic Cotroni, whom we all have heard so much about from the Montreal crime commission hearings. He operates a talent agency and he travels frequently between Montreal and Toronto.

Well, this is the racket: It's a smuggling racket, in which we aren't really being hurt terribly, except that we are helping organized crime; it's the Americans who are suffering the brunt of it. But we are very foolish if we think that this type of crime, once it gets entrenched on that side of the border, can be held there. It spreads back across; we've seen this time and time again. We see it now in the current construction rackets; we see it in the layoffs with betting; we see it in all the other rackets that came up through Guelph and through Hamilton.

It's rather important that we co-operate with international authorities to stop this now because it is growing very rapidly. What can we do? I accept the Justice Department's ruling that the charges won't stick, and if they do stick, they are of such a minor nature that the person will barely get more than a slap on the wrist. But there is one thing that we can do. The one thing that organized crime hates is exposure, and the one thing that the persons involved in organized crime hate is exposure.

I have got up here for four years running and pleaded with various Attorneys General and the various Ministers of Justice and the various Prime Ministers to hold a royal commission into the problem of organized crime in the construction industry. Finally they are doing it, and they have taken down, let me say, good terms of reference. I presume we'll have a good commission counsel—I certainly hope so. They are doing the right thing here, and this is going to solve this problem for some years to come. But it took the government such a long, slow time to get around to it.

Now, here is something which the government can nip right in the bud with a royal commission. This is the way to handle this type of problem. It's really the only way the government can handle this type of problem. For once the Conservatives are not involved. We don't have any names of people attending parties, or details of any money passing hands. It's all being done—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): We didn't the last time either.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I'll come to that in a minute. We'll be back at that before the evening is over.

Mr. Foulds: Does the minister want to open that up?

An hon. member: Don't go away yet!

An hon. member: Stay around!

Mr. Shulman: I am asking the Provincial Secretary for Justice—I am glad that he is now in the House—to pass the word to his two more potent confrères, the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) and the Solicitor General, and perhaps one of those two men who have the ear of the Premier could see that something is done so that next year we don't have to have a lot more material from American authorities to bring up here that embarrasses us all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, enough of new things in the organized crime field. I hate to do it, but I am going to go back to the speech I gave back last—

Mr. MacDonald: The House leader invited this; he provoked it.

Mr. Shulman: I wasn't going to do it, you see, but the House leader has invited me to do so and I can hardly refuse.

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, I ran into some serious difficulty here when, in the course of detailing the problems involving organized crime in the construction industry, I identified the present Attorney General as having attended a party at the home of one of the principals involved in these crimes. In actual fact, as it turned out, he was not at this party; it turned out it was his associate, his partner on the front bench, the member for Ontario (Mr. Dymond). But as a result of this gross error the Conservatives—you may recall the evening and the days that followed—did make some noise, Mr. Speaker, and they were a little annoyed with me. In fact, it went so far that the Premier of this province rose and said I should resign my seat, which I offered to do if he would have a by-election, but that didn't appeal to him very much. So we didn't have any by-election and I didn't resign my seat.

Mr. Roy: The member lost his seat. He lost his seat on that one.

Mr. Shulman: I lost my seat?

Mr. Roy: No, the NDP lost one seat and we got three seats more.

Mr. Shulman: Well, that's possible, but I somehow have my doubts.

Mr. Cassidy: Don't be too cocky about that!

Mr. Shulman: I somehow have my doubts.

An hon. member: Worry about your own.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is instructive now to look back and see what really did happen. I think it must be obvious to the dullest-witted Conservative backbencher that I did not make up this story.

Mr. Breithaupt: The member is not going to name names there!

Mr. Shulman: No, it's not necessary, we can look about.

An hon. member: Don't overestimate them.

Mr. Foulds: They're not asking him to name names this time!

Mr. Shulman: I think it's obvious to the dullest-witted backbencher that I did not make up this story, because that could have only led to my own embarrassment, to my own downfall let me say.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: And that didn't happen.

Mr. Shulman: In actual fact the information was given to me by a man who had been supplying considerable and continued reliable information about crime. Now why would this man make up this story? This is quite fascinating. It could only lead to a—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It sounds like a whitewash.

Mr. Shulman: It sounds like a whitewash?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Whitewash, putting the blame on somebody else.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, I am not going to put the blame on someone else, I am bringing it right back to this chamber, right back to this chamber.

An hon. member: Where it belongs.

Mr. Shulman: Let's face it, Mr. Speaker, there was no more sense for him to make up this story than for me to make up this story. He is a licensed private detective in the province; he depends on the goodwill of the Attorney General's department to keep his licence. Why would he make up a story like this about the Attorney General, which he knew I was bringing to the House, which he knew I was going to expose, when he knew if it was denied that I would name him as the source? Why would a man like that make up a story like that?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Why would the member introduce a bill on ethics, for goodness sake?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Well, we have a number of witnesses to prove that; there is no question on that matter.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, I'll admit a little in a moment.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Remember the last time the member made a speech, the trouble he got into?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: I am glad that the backbenchers and one of the frontbenchers are getting a little nervous. I noticed before when we were talking about Sicilian immigrants they weren't too nervous, but when we come back to the Justice department they get a little more nervous. Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can find out why that man made up that story, because—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Maybe the member didn't pay him enough.

Mr. Shulman: —I wasn't exactly content with the results of what had happened that night, and I had certain documents which this gentleman had given me. He couldn't deny the documents because they were there, his name was on them.

So I decided, since we do have an Act in this province which covers private investigators, I decided to go down to the office of the OPP which controls private investigators —and this is some considerable time ago—and told them that I wished to lay a charge under section 24 of the Act, which says that a private investigator may not reveal any information which he has received in the course of his investigations to any person who has not been hired by him.

I had all these documents to prove, (a) that I had received the material from him; (b) there was no question that he had procured these documents in the course of working for certain unions, and for a group called N3. I asked the OPP to hold a hearing to determine whether or not this man should be allowed to continue to hold his licence.

I really wasn't interested in his losing his licence. That is not too important one way or the other, because he is really small potatoes. What I was really interested in was whether the Attorney General of this province or the Solicitor General or our very righteous slipping Provincial Secretary for Justice—not slippery, slipping—would really be willing to allow that hearing to be held.

I went down there and I said to the OPP officer in charge, Mr. Butler, "I have no question of your integrity. I am really curious to see whether you will be allowed to go ahead with this hearing."

He said, "Don't you worry. We are going to hold this hearing. You have given me the evidence and we are going to proceed. We are going to have the hearing, do not worry."

I said, "Frankly, I don't think that hearing will ever take place, because the Attorney General of this province will never allow that hearing to take place."

Well, Mr. Speaker, there has been no hearing.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Because the member didn't have any evidence probably.

Mr. Shulman: The evidence consisted of hundreds of pages of documents. There was a witness who saw those documents being passed. The witness gave an affidavit to the OPP that she saw these documents being passed; but there is no hearing being held.

Is the Provincial Secretary for Justice saying that there was no proof? Is that what he is saying tonight?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I don't know anything about it. The member's idea of evidence and that of the police are always different.

Mr. Shulman: Right. What is the name of that man who washed his hands, who wanted to know nothing about it? I think it was Pilate Kerr. That was it, Pilate Kerr. The Provincial Secretary for Justice knows nothing about it. His confrères know about it and we—and I, George—know why there is no hearing, why there can be no hearing, because the story of that night in the Legislature can't really be told in full.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Don't you "George" me!

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, let me tell you something else about that night, something that I didn't know until last Sunday. Something very fascinating happened that night. I will tell you something, Mr. Speaker; the government knew in advance I was going to give that speech. They knew what was in it. Why didn't they forestall it? You will recall that when I began my—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Really, this is getting more amazing every minute.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Why would we know?

Mr. Shulman: Why would the government know? Well, that is interesting.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister asked the question. The member for High Park will now answer it.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister of Agriculture and Food has asked me the question why would they know? That is interesting. We will come to why they knew.

You will recall that when I began my speech in the Legislature that fateful night the Conservative front bench was surprisingly full. Here I am doing very well. I have got five on the front bench. It was different that night. The reason they were there was they all knew what was coming and they had come in to administer the coup.

You don't have to take my word for it, because I have a statement here from a man by the name of Charlie McIlveen. Most of the hon. members probably don't know who Charlie McIlveen is: I must admit I didn't know who he was until just a few days ago. I was very surprised to learn he is one of the members of this Legislature. In fact, I am told he is the Conservative member for Oshawa.

Mr. W. Hodgson: The member for High Park is not here often enough to get acquainted. He is just here for the question period.

Mr. Shulman: Well, he is not here. I am sorry he is not here and I am sorry most of you don't know who he is. Perhaps, as the years roll by and his face becomes more familiar, we will learn who he is.

Let me read this statement from Charlie McIlveen, who is apparently the member for Oshawa. I quote from Charlie McIlveen.

Mr. Breithaupt: As reported.

Mr. Foulds: Dr. Charles.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, no; by Dr. Charlie McIlveen!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Who gives the race reports.

Mr. Shulman: Not as reported. This is by Charlie McIlveen, written by Charlie McIlveen, not reported as having been said by Charlie McIlveen. Charlie McIlveen said—I thank the member for Kitchener:

When he opened his speech I thought something was up, because all members of the Justice policy field were in attendance. There were the hon. George Kerr, the Provincial Secretary for Justice; the hon. Dalton Bales, the Attorney General; the hon. John Yaremko, the Solicitor General; the hon. Syl Apps, Minister of Correctional Services. This alone is unusual.

Mr. Foulds: With friends like that in the rump you don't need enemies.

Mr. Shulman: To continue:

This alone is unusual. But with 10 other cabinet ministers also in attendance, it indicated they thought Morfy had an unusual speech prepared.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He always does.

Mr. Shulman: Well, thank you, Charlie McIlveen. He has finally made something that can be reported in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Charlie who?

Mr. Shulman: The Provincial Secretary for Justice asked what his name is. Charlie McIlveen, he is one of his party's backbenchers.

Mr. Foulds: His black backbenchers.

Mr. Shulman: He will be very black after today. One of the minister's black backbenchers, yes. He is the member for Oshawa. He sits over there somewhere, I think.

Mr. Foulds: In the rump.

Mr. Shulman: In the rump.

Mr. W. Hodgson: The member for High Park never knows. He is not in here often enough.

Mr. MacDonald: The Provincial Secretary for Justice doesn't even know him. He is checking on the name.

Mr. Shulman: The Provincial Secretary for Justice is searching to see if there really is a Charlie McIlveen. I assure the minister that there is a Charlie McIlveen.

Mr. Foulds: He is larger than life. They call him doctor. It is not a matter of policy, though.

An hon. member: You can just see the close links between the cabinet and the backbenchers.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Oh, McIlveen!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: I tell you the minister isn't really informing those fellows about what is going on in the backbenches.

Mr. Shulman: I think perhaps I should inform the Provincial Secretary for Justice of some of the other backbenchers who apparently belong to the party. I know the rump is a long way over here, but there are a few of them over here who are worthy of note.

Mr. Foulds: Take a few minutes and introduce them to the Provincial Secretary for Justice. That is the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck) sitting at the end of the front row. The member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Wardle) is in the back row.

Mr. L. Maeck (Parry Sound): The member for Port Arthur will get his chance to speak later.

Mr. Shulman: I confess I don't put great store in what Charlie McIlveen might say, but I think it's worthy of note that if it was even obvious to the Conservative backbenchers that the cabinet knew what was coming, it probably was true. In addition to this, of course, all we have to do is read the statement of the Attorney General in which he admitted—

Mr. W. Hodgson: The member's own leader says he is unpredictable.

Mr. Shulman: Oh, I would never deny that; never deny that. That's why the member comes to hear my speeches. If they were predictable he wouldn't be here.

Mr. Foulds: Part of his charm.

Mr. Shulman: The hon.—I'm sorry, I missed that?

Mr. Maeck: I said the reason we're here is because the member would call for a quorum if we were not.

Mr. Shulman: I promise tonight I won't call for a quorum and the member can leave safely. I give him my word.

Mr. Foulds: However, I will!

Mr. Cassidy: The hon. member should talk about the depressing predictability of the people on that side.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I can recall the Attorney General mentioning in his little statement that a couple of detectives had come to see him two weeks before, carrying a statement from this private detective who'd given me the information; denying that he had given it to me and denying that the Attorney General was at the party. That was interesting.

But even more interesting, something I discovered just last Sunday, something that I didn't know at all was that three weeks before I gave the speech, one Tom Haslett from the Toronto Star, who's sitting in the press gallery right now, had been to the Attorney General and said: "Mr. Bales, is it true you were at this party?" And the Attorney General denied it. He denied it because he wasn't there. But do you remember the tremendous surprise, the shock on his face when he jumped to his feet when I suggested he was at this party—shocking! How could anyone suggest he was at that party. What party? Where? What's the address? Where's it near?

Well, one thing I must give credit to the Attorney General—he is a magnificent actor. A lousy Attorney General, but a magnificent actor!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The member is not so bad himself.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): A Marlon Brando!

Mr. Roy: Is the member suggesting that the Attorney General shouldn't talk in this House?

Mr. Shulman: I think perhaps he should have behaved as a gentleman would. When he knew this was coming—and he knew—he should have sent a note across the House saying, "I was not there."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: However, perhaps the hon. member for Ottawa Centre is right. Perhaps it is too much to expect a member of the cabinet to act as a gentleman. And if so, I apologize; I take back the remarks. The hon. member for Ottawa Centre certainly should know.

An hon. member: The minister should do his research properly!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Gee whiz!

Mr. MacDonald: They are getting excited again in the front.

An hon. member: Better get the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta) in here.

Mr. Shulman: Well, Mr. Speaker, fortunately or unfortunately, as the case may be—depending on who is involved—there's going to be a royal commission. And perhaps, just perhaps, we'll get some of the people who are involved in this delightful little affair on the stand. Maybe we'll be lucky enough even to get the Attorney General on the stand. And maybe we'll—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: And the member.

Mr. Shulman: And me; and I would love to go on the stand before or after that gentleman.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Under oath?

Mr. Shulman: Under oath—both of us.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Under oath, subject to cross-examination?

Mr. Shulman: Both of us! And I would like to have the Provincial Secretary for Justice doing the cross-examination; but perhaps that would be too easy.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member would like to have everybody there and run the show.

Mr. Roy: Who is the government going to get for counsel?

Mr. Shulman: They'd like to have Charlie Dubin; but he's not available any more.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is basically all I really wanted to say about organized crime with one other exception. I'm sorry the Minister for Labour (Mr. Guindon) appears to have left the House.

Mr. Roy: He'll be back at 10:30.

Mr. Shulman: Back at 10:30? Okay.

There is one other matter which is disturbing to me. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, I gave a lengthy speech in this House about one crooked union. And let me say again, because I know very well some union leaders are worried that this royal commission will turn into a witch hunt, I don't believe it will.

I think everyone is well aware across the province that most unions, like most corporations, are honest. There are crooked corporations, there are crooked contractors and there are crooked unions.

Now one of them is the boilermakers; and I gave a lengthy speech here last year about how the money had been stolen from their treasury over a period of years.

I asked the Minister of Labour to take some action. And subsequent to the speech he invited me to his office where I gave the speech again to him and his deputy. And I'm sorry to say nothing has been done and the situation has gone from bad to worse. And now the international union has stepped in and put this local under temporary trusteeship. The problem is that the international is just as crooked as the local in this particular union. Surely it is time that the Ministry of Labour stepped in with this particular union, had auditors go in and see what's been happening to the money—because it's been disappearing continuously—and order a new election supervised by the Ministry of Labour; because that's the only way we are going to have an honest election in that union.

As far as the construction unions go, I think that is now well under control. The terms of reference will allow the royal commission to look into that. I don't wish to say anything further on that subject.

Mr. Speaker, that pretty well completes my remarks. I said I would be as brief as I could tonight; I have been. I thank you for your indulgence. I have tried to be as non-provocative as the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell). I hope I haven't said anything to irritate the real St. George—pardon me the ex-St. George, I thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): In the fall session of 1971, I placed on the order paper a resolution which stated the following:

That in the opinion of this House, it would be of value to have statements by the ministry to the Legislature reviewing problems encountered by the government since the last sitting of the House and the executive action the government has taken or is considering to meet those problems; that a precedent be established for the delivery of such statements on the sitting day following the delivery of the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session, under the order of business statements by the ministry; and further, that such statements not exceed two hours in total.

Mr. Speaker, this was done to accomplish certain things. Not the least was the first real opportunity for the executive to relate to this House the reasoning for certain highlights of policy decisions undertaken by the government between the last day of the previous legislative sitting of the old session and the beginning of the new session. This would be a period of approximately two hours of time and could be undertaken on the day following the reading of the Throne Speech which, I would suggest, is not too busy a day in the business of this House. I would suggest it would be a series of 30-minute statements by the provincial secretaries; it would provide a good measure of knowledge to the members on recent events and actions—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That's not fair! The member wants them to work.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson:—which could be reflected in the speeches made in the Throne Speech debate. Such an undertaking would be a measure of accountability to the people and might even be considered by some as being similar to a reading of minutes of deliberations conducted while this House was in recess. One can reflect on a basic need for such a measure when we consider there were so many days when this House was in recess since the previous session of this Parliament.

There is also another reason to have this reporting as part of the sitting on the second day. It would not only make a full business period but in practice would really make a day for a question period and introduction of items for creation of our order paper, to provide for measures to be placed for deliberation by the House. This proposal would add to our deliberations in a meaningful way.

Now that I have devoted some time to what I consider a very necessary democratic measure needed here, may I take a few minutes of the House's time to suggest a possible improvement of Canadian affairs in another place. While in Europe this past fall, one of the features I found to be of particular interest to me was the opportunity afforded within the government structure of West Germany for different levels to have direct input into the senior governmental process.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention and to that of our members that recently Senator Croll in the Senate of Canada suggested some possible changes to the makeup of the Senate. It is quite possible that such reform of the Senate should reflect the need for direct provincial input into certain deliberations. This could be done by representation directly from this Legislature and the other provincial Houses of Canada.

For instance, only members who have served at least five years in this House might be eligible for selection in order to have a good base of experience here as background. Three such members could be the representation quota—two from the government party of the day and one from the opposition. The term in office would be for the lifetime of this House between elections. Nominations could be made by each party from among its membership and elections conducted by secret ballot among the members of this House.

Selection could be considered not demanding full-time attendance in the Senate, but presence there for selected debates and deliberations on such items that have a basic need for provincial reflections into national considerations, such as urban affairs, energy policy, transportation policy, health and welfare, culture and arts, and recreation and sports.

Today we see a proliferation of federal-provincial conferences, with both the provincial executive and civil service people involved with their federal counterparts. Seldom, if ever, is there any direct reflection by other members of this House until a government measure reflecting conclusions reaches this place.

Present reflection in the Senate does not necessarily reflect the current political reflections of any one province or its Legislature. While it is true senators are representative of each province—and I believe we have 24 from the Province of Ontario—one can only speculate on the long-term association and contact with provincial or local government reflections as each serves his or her term of years. It may well be a valid opinion that such contact or up-to-date knowledge becomes less delineated with the time of service.

Mr. Speaker, what I have described as a possibility should be seriously considered by this House and even by the Senate of Canada. The need for such a forum for provincial affairs to be reflected at our federal level is such that when full thought is brought to bear upon it, the conclusion could easily be such as to have only a small relationship to the minimum suggested possibility that I have proposed here today.

Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure as a member of this House, and also due to the support of this House for the Canadian area conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association which was held in August in Winnipeg, for me to have attended my first session of that body. It was the great regret of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) and the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers), as well as myself, that the Speaker of this House and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. R. F. Nixon) were unable to take part with us in this democratic process.

I commend to every one of you, as members of the Canadian Branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the verbatim reports that each have received. I hope that each member will read these reports and, at some time in the spring session, join together under your guidance, Mr. Speaker, in applying for the 15th meeting, of which Ontario is to be the host. This year our sister province, Quebec, will host the meeting and I know, sir, that you hope for a strong delegation from Ontario to attend that session.

Mr. Speaker, over this past 15 months, due to the exposure to representations, interviews and general study with my colleagues on a select committee on economic and cultural nationalism, may I reflect that certain great events of change have taken place within the world. Also, there will be great cause for this House to take into consideration certain things in the days ahead, most extensively and in depth, especially all the items mentioned in the Throne Speech. We realize that in the approximately 60 bills mentioned by the Premier (Mr. Davis) as a possible workload, we will have before us measures with far-reaching effects on employment, industry and cultural matters to our people.

I hope to see measures that will strengthen our competitive export ability, and our economic strength improved as a result. In this connection I would like to mention several guidelines of approach which I believe have some measure of worth for us to think about as we discuss and deliberate.

We all wish that there were more and more Canadian investments, but we would look very suspiciously at any political proposal that would bring about a net reduction in total investment from all sources. This would then suggest policies of encouragement for Canadians to invest more in Canada, and only as these sources increase to replace foreign investment resources in our development.

Trade is our lifeline and its steady expansion the best possible means toward preservation of both our political independence and our national standard of living. This suggested policy is aimed at developing new products, more research, selling efforts around the world, and encouragement to our Canadian entrepreneurs.

We must recognize that the greatest threat to our future as a strong and independent nation is any possible growth of internal dissension within Canada. What do I mean by internal dissension? It should be and would be any tendency of the provinces to compete against each other in a variety of ways: for each to favour its own products at the expense of the other nine, and even to penalize them in government tenders and in other ways.

This problem exists in Canada and must have a solution, as it is draining resources from other most necessary needs, such as our regional disparities and lack of capital for development.

We must expand our toleration of differences in language, religion and social customs, and accept our country's racial and cultural diversity as a national strength rather than a weakness. This will mean making every attempt to persuade those who would direct our capital and human resources in ways that would expand conflict, to direct it into other needs. Such other priorities must be stated and considered in evaluation of our country's objectives as a people.

We need confidence that the increasing population of the labour force and of education institutions, and the material resources of this land can ensure that we have the strength to preserve our political sovereignty and independence beyond any doubt.

We start from our present base of being the envy of almost all the nations of the world. Ours is a country which has attracted young men and women from many lands. Ours is a country which visitors from many nations are enthusiastic about. Contemplate our spaciousness, our scenic splendours, our national and human resources, our productive endeavour and our standard of living. Ours is a country which cares for its young and its old perhaps better than any other on earth, and where the opportunities for those in between to make a good life are without equal.

To know Canada today is to know that forces of creativity are ready to be unleashed, in industry, business and the arts, provided only that we do not allow individual and corporate initiative to be stifled. Few countries have less justification for any pessimism, and more reasons for hope and faith in their future.

I hope I have in some small way reminded the House that we dare not be complacent or naive, and I share with the members a faith in Canada's goals. Perhaps I could tell them that on any list of goals for Canadians I would place: To attain the highest level of prosperity consistent with Canada's political preservation as an independent country; to foster economic growth and within this goal a series of financial objectives such as promotion of exports, management of resources, improved transportation, tourism advancement, and communications and technologies generally.

Much of this is in the Throne Speech. Much of it is going to be before us in the coming months.

What is the ordinary citizen of this country to believe about the current public debate on food prices? The fact that he should realize he is obtaining a fair bargain in value? Or the other point being made, that no one level of producer or middleman is receiving unjustified prices for the goods, services and costs involved? Or the further point that the debate so far is distracting attention from the basic forces at work creating rising prices?

I would like to suggest to the House some of these basic forces at work across the world and here at home. Bad weather at home and abroad, and, we are told, stupid agricultural policies in some foreign countries have put high demand on North American supplies as well as surpluses. Farm products exports have become important instruments of our foreign policy. Our crop-producing land has been under strains of increased land taxation and urban growth that brings about losses of tillable acres, that had been in production, through subdivision for homes, airports, highways and so on. Remaining lands are placed under forced growth due to fertilization methods that have caused havoc to production. Higher incomes are resulting in demands for convenience foods; for example, packaged dinners, partially prepared products that create more cost, not for food but for the preparation service.

Then we have the other costing feature; that of agriculture moving over the last 40 years to become the most productive, most capital-intensive, most highly mechanized and all-round industrial of all the modern industries.

We can in no way think of cattle raising, wheat growing, vegetable production as having common interests at all times. It is an industry involving a high degree of research and scientific knowledge. And today we are given the warning that the consumer would in the end have to pay for our overall thrust of cleaning up the land, air and water. Now even food products are finding that cost is being collected.

We even know we have more increases built in by our environmental laws and regulations and their application. The revolutionary increase in productivity of farm people here in Canada, while it could be said to have come about through a high level of skill, talent and energy, has kept our consumers really well off. We have had great benefits due to agriculture changing over the last 40 years from our most traditional sector to our most progressive sector.

The change has allowed about a 10 per cent reduction of the percentage of incomes spent on food over the last 40 years.

I observed, in western Europe, averages of income spent for food in some countries ranging about 15 per cent higher. We are eating better here in Canada, for less of our incomes, than much of the world. A good part of the answer is ably demonstrated in the first part of the Speech from the Throne, in which reference is made to the record achieved by Ontario and its people, with the real booster being the present government's expansionary policy. More people working means more people paying the cost, and a lowering of the taxes applied to goods and services.

Rural Ontario is known for its independence and self-reliance. But over the last 40 years we have been more and more in partnership with urban people and government. Our export of people, with their talents and intelligence, to urban Ontario has eroded rural political strength.

We are reminded of this in the mention of electoral revision to be undertaken, as suggested in the Throne Speech. We remind our urban people and governments, because of the changes I have mentioned, that partnerships only work when all parties share. A chain is only as strong as its weakest link.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make some suggestions about price and wage controls. Few people in business today, I suppose, and few in this House, would remember the wage and price controls in the wartime period.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Far too many of them would remember it.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Well, I doubt many of the NDP would, because I don't think they were ever in much on management.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Put that in your pipe and smoke it!

Mr. Foulds: Whatever it was.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I would like to suggest to the members of this House that certain things should be remembered in connection with price and wage controls.

The purpose would be to stop the current inflation and to stabilize both wages and prices for the duration of the present problem, I would think, and not as a permanent measure.

Mr. Foulds: How about interest rates?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Wage and price controls were put into effect during the Second World War. The formula is unpopular, and it has often been argued that the disadvantages outweigh the advantages. The fact remains that some kind of restraint must be applied by the government, because voluntary measures in the public interest have not been undertaken by the labour unions or by management in the major industries.

Mr. Foulds: Or by bankers!

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Wage increases are by no means abolished under the control system; nor are prices necessarily held at a specific level without any change whatsoever. Government agencies are usually granted certain discretionary powers over both wages and prices.

The problem that confronts the nation today is as serious as any we've faced in recent history. The national economy, for instance, has reached an unprecedented size; and the relationship of business to the welfare of the community has grown more complex. Most of our economists, in government, business and universities, continue to view direct controls over prices and wages as the tools of last resort.

Perhaps the reason for treating direct controls as tools of last resort arises because we have a greater understanding of how our economy functions in response to indirect controls such as monetary and fiscal policies.

There does seem considerable agreement in existence that such indirect control, properly used, can provide the basis for orderly, economic growth in a non-inflationary way. Direct controls are used over situations involving very rapid inflation when, for whatever reason, indirect controls were not totally effective.

History tells us that wage and price controls have not been successfully administered and neither labour, business or industry has ever been satisfied with the device. The economic situation throughout Canada is growing more and more critical; and unpalatable as wage and price controls may be, some people favour them as a means of halting inflation.

The real culprit in the whole situation, of course, is the wage-price spiral. Rising wage costs force higher prices. Inflation has threatened the stability of the dollar and strikes have been avoided or settled only after substantial concessions have been made to union labour. If there is no restraint imposed by the government on either wages or prices, nobody can predict with certainty what the outcome will be of labour-management negotiations in this year.

All of this merely emphasizes how important it is for the other remedies to be given serious consideration. Substantial cuts in government spending would automatically lessen the demand for certain types of products and materials.

Mr. Foulds: How about some cuts in prices? They are artificially high now.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Interest rates would tend to stay low. The nation's economy might then experience a gradual period of readjustment without the necessity of wage and price controls. One of the unfortunate aspects of wage and price laws is the fact that they are not equitably enforced.

Theoretically the government agencies involved are disinterested and neutral but actually political pressure is exerted from labour unions and industries. Their views are not readily turned down by a politically-minded administration. If, in addition to wage and price controls, there were some way to put into effect self-control in the political operation of government so that all interests would be dealt with impartially, maybe some restraints in wage and price laws could really be effective in curbing inflation and stabilizing the economy.

Mr. Foulds: How about unearned income and coupon clippers?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that in the Throne Speech we had reflections on what this government was going to bring forth in some way to further the promotion of tourism. Two or three years ago in this House we had a resolution that I introduced which brought forth from the government $1 million for loans to tourism. I must tell you that it was referred to by the minister as seed money.

Members know that when seed lies in the ground too long it sometimes gets a bit sour, and the seed money for tourism is not adequate today. It wasn't adequate then. I must say to members that we have tourist lodges throughout Ontario which are in need of updating; accommodation improvements are needed generally in the whole industry.

I also would suggest that tourism does need a shot in the arm by this province in many other ways. One of them is improved transportation to the north from this city. I know the member for Downsview will agree with me that we do need a better system of routes in and out of the city.

Mr. Singer: Right!

Mr. Foulds: Right up to Fort Francis, Kenora, Atikokan and Geraldton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The member sounds like a CNR station caller of years ago when they used to use a fog horn.

Mr. Foulds: That is my colleague from Thunder Bay, he's a former CPR conductor.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Right. We do need better routes in to and out of here. I suggest again to this House my concern in regard to the development of North Pickering and the international airport.

If this government doesn't build a better service route in that general area and get on with the job immediately I'm not going to suggest to members the chaos that is going to result. Those roads are overloaded today. Weekend travel comes to a complete halt for miles in that section. Here again, we're going to talk about putting additional transportation of trucks, workers, everything into that a community.

I say to the government let's get on with the job; let's build the Scarborough expressway. Let's get the situation so that people can flow into and out of this city to other parts of this province. After all, whether or not this government realizes it, the rest of the province has to come here to deal; has to come here for investment; and does have to come here to this city to the seat of government.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): That's where the member is wrong.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Spadina here we come.

Mr. Singer: Well said.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I suggest that if we don't get on with these transportation routes by the time we get rapid transit, we won't need rapid transit because there won't be anybody here. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Look who is the Speaker!

Mr. Speaker: Let it restrain you.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the real McCoy would be in the Speaker's chair tonight, but—

Mr. Speaker: You're standing up.

Mr. Sargent: —through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I want to thank him for my long period of uninterrupted attendance this year and congratulate him on his occasional tolerance.

There are many commendable things I could say about the Speaker. I have known him for many years, including when he was the mayor of the fair town of Preston, and during his service there and on the mayors and Reeves committee. I know of the great job that he and his gracious wife do with the pages. I have had a lot of talks with the pages and they love Mr. and Mrs. Reuter very much for the interest that they have taken. Also, there is the warm friendship we've had with the Speaker outside the House.

Having said this, I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker himself is a bit hard of hearing, as it were. I think of a story about the—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Only when the member is speaking.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, well—I think of the story about the couple who had 11 children and the man explained that his wife was hard of hearing. Every night when they went to bed the husband would ask: "Do you want to go to sleep or what?" "What," his wife answered. Mr. Speaker, I'm glad you yourself came in, sir.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The member is getting bad.

Mr. Sargent: I had better start getting serious, having said these nice things about you—

Mr. Shulman: They will seize Hansard tomorrow, wait and see!

Mr. Sargent: I do think that I can say to you, on behalf of some of my fellow collegians, as the member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil) calls them, my fellow colleagues, there are many things that you need to pull your socks up about, with regard to things that affect our lives here. We are expensive people. Our time is valuable but you don't think we are.

I think each member of this Legislature should have a speaker's box on his desk. It's a unit I can provide for you for $10 each, but I think you should pay for it because anyone will sell it to you. In fact, you might consider putting in closed-circuit television in keeping pace with the modern technology. I think it's one thing you can look at very closely, because it is not too expensive.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Why doesn't the member donate it?

Mr. Shulman: We could all stay at home and listen to it.

Mr. Sargent: Yes. This is more intelligent than what the member for High Park said tonight, though. It wasn't his best night.

Mr. Shulman: Thanks.

Mr. Sargent: I think we could have a car pool here for members. Today, I saw a very touching thing. I was walking up here and I saw the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) arrive in his limousine. He was sitting there and he waited for the driver to come round and open the door for him. He stepped out and the driver handed him his briefcase. The minister thanked him and walked away. I thought, that's performance! That's just beautiful. It's great to see all this—

Mr. Shulman: The member was impressed.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Did he tell him, "Now remember, your name is Yaremko. You are the Solicitor General"?

Mr. Sargent: But I think it's loading it on a bit too much when all industry provides courtesy cars, that the brass over there—the upper crust I call them—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The lower crust, I call them.

Mr. Sargent: Well, those fellows over there are the upper crust. I guess one would call them that—the upper crust is usually just a bunch of crumbs held together by dough.

An hon. member: Right on, right on!

Mr. Sargent: That's the case, I'll tell you. I think what you might do, Mr. Speaker, is send the House leader (Mr. Winkler) away on a course on how to run the House—he could use that.

An hon. member: A housekeeping course!

Mr. Sargent: His skates are pretty dull sometimes.

I go to Mexico the odd time and I watch the bullfights down there; and I sometimes find myself hoping that the bull is going to win. Well, we have the Sergeant-at-Arms sitting down there with a sword—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He came back in for the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Sargent: But I don't think that's fair play. We should post another weapon here that we could use to defend ourselves. I've seen him play golf, and I don't know whether we could match the major or not, but I think we should be given a weapon to fight back with.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: And we would have a sauna bath here. I see some of my friends come in here in the mornings, and I think they would agree with me that it's needed.

An hon. member: Couples night, every Friday!

Mr. Sargent: And I think what the Speaker might do is take off that crazy hat he wears. It's a bit much.

An hon. member: Right. I agree with that.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the time has come to "unquo" the status.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): What was that?

Mr. Sargent: Nice to have the minister back.

An hon. member: "Unquo' the status." I like that.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the Premier (Mr. Davis) showed up in Malton one day, out-bound on a trouble-shooting mission: The pilot said to him, "Where to, sir?" The Premier replied, "Anywhere in Ontario. We are in trouble all over."

Hon. Mr. Snow: The member told us that one last year.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: No. That's a new one.

Mr. Sargent: No, I don't think I did.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): It still applies.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): And they were in trouble all over then.

Hon. Mr. Snow: In fact I heard him say that on Saturday.

Mr. Sargent: Is that right? Well, we have the news that the government is going to bring down a budget. Anything can happen. We are going to increase the taxes, the Premier is telling the people. He's getting them all prepared for the fact that we are going to have to have more money to run this show.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): No, no one wants to increase taxes!

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am against that.

Mr. Sargent: Well, for goodness sake, Mr. Speaker, a news story has come out that the Quebec budget has no increase in taxes for the fourth straight time. They are running an operation down there that's a business operation.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It sure is an operation!

Mr. Sargent: It sure isn't the giveaway programme that is going on here. Many of us here have been watching this now for about 10 years, this period of unprecedented waste, this irresponsible plundering of the treasury. At this rate, the government will have hardly any money available to finance any new projects. The Premier says we now have a fiscal squeeze—a fiscal nightmare, he calls it—wherein this year we face a deficit of almost $1 billion on top of a $6.1 billion debenture debt, I believe. And he calls for a strong fiscal discipline! Well he might!

Two western provinces, Alberta and British Columbia, are debt-free, yet we, the most dynamic province in the whole of Confederation, are paying up to $1.5 million per day in debt charges. Per day! And not principal, debt charges! On top of this we have a $6.1 billion debenture debt.

Now gentlemen, no other administration in the free world—of the 50 states to the south of us; of the nine other provinces—has such a precarious financial mess.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Oh, that's silly.

An hon. member: That's true though!

Mr. Good: That's what we are trying to tell the government; it's true.

Mr. Singer: Where is it worse?

Mr. Sargent: Where is it worse?

An hon. member: Yes, that's right.

Mr. Sargent: And what is the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development doing to help it?

An hon. member: He's been down cutting sugar cane.

Mr. Shulman: He doesn't fly any more, he is doing that to help.

Mr. Good: He's been grounded at least.

Mr. Sargent: Have you read this beautiful document here; this Auditor's statement for 1971-72? Someone should take this and make a best-seller or a television serial show out of it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Give it to the member for High Park.

Mr. Sargent: It's fantastic.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He'll sell them in the hall.

Mr. Reid: It'd be nice if the cabinet ministers would read it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Here on page 31 the Premier of this province increased the amount of money to be spent in his office by $684,000. In one year he spends $1.2 million. I know he's got a lot of important things to do; he's got a lot of admirable qualities about him, a lot of things going for him. I understand that his "Who's Who" is about seven inches long.

An hon. member: His what?

Mr. Sargent: Can you imagine—

Mr. Reid: Never heard a comment.

An hon. member: How about going over that one more time?

Mr. Sargent: The member missed that one entirely.

An hon. member: Everybody's afraid they'll laugh at him.

Mr. Sargent: Can you imagine what kind of gall a man has to have; what kind of importance he must put upon himself, to spend over $4,000 per day himself. He spent more money in his office than all of the other Premiers in Canada put together. In fact he spends more than the Prime Minister of Canada.

An hon. member: Oh come now!

Mr. Sargent: All right! Check it out and see.

Interjections by hon. members:

Mr. Singer: The members opposite can't tell us because they don't know.

Mr. Sargent: The gall of this man to take taxpayers' money and increase his budget by $680,000 in one year in order to say: "I am the greatest." And he even has his patronage man there; his patronage man working out of that office. And the taxpayers of Ontario pay for that—for the Conservative Party.

Hon. Mr. Snow: When did we have them?

Mr. Sargent: We will have it sometime; not too long from now.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Promises, promises, promises.

Mr. Sargent: There is a word for the Minister of Government Services; I don't know, but, my mother always used to tell me that if you can't say something good about someone, not to say anything.

Mr. L. Maeck (Parry Sound): If you can't lick them, join them!

Mr. Sargent: So I have to be silent right now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: On page 42 of this beautiful document—

Mr. Maeck: Is that in the blue book or the pink one?

Mr. Sargent: The blue one. It is the government's downfall.

This will all be coming up on the accounts. It's a shocking revelation that we have to—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I think the member has lost his place.

Mr. Sargent: It shows the need for a gigantic efficiency survey. One time a fellow went into the Province of Manitoba and I think his fee was about $150,000—and the first year he saved them $5 million when he set up this survey. But I say that will never happen here because there are all these committees on government productivity to streamline and jazz up the place. It gives the government a chance to spend more money on its friends on these commissions.

But I want to ask the government who is responsible for the mess in Treasury? There are 130 pages of misappropriation of funds costing taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

The Provincial Secretary for Resources Development should stay and face this; it won't hurt him.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It was costing taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

Pat and Mike were coming across the ocean in a boat. Pat says, "Look at all that water," and Mike says "That's only the top of it."

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Let's not have any ethnic jokes.

Mr. Sargent: We have the tip of the iceberg, and what an iceberg this is. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there should be a royal commission called by the people power of this province to hunt out the evidence of malfeasance in this whole corrupt mess. In the area of business. We know what would happen.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: There would be mass firings and there would be people cashiered for theft.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: No, not cashiered.

Mr. Sargent: I say the word cashiered fits very well there because a lot of people have got their hands in the till.

I don't think, Mr. Speaker, that the House wants to hear the sad message in this thing, because all the opposition, my leader and all our people and the NDP will be tearing the government apart, tearing the hell out of it, in the accounts committee on this stuff. It sure as hell is time that the people had something to say.

We saw the Premier in the House the other day showing his amazing knowledge of mathematics in trying to unscramble the mess of Canada Square and his friend, Mr. Gerhard Willie Moog, who is now between Haiti and Miami in his yacht—his "yacht"! I tried to call him this morning on the over-seas telephone but he was not answering his ship-to-shore phone. I wanted to ask him if it was true that he helped build the Premier's cottage or did he do some repairs on it? I wanted to ask him if he got any money from the Tory party.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Or gave any?

Mr. Sargent: If he gave any money to the Tory party; I am sorry.

Mr. Shulman: Did he repair the Premier's cottage?

Mr. Drea: Did anyone suggest that he repaired the Premier's cottage?

Mr. Sargent: I don't know. I would like to find that out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I'd like to know his profit potential on the $180 million his company stands to gain in the next 30 years. I would like to ask him his money sources, in fact. Did he need any money for this deal; because of the sweetheart deal he has with the Tories here now? What a beautiful way to do business.

It was amazing to see how the Premier squirmed when he was asked by my leader point blank, "Did Mr. Moog contribute to the Tory election pot—yes or no?" The Premier squirmed and took the fifth amendment. He said, "On the grounds that it might tend to incriminate me, I refuse to answer that question." He said, "I will not discuss it."

Mr. Foulds: The hon. member's paraphrasing, of course.

Mr. Sargent: Of course, I'll put this in quotes.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): The member has taken it out of context.

Mr. Sargent: What is the member talking about—out of context? The mess the government has got this province in—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: How dare the member say that? This is a stinking mess the government has in financing here. Every day we turn to the papers government people are in trouble with corruption. What does the government expect us to believe? Do its members think we sit and laugh about this all the time?

Mr. Speaker, I say again that if we were operating under US law the Premier of this province would be impeached for consorting in things like Fidinam. There is no doubt about it. The governor of Illinois is in jail for 10 years; Senator Brewster went to jail this week for two years for bribery, nothing as bad as the Fidinam deal.

There are rumoured sources of funds for the Swiss Granada deal on the Hydro contracts; I don't know whether or not that's laundered money. It's pretty close to a deal like Fidinam—it was Swiss money. The money that is skimmed off in Vegas goes to New York and goes to Switzerland and comes back to Toronto. It's clean then; it's laundered.

There was a story in the paper—I couldn't get the source—a few months ago that it went through a lawyer on St. Clair Ave. W. He was the man who was the starting point. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, organized crime cannot exist without government co-operation. Well, it seems it is getting plenty of that.

Some time ago it was announced that a joint force of police of Toronto, intelligence of the OPP and RCMP had a report on the Mafia holdings in Toronto—an ongoing report on Mafia holdings here. A few days ago I phoned Mr. Bird, the deputy commissioner of the OPP, and I asked him if there was such a report; and if so could he make it available to me. He said he would call me back. He called me back this afternoon and he said there was no such report. He said he knew of no Mafia anywhere in Ontario and he made a joke about it.

I called him back this evening and I said to the deputy commissioner that it was hard to believe that he, the No. 2 man in law enforcement in the Province of Ontario, would make such a statement to me. I noted what he said and I will repeat it. I read him this statement by Mr. Nadon, who is the deputy commissioner for Canada of the RCMP, and who said:

Information on about 1,000 major figures in organized crime in Canada was centralized in Ottawa at the central bureau of the Criminal Intelligence Service of Canada, the co-operative intelligence service of about 60 Canadian police departments that have criminal intelligence units operated by the RCMP.

He said in an interview that "although files were maintained on 1,000 figures, there might be about 10,000 involved in organized crime across the country." He estimated that about 25 per cent of the major figures were operating in Quebec. He said that about 25 to 30 per cent of these major criminals were based in Ontario, mostly in the Toronto region.

It makes one wonder, Mr. Speaker, what kind of a police force we have. No wonder these peddlers of the laundered money can operate with such impunity. I think it is time to realize that, if we are going to vote money to the OPP for intelligence and they don't have any intelligence in their division, that is in liaison with the RCMP findings, then there is something sadly wrong in the OPP.

In regard to the Fidinam case, it keeps cropping up more every day. It is still foremost in the minds of the people, and we will continue to press for a full judicial hearing.

An interesting situation develops with Mr. A. G. MacDonald, the Workmen's Compensation Board's executive manager. This man has a $30,000-a-year salary. He is the man who engineered the Fidinam programme, the man they dealt with through the WCB. He has a $75,000 yacht, he has two lovely homes, he winters in Switzerland, yet he is the man who, on a $30,000 salary, engineered the Fidinam deal.

Mr. Shulman: Is the member implying that he was paid off?

Mr. Sargent: Pardon?

Mr. Shulman: Is the member suggesting that he was paid off?

Mr. Sargent: What does the member think? I can believe anything about this gang over here.

Bill Callaghan, now Deputy Attorney General, was formerly with the law firm that handled some of the deals between Fidinam and the WCB.

We have an ongoing development here. We have this new Fidinam setup being built in Toronto's highest rent area. It's impractical for Workmen's Compensation Board administration. There's no parking for hundreds of injured workmen who must report to the offices each year.

As for this deal that went through with Workmen's Compensation Board, part of the deal was that Fidinam would be able to buy its present building for $3.5 million. The building cost $5.5 million to build in 1954. The market price of that building is $10 million. They had the deal to buy it for $3.5 million and would have owned it today if a disgruntled employee of Fidinam hadn't delivered to the Globe and Mail this Telex upsetting the whole deal.

The facts are that the government got caught with its pants down, and this thing won't go away. We don't know where the government raised the other $4.9 million in its election pot. We think a lot of it was done the same way as this. So we'll continue to bring that before the House.

Mr. Good: We know how the government got $50,000.

Mr. Sargent: We know how it got $50,000. We know that for sure.

We are trying now to get the log-books on the aircraft. We are working through the DOT in Ottawa to see if it'll provide the log-books of the government's aircraft. We're hopeful that can maybe develop into something. But it's a shocking thing.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Will they supply the log-books for the member's aircraft?

Mr. Sargent: I can tell the minister anybody can see my log-books.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): How about an exchange? We'll make a deal with the government.

Mr. Sargent: The member is a pilot.

Mr. Singer: We'll trade the government log-books.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Where's the member's counsel?

Mr. Roy: Right here! Come on over. We'll show the minister a log-book.

Mr. Sargent: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, I think that I should've taken a shot at the Speaker and the member for Scarborough Centre.

The member for Scarborough Centre told the Speaker the other day he had a change of heart and that he was going to be a good boy from now on. The other night I heard that he phoned the Premier at 3:30 a.m.—this could happen. He said, "Mr. Premier, I'm sorry to wake you up but the chairman of one of your commissions just died and I would like very much to know if I can take his place."

The Premier thought that over for a moment. Replying very dryly, he said, "Well, I guess it's all right with me, if it's all right with the undertaker."

They say you should always leave 'em laughing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sargent moves adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of standing order No. 28, I deem a motion to adjourn to have been made.

The hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) may now introduce the subject-matter of his notice to me that he is dissatisfied with the answer to the question pertaining to the French-language school situation.

The hon. member for Ottawa East may now speak for a maximum of five minutes.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You will recall that last week I addressed a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) in relation to a commitment for a French-language school in Cornwall and requested that a commitment be made by the fall of 1973. The Premier (Mr. Davis) had earlier not given his commitment, saying it was premature, and the Minister of Labour had refused to give a commitment.

Since the question was asked, Mr. Speaker, Prof. Symons has been appointed to mediate this situation. We on this side of the House approve the appointment of Prof. Symons. We think he has the trust of both sides, but what a ridiculous situation the government has placed Prof. Symons in in this Cornwall affair.

Although I address my remarks to the Minister of Labour, they should more properly be addressed to the Premier of the province and to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells). You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in the fall of 1971, in connection with the Sturgeon Falls situation, at the time of an election there was a crisis situation, so much so that the government had to stop Symons along the highway to Ottawa and tell him to settle this problem.

Well, he did. He brought in 76 recommendations; recommendations which would avoid situations like Sturgeon Falls, Cornwall, Elliot Lake and others in the future. The government has had this report for more than a year. This report has been on the minister's desk since Feb. 17, 1972.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, when this report was presented to the House, that the Minister of Education—

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): What's that got to do with the question to which the member didn't get a reply?

Mr. Roy: That's the Symons report, I say to the member for Scarborough Centre.

At the time the Minister of Education presented this report, Mr. Speaker, he said that 1972 would be a year of decision.

Some decision! We have seen nothing but inaction in this situation. And this inaction borders on irresponsibility, because they have allowed deterioration in situations like Cornwall, Elliot Lake, and God knows where else in the province.

Symons recognized this, and I'd like to quote what he said about the situation then. He said:

By Sept. 1, the feelings on both sides of the question became so escalated that the real danger of violent confrontation existed.

Indeed, a students' strike called at the school opening in September almost erupted into violence. Similar tensions were also developing in a number of Ontario communities. It is no exaggeration to say that a crisis or near-crisis existed in French-English relations in substantial areas of the province. This had, in turn, serious implications on the national scene.

Now, the government has not implemented the recommendations of Symons. And they are having to send him back to Cornwall to do something that should not exist had they implemented the recommendations to start with.

And what have they done in a peaceful community like Cornwall, where for a century both linguistic groups existed in peace and understood each other?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): They still do.

Mr. Roy: They still do?

They have tension—people calling each other bigots, separatists. The president of the school board roughed up the president of the student union in Cornwall. Does the minister call that peace?

Why did the government procrastinate on this situation? What took so long. Why do they have to play politics with national unity and French-English relations?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): That is the kettle calling the pot black!

Mr. Roy: I ask my colleagues on all sides of the House; in a community that was 53 per cent English speaking how long would they tolerate not having their own schools? And this government got $19 million from the federal government for bilingual education!

This government's inaction is clear evidence of the incompetence and irresponsibility of its leadership. Thank God that the citizens of this province are finally starting to realize this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister may now take five minutes to reply if he wishes.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker: first of all I should like to tell my hon. friend from Ottawa East that it is not my intention to discuss the issues in this dispute for the simple reason that we now have a mediator, and I would presume it would be very improper on the part of a responsible local member to discuss the issues at this present time.

I should like, however, to state my amazement that since this matter concerns the French-speaking element of this province, my hon. friend from Ottawa East did not see fit to engage in the debate in the French language. And I shall turn into it right now.

Mr. Roy: I have spoken more French in this House than the minister!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: M. le Président, je m'étonne que mon bon ami et collègue d'Ottawa Est ait raté une occasion rarissime d'utiliser le français dans un débat qui touche d'abord et surtout les francophones de l'Ontario.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Il a fait allusion tantôt à la commission Symons et à certaines recommandations, mais il a oublié de signaler cependant que l'une de ces recommandations a déjà été mise en vigueur, soit la nomination d'un sous-ministre-adjoint en la personne de M. Carrière.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Seulement une!

Mr. Roy: La seule. C'est la seule qui été faite.

Mr. Cassidy: C'est la seule chose qui a été faite.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Et puisque mes bons amis de l'opposition ne veulent pas reconnaître, même que dans ses défauts, dans sa faiblesse, la loi 141, le Bill 141, a donné quelque chose à l'Ontario, que l'Ontario n'avait jamais eu auparavant, et je veux dire les écoles secondaires françaises dans la province d'Ontario.

An hon. member: Sounds terrific!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Bien sûr, M. le président, je suis le premier à reconnaître que la loi n'était peut-être pas parfaite, mais il faut dire qu'elle a été le résultat du comité Bériault qui a traversé la province plusieurs fois afin de rencontrer les groupes francophones de cette province et d'essayer d'obtenir ce qu'il voulait. Comme on se souvient, à cette époque-là, les institutions privées ne pouvant plus tenir le coup, il a fallu que le gouvernement, et c'est un gouvernement conservateur encore une fois, qui a donné à cette province des écoles françaises en Ontario.

M. le Président, pour répondre à mon ami d'Ottawa Centre, je dois dire que seulement dans deux endroits dans cette province, nous avons eu des affrontements, des chocs, des heurts, comme dans le cas de Sturgeon Falls et Cornwall, mais parlons donc de Toronto, parlons donc de Windsor — parlons donc d'Ottawa; la lettre et la loi, le bill 141 a fonctionné parfaitement.

Alors mes chers amis, à Cornwall c'est un problème très complexe et, comme je l'ai dit, je n'ai pas l'intention ici d'intervenir et d'influencer en quelque sorte—

An hon. member: Maybe I should—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Guindon: —le médiateur qui a été nommé par le gouvernement.

Je dois dire, M. le Président, que si mes collègues de l'opposition veulent essayer de toucher à la réputation du député de Stormont en ce qui a trait à la préservation et l'épanouissement de la langue et de la culture française en Ontario, ils perdent leur temps. Et même avant que mes collègues aient l'honneur se s'asseoir ici dans cette Législature, bien avant, j'ai eu l'avantage et le privilège de parler dans cette Chambre en français, en 1957, en 1963 à titre de député de Stormont, après avoir conquis un château fort libéral, de parler en français pour la première fois dans cette chambre, j'ai eu l'honneur en plus en 1967 d'être le parrain du bill de l'Université d'Ottawa, une université bilingue qui se trouve dans le comté d'Ottawa Est de mon ami. J'ai en plus des fils qui ont fréquenté les écoles françaises depuis toujours, j'ai même un fils qui fréquente l'école française St-Laurent, alors je peux vous dire que je suis très au courant de la situation et j'espère que la solution que le gouvernement a prise en envoyant un médiateur compétent—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): That'll hold them.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: —un médiateur reconnu à travers la province—solutionnera ce problème et que notre population comme autrefois sera de plus en plus unie dans l'avenir.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Très bien! Couldn't have said it better myself.

Mr. Speaker: I now deem the motion to adjourn to have been carried. This House stands adjourned until 2 of the clock Thursday afternoon next.

The House adjourned at 10:40 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to have with us today as visitors in the east gallery students from Vincent Massey Public School of Oshawa and, in the west gallery, students from Allan A. Martin Senior Public School of Mississauga and Nelson High School of Burlington. A little later we will be joined in the east gallery by students from E. J. Sand Public School of Thornhill.

Statements by the ministry.

HERITAGE ONTARIO

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to table at this time the report of the Heritage Ontario congress. This report, entitled "Heritage Ontario," represents the combined efforts of a great number of individuals both within and outside government, including the 1,500 participants in the congress workshops who were the real authors of this particular document.

I would like to pay special tribute on behalf of the province to the 26 members of the Heritage Ontario Advisory Committee, most of whom are in attendance in the House this afternoon. I am sure that the hon. members join me in thanking these individuals for their outstanding contribution to the success of Heritage Ontario. I am very pleased on behalf of all of us to welcome them to this assembly this afternoon, and to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your kindness in making the arrangements for their seating.

It is impossible, of course, to appreciate the significance of the Heritage Ontario congress without an understanding of the historical context in which it took place. Ontario is particularly proud of the leadership role which it has played in encouraging Canadians to recognize the cultural pluralism of our society. Indeed, during the Confederation of Tomorrow conference held in Toronto four years ago, Ontario made clear its aims for the future, with the statement: "Canada should be a bilingual country while maintaining its multicultural character."

We are pleased, as a result, that the federal government is now taking seriously the implications of a pluralistic approach to cultural heritage and is in the process of announcing the framework of what it calls a Canadian government policy on multiculturalism. Such a development represents significant progress from the indifference with which the federal government first greeted Ontario's efforts to move in this direction, and we in Ontario look forward to a greater complementarity of effort now that Ottawa has broadened its vision to better reflect the cultural realities of life in Canada.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Complementary what?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Complementarity.

Mr. Lewis: Complementarity?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Complementarity.

Mr. Lewis: There is nothing like complementarity in cultural diversity.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That's right. It produces unity.

Mr. Lewis: It could lead to homogeneity.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It's nice to welcome the member back to the House.

Mr. Lewis: I have been back a lot more often than the minister has been here—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh, I understand the member was off, going through the peninsula.

Mr. Lewis:—and I have some responsibilities, however I may discharge them.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: What does the minister ever do when he's here?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I make statements.

Mr. Lewis: Why not give us the political background to the document rather than this rubbish?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Here in Ontario, we recognized in planning the congress that Heritage Ontario could not be a conference of people who were involved in the same business, or who shared the same views on any given issue or idea. Rather, it had to be a congress in which no one group predominated in a gathering of many, in which no dogmatic focus of concern was identified beforehand, and in which no consensus of opinion was guaranteed when the three days were over.

In effect, what the Ontario government did, Mr. Speaker, was to bring together a truly representative cultural cross-section of the population for the exchange of ideas on a wide variety of issues, to create a "living environment" in which participants could mould the shape of the congress while the government kept a memory bank of the proceedings.

Mr. J. E. Foulds (Port Arthur): Kept a what?

Hon. Mr. Welch: So by almost any definition, the Heritage Ontario congress—

Mr. Foulds: Who wrote this speech? Did the minister write this?

Mr. Lewis: No, he didn't write this.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now, look, one thing the member has got to get quite clear, this congress was a lot more successful than what the member or his party attempted to do later, much more successful. So don't start talking about any partisan—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: That's true. That is a fair comment by almost any definition.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: By almost any definition.

Mr. Lewis: Such a phrase!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Welch: What does the member think I have been doing up there all these weeks?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: By almost any definition, the Heritage Ontario congress more than met the expectations of both planners and participants. While almost every section of our society found its voice, individual problems were recognized as shared and possible solutions were offered at that particular meeting. Individuals and groups transcended the uniqueness of their own perspective to come to grips with the shared nature of culture itself, and reasserted the individual's right—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Why has the Solicitor General lost his role as the spokesman for these matters?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Look, just as a matter of courtesy to those who worked so hard, would the member like to listen to this? They are here.

Mr. Lewis: In my opinion, it is an insult. It is libellous!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That's for them to decide, and I would consider—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would consider the member the last person who would qualify as a spokesman for them.

Mr. Lewis: That's fine. I don't pretend it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member must have done something more in the peninsula than just try to get a seat down there. What was he doing down there?

Mr. Lewis: I tried to rehabilitate the minister's political reputation and I failed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Great, great. We don't need any help down there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This exchange is entirely out of order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Right, right. Should I start from the beginning again, Mr. Speaker? Individuals and groups transcended the uniqueness of their own perspective to come to grips with the shared nature of culture itself and reasserted the individual's right to define his own experience in ways which are most meaningful to him.

Many developments following last June's congress, Mr. Speaker, have illustrated just how timely the discussions and the exchanges actually were. In reading the report, one cannot help but be impressed by the number of observations and comments which, since their writing, have subsequently been reflected in policy developments. Nor can we deny the breadth of the present focus on cultural pluralism in our province.

Steps have been taken by the Ministries of Education and Labour to implement the recommendations of an interministerial committee concerning prejudice and bias in Ontario textbooks. Amendments have been made to the Schools Administration Act to provide for Indian representation on school boards that administer institutions with a sizable percentage of Indian students. Amendments to the Human Rights Code substantially expanded the definition of discrimination related to housing and for the first time established grounds by which discrimination related to membership within self-governing professions is prohibited.

The government, as you will also recall, Mr. Speaker, has announced the establishment of an Ontario Welcome House to be administered through the Ministry of Community and Social Services, where a broad range of agencies and services designed to meet the needs of newcomers will be physically located under one roof. A bill to create a language of instruction commission for Ontario's education system will be put forward as a follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission on French-language Secondary Education. Increased assistance to the native peoples of the province has been pledged in recognition of the right of the Indian in this province, no less than that of any other resident, to develop culturally to his fullest potential.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): That's why the government gave the Indians five million bucks in five years.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Despite the needs which still remain, we in this province have achieved considerable progress in building into our programmes a sensitivity to the cultural pluralism of our people. We are anxious that this sensitivity and responsiveness become an ongoing element in the process of social and cultural development in this province.

Mr. Speaker, in tabling the final report of the Heritage Ontario Congress this afternoon, I hope that many people will gain from the recorded proceedings of this event a better understanding of what cultural identity is all about. I hope that others will find in this bilingual report on multiculturalism a visible example of the philosophy stated by the former Premier of this province, Hon. Mr. Robarts, in February, 1969, when he said:

I would like to make it clear that, while the government of Ontario has accepted bilingualism, we have not accepted biculturalism.

It is a fact of life that Canada is a multicultural mosaic, and this is nowhere more apparent than in our Province of Ontario. Of this we are very proud, and we think that the multicultural aspects of our country are really a part of the true Canadian nationality.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, as part of the tabling of this report may I inform the members of the intention of the government to establish an Ontario advisory council on multiculturalism. During the discussions at Heritage Ontario—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): All Tory jobs.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —it became obvious that all of us were interested in reaffirming the ongoing nature of a multicultural focus, the necessity of seeing the Heritage Ontario congress as only part of a broader thrust within this province and this nation toward a greater responsiveness to various cultural needs and aspirations. Repeatedly, it was pointed out that cultural development should not be institutionalized or packaged but meaningfully encouraged and enhanced. It was also made clear, as you will read in the report, that there was a need for a continuity of focus in discussing cultural pluralism, so that the public could identify a medium through which their own views on this subject could be made known to their government.

It is hoped that the new Ontario advisory council on multiculturalism will assist us in achieving these particular goals. Made up as it will be of approximately 30 members who will serve on a rotating basis, the advisory council will be asked to advise the government through the cabinet committee on social development concerning policies and programmes with direct implications for Ontario's cultural communities. The council will report annually to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development outlining its activities and views.

The first chairman of this council will be named very shortly. It is our intention to work very closely with the chairman in setting up the membership and the administrative details of the council for its first year of operation. We will be looking to the council to play a very major role in carrying on the contributions which the original Heritage Ontario congress provided. I am confident that the hon. members will share with me a sense of optimism at the positive thrust which lies behind the announcement this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

TOBACCO INSURANCE

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I will be guided by your advice. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Spence) a few days ago asked me a question concerning flue-cured tobacco insurance. The answer may take the form of a statement—it won't be long.

Mr. Singer: Give it as a statement!

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the hon. minister that if the answer is more than two or three minutes, it might well be given as a ministerial statement.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Thank you, sir. Since this is a bit of a departure from the normal way we have been handling crop insurance, we propose to administer the tobacco plan somewhat differently than the other plans that are available at present.

We will not be using commission agents, as such, to sell the contracts. With the co-operation of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board, we have established an average farm yield, insurance coverage, premium rate and coverage per acre for each farm with tobacco acreage allotments.

Since we also have a list of all growers, we will forward from the Toronto office an application form to each grower with the above information contained in it.

We will then ask all interested growers to return the application to our office together with the premium deposit of $100. As soon as acreage allotments are finalized, they will be invoiced for the difference. This procedure allows us to substantially reduce the cost of administration, which according to the new federal-provincial crop insurance agreement will be paid entirely by the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me for a list of those who would be the contact men working with the Crop Insurance Commission but located in the areas of tobacco growers. I will do that now. They are:

E. A. Adams Insurance, 207 Main St., Delhi (Norfolk); Robert J. Byers, RR 3, Allenford (Bruce); Frank Cowan, Box 279, Burford (Brant); Walt Cronk, Brock St., Vittoria (Norfolk); Herbert Frey, 515 Talbot St., Aylmer (Elgin); Bev Gray, RR 1, Port Hope (Durham); Malcolm Gray Insurance, 97 Frank St., Strathroy (Middlesex); John Hofstetter, RR 1, Plattsville (Oxford); Jack Hughes, Box 21, Simcoe (Norfolk); Gordon Lowes, RR 3, Chatham (Kent); Morley Nelson, RR 2, Baltimore (Northumberland); Rosenfeld Insurance, RR 3, Wheatley (Essex); and Don Way, RR 3, Tillsonburg (Oxford).

Mr. Speaker, I will give this list to the Hansard stenographer so that it will be available for spelling. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Singer: Not quite. Just the hon. member for Downsview, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Not quite yet!

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Not yet, he means. He tried hard enough.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Margaret, watch it!

SCHOOL BUDGETS

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), who I was going to ask whether we should get ready for a shooting war with the Province of Alberta as hinted by the hon. member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), I guess my first question will go to the Minister of Education.

Could the Minister of Education tell us whether or not he has come to any conclusion which will be of assistance to the Metropolitan Toronto School Board as a result of his recent meetings with trustees of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, up until noon when I was in my office for five minutes, I hadn't received the kind of information I asked them for at our meeting on Tuesday afternoon, so I really have no hard data in order that I would know in specific terms what they are even asking for. When that is presented, we can then survey it.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, could the minister explain to us why, when he had his meeting with the trustees of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board, he invited to be present all of the Tory members from Metropolitan Toronto but no Liberal members and no NDP members?

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, Mr. Speaker, none of them asked—

An hon. member: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. Wells: None of the other members asked—

Mr. Cassidy: Just the trained puppets!

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): A nice little caball

Mr. Lewis: Is that so? Does he think that? That's not very nice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary, in view of the minister's recent complaints about the snow job that he thought was being put over on him by the North York trustees, why did the minister not avail himself of the opportunity to be present at any one of the 15 meetings? Or have any of his departmental officials been present at any one of the 15 meetings to which they were invited and which they said they wouldn't attend?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, those meetings were what we could call small "p" political meetings.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. Wells: It would not have been appropriate for members of the Ministry of Education civil service staff to attend those meetings.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The meeting the minister held was a large "p" political.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The people for whom it would be appropriate to attend would be the local members, some of whom, I gather, were not invited to those meetings—that is our members—and some of them who did attend were given no opportunity to speak. I still say that those meetings were fairly one-sided operations to present one side of the story. If the member would like us to hire a hall and present our side that's fine. I think we have a very good side to present.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of final supplementary, does the minister need any greater hall than this legislative assembly to present his side of the story if he has one?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think that is a very good point, Mr. Speaker. I would say to the hon. member—this is the question I've been asking for the last couple of weeks and I'm sure he saw it on television—in Metropolitan Toronto nothing is being cut back; next year they are being allowed to spend $5 million more. They say they need to spend $29 million more and yet total enrolment next year in Metropolitan Toronto will see 5,500 fewer pupils. Now tell me why they need to spend $29 million more?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The answer, in fact, was not an answer to the last supplementary regarding the size of the hall required. It was more of a statement. If the leader of the New Democratic Party has a substantial supplementary question of urgent public interest I will permit one more supplementary.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Something substantial?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): He always has substantial questions.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Not only substantial but relevant.

Mr. Lewis: I refuse to be intimidated, sir. I will await my turn.

REMOVAL OF BOOKS FROM CIRCULATION

Mr. Singer: I have a question which I think belongs to the Solicitor General; if he feels it doesn't, perhaps one of his fellow members of the Justice galaxy could step in.

Could the Solicitor General advise us whether or not the various steps set out in section 160 of the Criminal Code have been followed subsequent to the seizure by the Metropolitan Toronto Police of the books written by Xaviera—whatever her name is—

An hon. member: Hollander.

Mr. Singer: Hollander.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Looking at her name every night.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Excellent reading. One falls asleep after a few pages.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is not of sufficient urgency or public importance to justify supplementaries. The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, surely it is of urgency when it has been suggested in this House that something has been done by our police which is contrary to the provisions of the Criminal Code? Surely it is of urgency that we ask the senior law officer—

Mr. Speaker: Surely it is of urgency that the members obey the Chair in connection with the oral questions! Does the member for Downsview have another question?

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a considerable series of questions.

Mr. Lewis: Okay!

POWERS OF SECURITY GUARDS TO ISSUE PARKING TICKETS

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, could the Solicitor General advise us whether or not he approves of the procedure whereby security guards can issue parking tickets which they obtain from the Metropolitan Toronto police, apparently making it appear that they are regular police officers?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Do they have to be police officers to issue parking tickets?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I shall not answer the question directly, except to say—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What else is new?

An hon. member: A typical political answer.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —this, that in recent days I have taken the matter under review and have gone over the history of the development of this. I'm aware that there are not only cons but some pros with respect to the matter.

The situation as it exists at present is that a committee has been set up from within and without the ministry office to review all of the pertinent facts so that a contemporary decision may be made.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary: Could the minister explain to us how it was possible to circumvent a previous direction that issued from the office either of the Attorney General or the Solicitor General, if it then existed, which forbade the giving of powers similar to police officers' powers to anyone other than police officers?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's profession will enable him to understand that there are different—

Mr. MacDonald: That's taking a lot for granted.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —viewpoints on the legal specific technical interpretations of the legislation which is applicable.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Too many lawyers!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of a final supplementary: Is the minister not aware that I was not talking about legislation; I was talking about a specific directive issued out of one of the Justice departments?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The directive was based on an interpretation of the legislation. This is where the crux of the matter comes.

As I've said to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, the matter is under review. There is a problem to which a solution has to be found and we are looking for, not an answer to the hon. member's question, but an answer to the problem.

McWILLIAMS INSURANCE REPORT

Mr. Singer: I have one more question, of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Could the minister tell us why, when he tabled the McWilliams Report, he only tabled small extracts from it; and whether or not he is aware that substantial criticism has arisen since the tabling of that report because the full report was not made available to the members of the Legislature and to the public; and will he now table the full report?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that I tabled the recommendations only—numbering some 75 or 76 recommendations. I have not tabled the report itself; I am still currently studying it. I am not going to make any statement as to whether I will be filing it later on or not.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, does the minister not agree that the recommendations lose some of their effectiveness if the Legislature and the public are not going to be able to read the reasons whereby the conclusions were finally arrived at? Does he not think it would only be fair to the commissioners, and the public, if the whole report was made available and not just pre-digested portions?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, that's the determination I'm now trying to reconcile in my own mind.

Mr. MacDonald: What is in the report anyway?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

TORONTO DOWNTOWN HOUSING

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, to the provincial Treasurer in the absence of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman): Is the provincial Treasurer able to tell the House what precise agreements and what expenditures of money related to those agreements have been entered into by the Province of Ontario with respect to the housing development at Sherbourne and Dundas Sts. in downtown Toronto?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): No, sir, I'm not able to; but I would like to provide certain information which is in the form of a statement given by the Minister of Revenue last night on this subject—if that's the wish of the House.

An hon. member: Read it!

Mr. Speaker: If this is a ministerial statement it should not be given at this time.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, if I may say so, it's obviously not my statement; but it does contain important information on this rather urgent question. I will give it only if there are no objections.

Mr. Speaker: If the answer can be given in two or three minutes I would permit extracts from the statement.

Hon. Mr. White: Dealing with this rather important matter the Minister of Revenue last night made the following statement:

A great deal of public attention has been focused on the Sherbourne-Dundas area where site clearance work began on Monday in preparation for the construction of a 360-unit rental development.

In response to an appeal from persons interested in preserving the character of the neighbourhood and following a meeting with Mayor David Crombie, we urged the developer to suspend demolition of existing housing and meet with us to consider an alternative for a proposed development of 360 units in a 29-storey apartment building.

I would emphasize at this point that while the development was proposed to OHC, final provincial approval for the project has not yet been given. We have no contract with the developer and have no control over his actions. At this time all we can do is use whatever persuasion we're able to exert.

I examined the correspondence related to this development and, to my astonishment have learned that OHC did not actively seek out this location, nor pursue its redevelopment.

Indeed, I found to my great surprise that the original project, which was to contain two 24-storey towers, was vigorously pressed upon OHC by the ward aldermen, John Sewell and Karl Jaffary.

In a letter which he wrote to OHC's managing director on April 1, 1971, Ald. Sewell stated that he and Ald. Jaffary had a meeting with residents of the area at which it was conclusively agreed: "That all, or a large number of the units will be made available on a subsidized rent basis. The meeting requested me to write you to inquire if your corporation would be willing to either fund construction of the project, or part of it, or rent some, or all of the units from the developer."

Replying to the alderman's letter, the managing director of OHC informed Mr. Sewell that OHC's immediate goal was to increase the supply of three, four and five-bedroom units, but expressed interest in the Sherbourne-Dundas proposal in terms of long-range planning.

At its meeting on April 5, 1971, Toronto's committee on buildings and development dealt with a rezoning application on behalf of New Style Construction Ltd. to permit the two-tower development. Preliminary steps towards rezoning were taken by the committee which informed OHC that it "would look with favour on the Ontario Housing Corp., having some form of participation in this project."

On July 2, 1971, Ald. Karl Jaffary wrote to OHC and noted that city council on June 29 was called upon to approve the Sherbourne and Dundas development. In his letter Mr. Jaffary said: "It was apparent to me that many members of council would have been very happy to approve the development if Ontario Housing Corp. was going to take a major part in it. The development is now planned to consist of two towers, and it was the hope of many of us that Ontario Housing Corp. might well acquire one of those towers."

It is quite apparent there was considerable support from the ward aldermen and

Toronto city council for the participation of OHC in this proposed two-tower development. OHC became involved the following year when, in response to a Metro-wide OHC—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister has taken more than three minutes now, which I would deem to be sufficient for an answer to a question. However, in view of the importance, if the hon. members unanimously agree to extend it for another minute or two we will make an exception in this case.

Mr. Lewis: I don't want it taken off the question period time, Mr. Speaker. If that is what you insist on, forget it.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. minister has exceeded what would normally be a response to a question.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question then.

Hon. Mr. White: They didn't like the answer, eh?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Supplementary question.

Mr. Deans: Very interesting!

Hon. Mr. White: Interested, but not much.

Mr. MacDonald: I have a supplementary question of the provincial Treasurer as a spokesman for the government in the absence of the minister responsible for housing.

In view of the changed circumstances in the last two years since those letters were written by the ward aldermen, and in view of the happy coincidence between their desire for a renovation rather than a tearing down and building of highrise and the need on the part of OHC for multi-bedroom facilities, why doesn't the government change its position and see that OHC goes in and comes up with multi-bedroom facilities?

Hon. Mr. White: Perhaps this new question will enable me to read the second half of this statement which deals with those issues.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. minister gives the second half of the statement in his response to the supplementary question, I will permit it.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to see whether it deals with my question.

Mr. Deans: This is a game.

Hon. Mr. White: OHC became involved the following year when, in response to a Metro-wide OHC proposal call in March, 1972, the firm of Irber, Sable and Damis submitted a proposal for a 24-storey building which would contain 302 units on 1½ acres of land, approximately half the site referred to earlier by the aldermen.

Metro's housing advisory committee approved the project in April and OHC's board of directors approved the proposal on July 18, 1972, subject to a rezoning of the site. On June 1, 1972, Ald. Sewell wrote to OHC again and asked whether OHC was thinking of leasing or buying any of the units in either of the two proposed towers? The alderman at that time gave no indication that he opposed clearance of the existing housing at the site or the erection of the highrise buildings.

Mr. Speaker: I think the answer is now exceeding a proper answer to the supplementary question.

Mr. Sargent: He is wandering.

Mr. MacDonald: He hasn't answered my supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. White: The answer is later down here.

Mr. J. Duksza (Parkdale): Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will allow one more supplementary, in view of the urgency of the matter.

Mr. Duksza: Will the government support this project financially if the city expropriates this site according to the new lines that were done in the Sherbourne feasibility study by Diamond and Myers?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am informed—

Mr. Speaker: I think the answer need only be yes or no.

Hon. Mr. White: I can't answer that question. I haven't got the pertinent information available.

Mr. Cassidy: That is the crux of it—no commitment over there.

INTEGRATED COMMUNITY HOUSING PROJECT

Mr. Lewis: A new question: Does the Treasurer know why his colleague, the Minister of Revenue, has been refusing to move in the provision of—

Hon. Mr. White: That is absurd. Listen to the rest of the statement.

Mr. Lewis: —integrated housing in this area for two years now? Can he explain why this has all been caused by the Minister of Revenue?

Hon. Mr. White: The Minister of Revenue is, I think, meeting right now with Mayor Crombie.

Mr. Lewis: It's about time—after they start wrecking the buildings.

Hon. Mr. White: I got this information secondhand, but that is my understanding. I'm further given to understand there will be a further statement tonight. I think it's really most unfortunate—

Mr. Lewis: Well, maybe he should make it in the House.

Hon. Mr. White: —that the House won't listen to the next two pages of this statement, since the matter is obviously urgent.

Mr. MacDonald: The government is going to save the buildings after they are torn down.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE APPLICATION

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Has he administered the appropriately stiff rebuke to his board of review, in light of the divisional court's comments on the case involving a 65-year-old widow's application for public assistance, and the clear indication that the board of review failed to take the question of need into account? Has he been in touch with the board since the court's ruling?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this case. I'll be pleased to look into it.

GENERAL WELFARE RATES

Mr. Lewis: Well all right, I will send the minister the clipping. I would have thought it had been brought to this attention.

May I ask him, by way of another question, is it his intention now to raise the levels of assistance for general welfare recipients above $115 a month, given the instance of it being raised, in British Columbia yesterday, to $140 a month for an individual?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I'll be making a statement in the House early next week with reference to various matters that have been brought to my attention. One concerns the increase in old age pensions as it affects those who are in homes for the aged; and also the question of additional assistance to those who are on general welfare. I will be making this statement early next week.

Mr. Lewis: So by way of supplementary, the minister is saying that he will in fact announce the increases next week? Am I to understand that?

I am not asking the minister for the sums.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: What I said, Mr. Speaker, is that I will be making a statement next week as to the various adjustments we are making.

Mr. Lewis: Okay; the minister can call it an "adjustment", because he is embarrassed to call it an increase.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Yes, 10 bucks a month; $10 a month.

COMPENSATION TO CRIME VICTIMS

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Attorney General: Has the province yet signed an agreement with the federal government to obtain a share of the costs of compensation of victims of crime and of legal aid?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: That is done, is it?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Yes, in both cases, Mr. Speaker.

CONFERENCES FOR WOMEN

Mr. Lewis: A question, last question Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: In these gratuitous, condescending conferences for women which are being held around the province, particularly the provincial conference for women, why was it necessary to have among the ministry's experts someone from Morrison-Lamothe Bakery and what could she contribute about consumer's rights, or consumer responsibility?

Why was it necessary to bring in the chairman of the American Farm Bureau? Is there no one in Canada of comparable status who might have views in this area?

Why was it necessary to have Fred Davis appear through the courtesy of the Imperial Tobacco Products Ltd.

And what in God's name can the minister tell us, by way of summary, is the Minister without Portfolio (Mrs. Birch) going to talk about under the title, "The Future Is Not What It Used to Be"?

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Perhaps the by-elections!

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, as far as the conferences are concerned, they are under the chairmanship of the women, and they design and develop their programme as they see fit for presentation to women's groups throughout the Province of Ontario.

As far as the invitation to Mr. Davis is concerned, it was extended, I believe, a year or so ago. I will look into the background of it, but we pretty well leave the programme up to the board or the executive of that particular organization, to design and develop the programmes they think best serve the women of this province.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): In the view of the Treasurer!

Mr. Deans: Those best suited to promote the Conservative cause.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West. All right, the hon. minister.

POLICE SEIZURE OF COMPANY'S BOOKS

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last the member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon) asked a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism:

Is the minister aware of why the police recently seized the records and books of Disney Display with which, according to the public accounts, his ministry had over 90 per cent of the display business last year?

May I first of all say, Mr. Speaker, that our ministry did approximately $270,000 worth of business with Disney Display in the years 1971-1972, which accounted for 17.6 per cent of the display business by my ministry. Secondly, sir, as far as the seizure of the books is concerned, I believe it was on the instructions and at the request of the National Revenue Department of the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

TEACHER NEGOTIATION LEGISLATION

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

Will the minister be introducing, before Easter, legislation governing teacher and board negotiations?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course the exact time of introduction of legislation is something that has to be decided by the government and myself, but I think the Speech from the Throne indicated this legislation would be coming. I can't tell the member whether it will be before the Easter holiday. We have had the mid-winter break; I can't tell you whether or not it will be before the Easter holiday.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the legislation be based on the Reville recommendations?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, that is like asking what the legislation which we haven't introduced is going to say. Of course, the hon. member will be able to draw his conclusions when he sees the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

POSITION OF MINING RECORDER

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Natural Resources. Has his ministry this week undertaken measures to remove one Mr. Roger Denomme, the mining recorder, who revealed to the Northern Miner the report which would have called for the abolition of the mine recorder's post? Has the ministry removed him from job?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the hon. member that I am very much aware of the situation to which he refers. I can tell him that I wasn't very pleased with the mining recorder's actions, but to my knowledge no disciplinary action has been taken.

Mr. Martel: Is it not a fact that he was to be brought to Toronto this week some time for some confrontation with the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I think this is correct, Mr. Speaker. When something like this happens, I think it is only right that we examine all aspects of it and I do believe he is coming to Toronto to meet a committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question of the same minister; it is not anything one can put on the order paper—the minister might say yes or no to it. In view of the fact that I personally witnessed—

An hon. member: What is the question?

Mr. Sargent: Is that member the parliamentary assistant there?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: I personally witnessed the minister loading on to his aircraft at the Island Airport great supplies of medicinal material in the form of booze for a trip. We are still trying to get—

Mr. Speaker: Will the member ask the question?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, I am leading up to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Will he ask the question?

Mr. Sargent: Will the minister advise whether we have to go to the extent of a court order to get the logbooks of the Davis air force and the personnel using it? That's all we want to know. The Provincial Auditor's report, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The question has been asked. Perhaps the minister would care to answer.

Mr. Sargent: It is a two-part question.

Mr. Speaker: It had better be!

Mr. Sargent: Why is the minister afraid to let us see the logbooks? Tell us that!

Mr. Speaker: That's an improper question.

Mr. Sargent: It's a pretty good one. Let the minister answer the first one, then.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the member for Grey-Bruce that I don't know the air force to which he refers. We have a very good air service within my ministry of which we are all proud; I am sure all the members here are equally proud as I am of the tremendous work they do.

In regard to the log books, this question has been brought to my attention on many occasions in this Legislature and I have given the answer. As I said to the leader of the New Democratic Party just the other day, there would be a policy statement made.

Mr. Sargent: Is the minister going to make a policy statement on that? When?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In due course.

Mr. Sargent: How long is that?

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park is next.

REPORT ON SILVER SHIELD MINES

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Who in his ministry gave instructions that the OSC report on Silver Shield was not to be completed? Is he yet in a position to answer the question which was given to him last year asking whether any members of the Ministry of Natural Resources had been trading in the stock of that particular company?

Hon. Mr. Clement: I am not aware of any order being given to anyone to preclude the finishing of the report dealing with Silver Shield. I am advised by the chairman that the report will be completed very shortly. As the member knows there are certain charges pending against certain individuals connected with that company and the report, for obvious reasons, will not be made available to the public until the charges are disposed of.

I wish to make no comment at this particular time with reference to the suggestion that certain people in the Ministry of Natural Resources were involved with the purchase of shares or suggested purchase of shares in Silver Shield Mines. I understand that this is touched upon within the report and certain steps might be initiated as a result.

Mr. Shulman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as the minister or the OSC chairman had that report—the results of that investigation—long before the charges were laid, why has the minister taken no action within that ministry?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should get a new informant, because the report was not in the possession of the chairman of the Securities Commission. He advised me about two weeks ago that it was not even completed. It is almost complete, but it is not completed as of yet.

Mr. Shulman: A final supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the interviews were completed over a year ago, how can the minister explain that it took a year to put the result of those interviews into a report?

Hon. Mr. Clement: I am advised that the interviews were not all completed over a year ago, Mr. Speaker, and that in fact some were completed just a few days ago.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. Was it his government's intention to grant to the Ontario Health Insurance Commission the power to forgive $50 million of premiums by the wording of the Act establishing the commission, which states: "The commission is empowered to do all things necessary to arrange for the organization of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan"?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think the simplest way to respond would be to draw the hon. member's attention to the written statement on that very subject read in this House by the Treasurer a few days ago.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. provincial Treasurer.

Does the Treasurer have the intestinal fortitude to admit that the government proposal for regional government in the Hamilton-Wentworth area has resulted in an irreconcilable situation, and will he propose to his government that that area be included in the areas in which regional government will not be proceeded with this year?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, I have the guts—and no, I won't give any such assurance.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. Givens: Would the Minister of Inter-governmental Affairs indicate whether the statement attributed to him the other day, that his government was going to slow down on regional government, was an indication of government policy or was it simply an offhand remark taken out of context?

Hon. Mr. White: I think the report was accurate, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I used the words "slow down." What I did say was that the proposal of the ministry for regional government east of Metro, and the several proposals for regional government west of Metro, now attend to the most critical urbanized area of this province.

I myself anticipate no slowdown as such in the reform of local government. At the same time, I am quick to say that I don't think the model established in the Metro area is the appropriate model for all parts of this province. I am hoping that the counties and regions and other municipalities in the outlying parts of the province, including my own part of southwestern Ontario, will themselves find a way to modernize local government without having Queen's Park impose a regional plan on them.

Mr. Haggerty: Getting pretty close to home, eh?

Mr. Sargent: They've got to check their policy now!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: And I have reason to believe, Mr. Speaker, that this will indeed take place. I had the privilege of speaking as the keynote speaker to the semi-annual conference of the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario on Tuesday night in the King Edward Hotel, at which time I learned from the warden of Lambton county that conversations had started with Samia. I learned from the warden of Essex county that meetings have started with Windsor. And I learned from the clerk of Westminster township that a meeting is planned between Middlesex and London. So we see now—for the first time, I suggest—an effort being made at that local level to reform local government in the way that hasn't been apparent in the past.

This, as a matter of fact, was our plea to the local level of government five or 10 years ago, but when the response wasn't forthcoming we assumed the responsibility, and now we have attended to all the critical spots.

Mr. Haggerty: Blackmail.

Hon. Mr. White: And we have reason to think that the municipalities, the counties and so on, will be able to deal with internal alterations, amalgamations, boundary changes and so on to meet the needs of the future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Forest Hill should have the first supplementary.

Mr. Givens: A supplementary question: Would—

Mr. Deans: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: It was my question; he asked the first supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth is quite correct: he asked the original question; and the hon. member for York-Forest Hill had a supplementary. I will permit the hon. member for Wentworth to have a supplementary.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't normally do that, but I am always afraid of getting cut off at two supplementaries. I want to ask the minister whether—

Mr. Speaker: I think I indicated to the hon. member the other day that I would consider the importance of the question—

Mr. Deans: That's what I was worried about.

Mr. Speaker: —and then decide how many supplementaries to allow.

Mr. Deans: That's exactly what worries me.

Mr. Foulds: The member will have to ask better questions.

Mr. Deans: May I, by way of supplementary question, ask the minister whether he is aware that a polarization has taken place which would make the implementation of either of the two proposals almost unacceptable? Will he begin the process again in a considerably shortened way, to try to come up with something which might in fact be acceptable to both parties?

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary.

An hon. member: Wait a minute, wait a minute.

Mr. Speaker: Surely to goodness the response from the minister can be given and then the rest of the hon. members who've tried to get up can ask their questions before the hon. member for Grey-Bruce shoots up.

Mr. Sargent: All right, all right. Don't get your blood up.

Mr. Speaker: I'm not, you are!

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I'm not aware that the polarization has taken place; no, I must say I'm not. I'm not aware of that. I don't think there's been any polarization, notwithstanding the efforts of the MPP for Wentworth—

Mr. Deans: That's a lie.

Hon. Mr. White: —who is reported in the Record as saying, "MPP backs Beverly," and who is trying at every chance he gets to exacerbate the existing difficulties.

Mr. Deans: That's not true.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just politics.

Hon. Mr. White: If additional proof is needed I'll be glad to read into the record—

Mr. Deans: Read it!

Mr. Cassidy: The situation was created by the government, which gave an untenable choice.

Hon. Mr. White: This is from the Kitchen-Waterloo Record of March 20:

The fight against union with Waterloo region by northern residents of Beverly township will be carried on to the floor of the provincial Legislature next week by NDP House leader Ian Deans, MPP for Wentworth.

An hon. member: Oh, oh!

An hon. member: Well, well!

Mr. Deans: When did you hear it?

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Hon. Mr. White: Quoting further:

In a telephone interview, Mr. Deans said he will ask John White, Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, why the 900 residents of a 30-square-mile section of the township are not being told what will happen to their demands.

Etc., etc., etc.

Hon. Mr. Welch: All things to all men.

Mr. Deans: Well, by way of supplementary—

Hon. Mr. White: Notwithstanding the troublemakers, like my hon. friend, who are attempting to exacerbate the concern which is evident—

Mr. Cassidy: Shame.

Mr. Singer: The troublemaking exacerbator who wants to discuss something in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. White: —I have high hopes that a consensus will be formed. I would like to say that these hopes are not ill-founded. I had breakfast this morning with the reeve of West Flamborough and an associate of his on council. I have meetings tomorrow morning and a luncheon meeting with the mayor of Hamilton and, I think, 18 councillors. I hope that we can come together to a consensus, notwithstanding the destructive influence of the hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Go and get 'em.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary question.

An hon. member: Let him have it, Ian.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The hon. member for Wentworth has had one question and a supplementary. I will accept one more supplementary—the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Deans: Well, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: On a point of privilege, sir. Is it not the privilege of the members of this House to bring to the attention of the ministry, petitions which have been raised by citizens of this province in favour of, or opposed to anything being done by this government?

An hon. member: That was no point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, isn't it a breach of faith and trust to say on March 20—

Mr. Stokes: Does the minister have a point of privilege?

Hon. Mr. White: —that the hon. member will take the side of one particular group, when the pledge has been given to the hundreds of thousands of people concerned, that their views will be received until March 31?

Mr. Sargent: Is that a question?

An hon. member: What game is the minister playing?

Mr. Deans: The minister is completely misrepresenting the facts in both circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Mr. Deans: If he had done his job properly he would have—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: He has destroyed the credibility of the government in the area.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Wentworth, of course, did not have a valid point of order.

Mr. Deans: A point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: As far as being a point of privilege is concerned, there is no such parliamentary privilege.

Mr. Lewis: Well, you know, it's not a breach of trust, it's a fit of pique, for heaven's sake. Why should we accept the regional government plans this government sets down?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense.

Mr. Deans: Ninety per cent of the people of the area are opposed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: All of his Hamilton members deserted the minister on this issue.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The Treasurer is carrying a large piece of lumber on his left shoulder.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon member for Sault Ste. Marie. We have had sufficient supplementaries.

MAPLE MOUNTAIN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. First of all, is the minister aware of the article that appeared in the March edition of Exchange, the monthly news bulletin of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce, referring to Maple Mountain development? And can he tell us, if he is aware of it, how accurate the contents are?

Mr. Singer: That is certainly more urgent than the police breaking the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the article in Exchange. It was brought to my attention. I must say that the comments that were made in the article, Mr. Speaker, are not those in keeping with the quality of this government. We have assigned the responsibility for two consultant reports to figure out whether there is a practical project, a feasible project, and whether it is economically sound. When this government has come to the decision as to whether it is, sir, there will be an announcement to this House as to what direction we shall take in special attractions in this problem.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

ESPANOLA WATER CONDITION

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A question of the Minister of the Environment: What action has the minister's department taken in response to the letter from Espanola stating their alarm regarding the contamination of surface waters in the area, which they describe as black, inky and full of solids?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member can tell me the date of that letter. I don't recall anything recently from Espanola.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to provide the minister with a copy of a letter addressed to him on March 27 of this year; a week ago.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that that letter obviously went to somebody to investigate it; and if it hasn't got to me yet—

Mr. Good: It was addressed to the minister. Doesn't he read his mail? He doesn't have anything else to do.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, the hon. member doesn't have anything else to do.

Mr. Sargent: Isn't he getting paid for it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

WAGE RATES ON ROAD PROJECT

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): A question of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister explain why, under the Ministry of Transportation and Communications contract No. 72-119—that's the construction at Plains Rd. in the Hamilton-Aldershot area—why the contractor, Steed and Evans, is being allowed to pay some carpenters employed on carpentry on the bridge structures less than the fair wage schedule rate; particularly as this contractor bid, and was awarded the contract under the fair wage agreement?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is referring to a jurisdictional dispute between the carpenters' union and the labourers' union. Or is it another contract?

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to any jurisdictional dispute. I am asking why all carpenters employed on carpentry on that site, from whatever source, are not being paid the rate specified under the fair wage schedule.

And furthermore, would the minister then investigate all rates paid to persons in the various job classifications on that site to determine that they are all being paid the correct wage under the fair wage schedule?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will acquire the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

FAMILY COURT PROCEDURES

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Could this minister tell me whether his ministry is still following the policy of forcing women into the family court when the women have already made their direction that all payments by their husbands shall go either to the provincial or municipal social service? It's the welfare department, I'm sorry; it's still the same. Is this still going on? And are these women forced to swear hearsay information or face the threat of being cut off welfare?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for her question; it's a very important question; a question being brought to our attention many times. But I would say that this matter is under the Attorney General.

I believe it is the Law Reform Commission which has made a study and we are looking forward to its report. It is a very complex question. It has legal implications as well as social ones. But I would say that if there are any cases that the member is aware of, if she knows of any mothers who are presently suffering any hardships, if she would bring them to my attention we would be pleased to look into them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for—

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I think the minister is well aware of at least three cases brought to his attention by transcript. Could I know, then, whether his opinion is that this procedure is necessitated by the legislation, and whose legislation it is?

An hon. member: Don't get upset.

Mr. Singer: I would say that is the Treasurer's.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister care to answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I will be pleased, Mr. Speaker, to reply specifically to the hon. member in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Natural Resources has the reply to a question previously asked.

ALLEGED USE OF STRIKEBREAKERS

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Windsor West asked a question in regard to the production of the Ontario Provincial Parks folders.

I am informed that an order for the re-printing of this folder was placed with the printing services branch of the Ministry of Government Services in accordance with accepted government policy and procedures. The job was put out for tender by that ministry and subsequently the order was placed with C. F. Houghton, a Toronto printer, the lowest tenderer who guaranteed delivery within the limited time specified by my ministry. C. F. Houghton Ltd. subcontracted the folder work to the Brooker Trade Bindery.

I am further informed that the printing services branch of Government Services does not, in the normal course of business, specify how subcontracts may be awarded. Indeed, such action appears impractical in view of the vast number of printing orders placed by the branch and where there is a need for subcontracting.

Mr. Bounsell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: On that then, the minister is saying that he did not have the authority to write in his letter of May 12 to the International Union of Bookbinders—that therefore subcontracting to this firm that is on strike could not be prevented?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the letter to which the hon. member refers was a letter written by me to the union. I would point out to him that that particular order to which he referred at that time was placed by the Niagara Parks Commission which comes under my ministry. I did have the authority to send that letter to them. I assured him at that time that I would send the letter and I did.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has now expired.

I should like to inform the House at this time that the meeting of the procedural affairs committee called for 9:30 tomorrow morning will now be held this evening at 6 o'clock and is not expected to take more than 10 minutes.

Petitions.

Report agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal the Northern Development Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, under the Northern Development Act, loans of up to $500 were made to settlers in northern Ontario between the years 1917 and 1930. These loans were secured by liens registered against the property of the borrowers. The only loans outstanding at the present time are those which appear to be uncollectable. The purpose of this bill is to repeal the Act and to provide that any outstanding liens will be discharged.

Mr. MacDonald: Earthshaking, earthshaking.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to repeal the Agricultural Development Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, under the Agricultural Development Act, loans were made to farmers, which loans were secured by mortgages on the land. At the present time there are very few mortgages outstanding, all of which will mature during the 1974 calendar year. The purpose of this bill is to vest the assets formerly vested in the Commissioner of Agricultural Loans in the Treasurer of Ontario and to transfer the powers and duties of the commissioner to the Treasurer, effective July 1 of this year.

TREASURY, ECONOMICS AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the amendments contained in this bill are of a house-keeping nature. A correction is made of the cross references to the Audit Act, and in addition provision is made in the statute for an official seal of the Treasurer.

DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Devolution of Estates Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, the bill basically accomplishes two things: First, it increases the preferential share of a spouse on an intestacy from $20,000 to $50,000 and prevents escheat to the Crown of part of the property of the deceased where the spouse is the only lawful heir.

Under the present provisions of the Devolution of Estates Act, where a person dies without having made a will the spouse of that person is entitled to the first $20,000 of the deceased's intestate estate, after payment of debts and expenses. That amount is commonly referred to as the spouse's preferential share. The spouse is also entitled to a further portion of the residue of the estate, if any.

Under the present law, as well, where a person dies without making a will and leaves a spouse only, with no other heirs, the government of Ontario is entitled to a portion of the person's estate by escheat.

Over the years there have been very few instances in which the Crown has become entitled to claim a portion of the estate in these circumstances. In those very few circumstances, the surviving spouse has applied to the Lieutenant Governor in Council for a waiver of escheat and a waiver has invariably been granted. As a matter of principle, we feel that the Crown should not in any case become entitled to a portion of the estate at the expense of the surviving spouse only because there were no other beneficiaries.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, provision is made in this bill that the Crown will obtain no part of the estate where there is a surviving spouse and there are no other heirs.

SURROGATE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Surrogate Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, under the present law, where a person dies without making a will, in order that that person's estate be administered letters of administration must be obtained. Under the provisions of the Surrogate Courts Act, the person applying for letters of administration must obtain a bond to ensure that the estate will be properly administered. The purpose of the bond is to protect the beneficiaries of the estate and the creditors.

Under the bill which I have just introduced to amend the Devolution of Estates

Act, the spouse of a deceased person who has not made a will will be entitled to the first $50,000 of an estate. Where the value of an estate, after creditors have been paid, is less than $50,000, the only person who would benefit from the protection of the administration bond is the spouse. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that a bond is not required where the net value of the estate is less than $50,000 and an application for administration is made by a spouse of the deceased person who dies without leaving a will.

CITY OF HAMILTON ACT

Mr. Reilly, in the absence of Mr. J. R. Smith, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

LAND TITLES ACT

Hon. Mr. Clement moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Land Titles Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, as a result of amendments made to the Land Titles Act during the last session, subdivision plans in the future are to be registered under the land titles system where it is available. Practical experience in attempting to bring about this change indicates that the date suggested of April 1, 1973, was premature and would result in increased land prices to purchasers at a time when price and availability of serviced lots are of concern to everyone. Accordingly this amendment will extend the date to Jan. 1, 1974, and provide more flexibility in the application of the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, His Honour awaits us—

Mr. Speaker: The member for St. David was on her feet.

Mrs. M. Scrivener (St. David): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the orders of the day, may I ask for the concurrence of the House to revert to ministerial statements, in order to hear the balance of the statement from the provincial Treasurer since it concerns a matter of urgent public business?

Mr. Sargent: That was a well set up deal.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose if we have the unanimous consent of the House we could revert. Do we have that?

Mr. Lewis: No, you don't have unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker. The minister knows how the rules are observed here. He could have made it during ministerial statements.

Mr. Speaker: If we do not have unanimous consent there is no manner in which we can entertain it.

Mr. Lewis: It's ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. White: On a point of order.

Mr. Haggerty: There is no point of order.

Hon. Mr. White: There is nothing argumentative in this statement. It has an urgency that very few matters have.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order. I'm sorry.

Mr. Singer: That is not a point of order in the rules of order. The rules are there.

Hon. Mr. White: I can't imagine how it would hurt the cause of the leader of the NDP to have this information in the records.

Mr. Singer: The Treasurer thinks he can say anything he wants at any time. He is not going to.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): He is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Speaking to the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: What is he talking about then?

Mr. Speaker: I attempted to have him sit down as soon as possible. There is no point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: If it is urgent, let him bring it in as a ministerial statement. There are 22 members in the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: The minister is out of order. I have called for order several times.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Why wouldn't the members hear the statement?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: On to more pleasant things, Mr. Speaker; His Honour awaits in his chamber to give assent to certain bills.

Mr. Lewis: We are not allowed to ask questions on the Treasurer's so-called facts whether he introduces them during question period or while waiting for His Honour.

Mr. Singer: The member said the other day the Treasurer is as arrogant as the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) but not as able.

Mr. Lewis: No, that's wrong! He's more able than that member and more arrogant!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before you call the orders of the day, I would inform the House that the Lieutenant Governor is waiting to give royal assent to certain bills.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario entered the chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the throne.

ROYAL ASSENT

Hon. W. Ross MacDonald (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed certain bills to which, in the name of and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

Bill 3, The Ministry of Government Services Act, 1973.

Bill 4, An Act to amend the Crown Attorneys Act.

Bill 5, An Act to amend the Crown Witnesses Act.

Bill 6, An Act to amend the Administration of Justice Act.

Bill 7, An Act to amend the Limited Partnership Act.

Bill 8, An Act to amend the Partnerships Registration Act.

Bill 9, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Bureau Act.

Bill 10, An Act to amend the Collection Agencies Act.

Bill 14, An Act to amend the Proceedings Against the Crown Act.

Bill 15, An Act to amend the Securities Act.

Bill 16, An Act to amend the Certification of Titles Act.

Bill 17, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act.

Bill 66, An Act to amend the Forest Fires Prevention Act.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it's noteworthy that there are four members on the government side of the House and about 10 on the rump side.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): What's that about the government rump?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: This is a real compliment to me; I appreciate the large turnout.

I would like to say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, in continuing my remarks, that we are very proud to have the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) on our front bench. Her record of service to the people of Toronto, I think, will be a leading factor in our taking over the government two years hence. And in Huron we had a very fantastic victory, because if there ever was a safe seat in the Province of Ontario it had to be the stronghold of Mr. MacNaughton. I think his great victory there speaks very highly of our member.

Mr. J. Riddell (Huron): Thank you.

Mr. Sargent: You're very welcome.

I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have been trying to get the logbooks of the Davis air force for some time and we are going to go as far as a court order, if necessary, to get them.

Now I have an aircraft of sorts and I've been seeing this operation for years at the Island Airport, as I have mentioned before, where the big black limousines drive up there in the late afternoon on Friday—

An hon. member: After closing hours.

Mr. Sargent:—and they load cases of booze and all the other refreshments into the aircraft. They may be taking medicine to the Indians, but I don't believe that. We want to find out exactly what these junkets are for, where they are going and who they are carrying—all the honky-tonk people they are mixed up with now. We'd like to see just what goes on in these pleasure flights.

But in this regard I heard a pilot's story about the Davis air force that the hon members might be interested in. It closely parallels the position of the government, I believe, Mr. Speaker. On a flight to Cuba the pilot's voice came over the intercom. He said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I have two pieces of information for you. One of them is good and one of them is not so good; so I'll tell you the bad news first. The bad news is that we are lost; we don't know where we are. As I told you, there is good news too. The good news is that we have a 200-mph tailwind." This points out that the government doesn't know where it's going, and it's going there pretty fast.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I'm glad he directed our attention to the moral of the story.

Mr. Sargent: A headline in the Kitchener paper says, "Davis Pleads for Defeat of Unruly Eddie Sargent." You'll pardon me for bringing this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because I have nothing against the Premier (Mr. Davis) whatsoever, but he says that he wants to win Grey-Bruce the next time around. "I want to win it very much," the Premier says. The story goes on:

The Liberal's action in the past has needled Mr. Davis as well as other Conservatives and it resulted in Mr. Sargent being ejected from the provincial House on several occasions.

Thursday night 252 party faithfuls paid $25 a serving to dine with their leader in the first fund-raising effort for the next provincial vote.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Downtowner Inn?

Mr. Sargent: No, this is in the Legion. They didn't give any business there, eh?

The gathering heard their leader say that the provincial party will again support the federal Tories when another election comes. "Ontario didn't do so badly for the federal party in the last election," he said, "and I hope the election is not far off."

Again, coming back to the Grey-Bruce riding, Mr. Davis told his listeners there has been a tendency to do little until the election is called. He said, "I want to win this riding very much."

He said that again. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, in reply, is that I wouldn't say such a thing against him. Rather, I would say that I hope that he stays right on where he is until the next election, because he is the best thing that ever happened to the Liberal Party for the past 30 years. It is the best thing that ever happened, as long as he keeps doing just what he is doing right now.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Right.

Mr. Sargent: And we will laugh all the way to the government seats.

An hon. member: I'm sorry.

An hon. member: There are only two doctors over there now.

Mr. Sargent: Carrying on about this man—only two?—I'm glad to have the member for Oshawa here.

An hon. member: There are six of them in the House.

Mr. Sargent: Six of them in the House?

Mr. M. B. Dymond (Ontario): Thinking of the member for Grey-Bruce's health.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Thinking of the government's health too now.

Mr. MacDonald: Mental or physical?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the House for a remark I made the other night. I said about the amount of money that the Premier spends on his vote — $1,200,000 to run his office—that he increased it in one year by $680,000, and I said that it's more than all the other provincial premiers in Canada put together spent to run their offices. In fact, I said it was more than the Prime Minister of Canada spent running his office. There was great opposition to that remark from the government benches.

I checked with Ottawa and I find I'm wrong by $100,000. I find that the Prime Minister of Canada spends $1.4 million—we checked it out. The Premier spends about $1.25 million here. Included in the $1.4 million in the Ottawa deal is $33,000 for Mr. Diefenbaker. So, I was right on target when I said that this man has the audacity to ask us to give him about $4,000 per day for his ego.

Historians some day—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Diefenbaker?

Mr. Sargent: — I believe, will record—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Diefenbaker? I think the member is wrong there, isn't he?

Mr. Sargent: Pardon?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I don't think the $33,000 is for Diefenbaker.

Mr. Sargent: No, they have it in the vote for Mr. Diefenbaker. That's what it is in the vote for. I don't know what else.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Yes, $33,000 for Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: It is not for Mr. Diefenbaker.

An hon. member: He is a privy councillor.

Mr. Sargent: What I am trying to get across is that if the people of Ontario could see this exact scene right here today—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): They are beginning to see it.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): "The blue machine."

Mr. Sargent: "The big blue machine" is hiding its head.

Mr. B. Newman: They saw it on March 15.

Mr. Sargent: I don't know. Historians some day will be able to guess, but we will never know for sure, what the Premier has cost the Province of Ontario, what this man has cost the people of Ontario.

Mr. Bullbrook: In the field of education alone.

Mr. Sargent: That's right. Everything he has touched he has snafued.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Tell us what he snafued.

Mr. Sargent: He has cost us untold millions of dollars in the field of education. He has cost us untold millions of dollars in regional government.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Sargent: He played politics with issues like Spadina and Pickering. He spent $14 million of Toronto people's money to get three or four seats. He spends, as I mentioned, $1.2 million on his own office. I think I can sum it up in about four words, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): He's got to go.

Mr. Sargent: Read the auditor's report. There are 130 pages of corruption, inefficiency and misappropriation.

An hon. member: Mismanagement of things.

Mr. Sargent: We are having our research people check the millions of dollars that this report shows it is costing the people of Ontario. This alone proves, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier is a bust.

An hon. member: Good for you.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Wrong again.

Mr. Sargent: The art of persuasion can be stated in five words. Unfortunately, I'll need more than five words. I hope when I have finished that at least Hansard and the people of Ontario will be somewhat persuaded to share my view on this subject, but, Mr. Speaker, nobody is listening.

An hon. member: They agree with the member; they are now.

Mr. Sargent: Politics has been designed as a process of taking money from the rich to buy votes from the poor on the pretext of protecting each from the other. There are those who say—I will tell the member for Victoria-Haliburton—that with a big enough kitty, like he had the last time, properly spent, he could persuade the inmates of death row to vote for the reinstatement of the death penalty, if you have enough money.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Now something similar happened in Ontario last election, I have many friends in the government and in the opposition. I am not labelling the members opposite as perpetrators of this growing corruption, this cancerous, ongoing affair here. In fact, a lot of them are like the man who was riding a tiger; he couldn't steer it and he couldn't get off. They think that they are dribbling the ball but actually they are just watching it bounce.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Did the member write that?

Mr. Sargent: I try to write my own stuff; I don't have any tax like the members opposite have. But I must congratulate the member for Victoria-Haliburton; he made a very fine speech the other day and I congratulate him.

An hon. member: You're going to get him coming over here.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): The only way they'll shut him up is to put him in the cabinet.

An hon. member: He should be a parliamentary assistant. They passed him over for lesser talents.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, my point is that nobody is listening; we can't let the people of Ontario know what is going on.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): We're listening.

Mr. Sargent: I think many of the members opposite are ashamed of what their party is doing. Many of them who come in here have been in county council and city council, and ethics meant something. I am not naive enough to believe that those members buy this corruption that is going on in their party.

I ran a city for 12 years and I never took a raw nickel in my life; I took a bottle of whisky once, but I suggested to the fellow that he sit down at the mayor's desk and drink it with me. That's as far as I got on the take. I think those fellows opposite are the same type of guys, if they weren't mixed up with this corrupt crowd, because the establishment has taken over, as I will prove later on.

The other day I was in Chicago. I picked up the Chicago Tribune and found the following on its masthead. It says:

The newspaper is an institution developed by modern civilization to present the news of the day, to foster commerce and industry, to inform and lead public opinion, and to furnish that check upon government which no constitution has ever been able to provide.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, this check is needed more than ever in Ontario today. I would wish the press were here to hear what I have to say. The newspapers in Toronto are not doing their job.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I thought they did very well.

Mr. Sargent: The out-of-town press has courageous reporters and the newspapers carry their stories. I know what I am talking about in this field. The Vancouver Sun makes government its daily target. In the USA in every market we have crusading investigative reporting; governors and senators go to jail every month because of newspaper crusading.

Here in Toronto what happens? By accident the Globe and Mail gets a report from an employee that Fidinam was involved in hanky-panky with the government and it breaks a story. But there is no investigative reporting. The press in Toronto closes its eyes.

I would suggest to the House that we lack the gutsy journalism that will go after crooks in government as it does in England and in the States. Here we are what is now the largest city in Canada—bigger than Montreal—and we know there is organized crime, and we know the government is using laundered money, and the Star and the Globe and Mail are more concerned with making money.

Look at the Toronto Star today. It is running a ratio of advertising to news running about 75 to 25, or 80 to 20 per cent on some days—80 per cent advertising content, 20 per cent news. It's a shocking thing that we cannot press this crusading on behalf of the people of Ontario. This Toronto Star is the most lucrative money machine in America, and Beland Honderich is interested, it seems, in only two things: black ink on the financial statement at the end of the year—and one thing I will give him credit for—fighting for our national ownership of our country.

But what a tragedy for the people of Ontario the Telegram folded. Even though it was a Tory paper, at least we had another voice. I say thank God that the Sun is coming up—and I hope they will make more money.

But what about the reporters in the House? Their main job—most of them—is to try to hunt for a job as a parliamentary assistant to a minister; and so they don't want to antagonize any minister too much.

I think it is time they got up off their butts and did some investigative reporting—and take this book, this bible, showing millions of dollars of corruption and misappropriation, and do something about it.

Then what happens? We have 117 members in this House who are success stories in their own right; each one of them is a success story. What happens when the House folds? The press gallery runs down the hall as if they were chasing the ice cream machine man, and they find the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman). And that is all they do for news. There are 117 of us here who have opinions. What do they do up there? I think it is time we had a new look at the communications with the people of Ontario—and especially at the Toronto Star and the Globe and Mail in Toronto.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Star and the Globe and Mail are nothing but patsies for the Premier; nothing else but patsies.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: That is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Sargent: All right. I will say a lot of things that some members don't agree with; but I have the guts to say them and I think I am right.

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox): They say an empty wagon makes a lot of noise.

Mr. Sargent: Well, time will tell.

But remember this—whether you like the Republic of China or not—there is a Chinese proverb which says: A thief is a thief whether he steals a diamond or a cucumber. And to sell government contracts or raise money by them, by our law is a crime; and yet nothing happens.

If the House is interested, here is what McLuhan has to say about the whole subject:

The Mafia is no more extra legal, or extra constitutional, than political parties and their machines. The hidden rim spin of information speeded up bypasses written legislation and restores the oral tradition in all transactions. [He quotes Shakespeare where he says:]

“Caesar never did wrong without just cause.” So the oral tradition easily penetrates the innumerable loopholes inherent in any written code. However, the gap between the old legislation and the new fixers creates a world of ever more rapid change, the natural results of pushing this process first, the reign of organized crime; and then comes the retrieval of the ancient cliché of common or oral law. [He finalizes by saying:] Where there is no remedy, there is no crime.

And that is the Premier's situation today: "Where there is no remedy, there is no crime."

Now taking this Provincial Auditor's report, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that it is an indictment of dereliction of duty, management, corruption, misappropriation of funds.

If the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) is responsible for this mess, why should he not make a full-scale report to the people of Ontario as to why he should not resign his seat? He was in charge of this department; he was the public Treasurer—and we have this fantastic loss of money to our people. How could one man have the audacity to sit in this House a few weeks after he resigned because of a conflict of interest.

Now we have the situation, Mr. Speaker, where Mr. Spence all of a sudden becomes a virgin. He discloses 130 pages of shocking news to the people of Ontario, but, in all charity, I don't think he wrote the report. I give the credit to Mr. Groom, the new auditor. I commend him for this fine effort. If this is a yardstick of what is going to happen in this audit department in the future I'm very happy about it.

But I will say this, it's a shocking thing that for the past 30 years this kind of being charitable—what can I call it?—when we have millions and millions of dollars being lost, mishandled, misappropriated by the government. What has happened in the past 30 years if there's $50 million lost here?

Mr. Deacon: On just one item.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, it's $50 million on one item. But if there's $100 million, or whatever it is, you multiply it by 30 years. What has happened to the people's money for the past 30 years?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Tell us who got the $50 million.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Tell us who got the $50 million.

Mr. Sargent: Well, if the member will look around he'll see one area where there's $15 million from the federal government which should have been used and wasn't. But that doesn't matter. The point I'm trying to make is, we're supposed to have faith in this front bench here, as the people who can run our affairs properly, but we realize this, that in politics the whole game is who will have control of the contracts to give to their friends. That's what the members opposite insist on having to protect the establishment.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Is this the member's speech toward a bid for the leadership?

Mr. Bullbrook: It's just what the people of Ontario are asking about, that's what the speech is about.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): If they want to hear a leadership speech I'll chat.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, we know what it costs for a member of the opposition to be elected. We have to mortgage our homes, borrow money from the bank—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): What about the Downtowner?

Mr. Sargent: Even the NDP fellows don't have any. Each one of the Tories, when he runs, gets a cheque for $25,000 and he can salt $15,000—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Listen, don't kid me! I've been talking to members who are better friends than the member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman), who've told me this.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: All right, the Conservatives spent $50,000 in St. George. Is that right, or is that wrong?

Mr. J. M. Jessiman (Fort William): My cheque must have been lost in the mail.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I want to tell you what it costs to be a member of the opposition. The people who serve here are the NDP. We are true democrats.

Mr. Good: That's right.

Mr. Sargent: We believe in democratizing our society; that we don't have to be beholden to the establishment like those fellows over there.

Mr. W. Hodgson: That's a good word.

Mr. Good: Want to take over the mortgage on my house?

Mr. Sargent: So they must give us marks for that—that we put our money where our mouth is.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): In that case the member has a lot of money!

Mr. Sargent: Yes, I guess he's right there. I asked for that one.

I would like to ask the Premier, what kind of a deal was made with the brewers—the liquor corporations—when he allowed them to increase their prices—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Ask the minister. He's here.

Mr. Sargent:—just after the election? No, he wasn't the minister then. How much money did they put into the Tory pot before the election? Did the minister know, were the liquor companies in trouble? Were the beer companies in trouble financially? I didn't know that. But see, Bell said they were in trouble financially so we had a rate increase inquiry. Did we have an inquiry to see if we could raise the liquor prices? Does the minister know that?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): I don't know.

Mr. Sargent: No, I don't think so. I think we had an under-the-table deal that we would say—just after the election—we'll increase the rates. Now, how much money the Tories got I don't know, but it would be interesting to find out.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I know the breweries and distilleries got about $19 million.

Mr. Jessiman: That was the equalization payment for the north to the south.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The member for Thunder Bay uses the same mathematics as the member for Owen Sound.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it was pretty healthy. I think of all that harping over there. If they'd like to hear what I think of their harping they can listen to a Russian fable for a minute. It's interesting to see the parallel between those fellows gloating and harping all the time. I think I can best make my point by telling this old Russian fable.

A small bird lay freezing to death on a country road in Russia. A peasant came along and saw the dying bird, and thought to himself, "If only I had something, anything, just to wrap this bird in, I might save its life, for surely it's going to freeze to death." But unfortunately he had nothing to wrap the bird in.

He caught sight of some cow droppings nearby and he thought in desperation, "Perhaps if I wrap the bird in that it'll warm it enough to save its life." He picked up the bird and wrapped it in the cow dung and laid it gently on the ground and went on his way.

After a while, the dung began to work and the bird started to come to life. The bird felt so overjoyed at feeling warmth again it attempted to sing but all it could emit in its weakened condition was some low pitiful tones.

Just then another peasant came along and he heard the bird's attempt at song and he thought, "Well, poor bird, it's strangling in that cow dung." He picked it up and he moved the dung and laid the bird back on the ground and went on his way. Shortly after, the bird died of the cold.

Now there are three morals to this fable. The first one is it isn't necessarily one's enemies who put one in it. The second one is it isn't necessarily one's friends who get one out of it. And the third moral is when one is in it up to here, for God's sake don't sing!

Mr. Dymond: We use that stuff to make the grass grow.

Mr. Sargent: Well, the headline of the story in the Toronto Star, if I can find it here, is "The Horrors of Housing in Toronto"—no, "Horror Stories about Housing Needs in Toronto," April 5.

We've been watching the minister trying to cope with this very complex department over the years; I've been the critic many times. I'm amazed at the fact that the government still keeps him on the job. He's always quoting statistics. "Statistics," said Mark Twain, "are like ladies of the night—once you get them down, you can do anything with them." This minister, even when he gets them down, still can't do anything with them. I'm talking about the figures here.

We have a case here; in an issue of the Globe and Mail, Friday, March 23, is a story about a chap here in Toronto.

Mr. Jessiman: Doesn't the member ever read the Star?

Mr. Sargent: He bought a home on a 30-year, $30,000 mortgage at 10 per cent interest. His total payment, covering the whole thing, is $354 per month, and over the 30 years he will have paid $131,000 for a $30,000 mortgage. The point I'm trying to make is this: That if the man had the $30,000 to start with he would have saved $100,000. This is what is wrong with this government. It has no concern for people.

Mr. Bullbrook: Just for the banks, the insurance companies and the trust companies. It's got lots of concern for them.

Mr. Sargent: So true.

Mr. Stokes: It's consistent, too!

Mr. Sargent: There's a lot in what the member for Thunder Bay says, but we're going to change that.

Mr. N. G. Leluk (Humber): The member for Grey-Bruce should keep on dreaming.

Mr. Sargent: I am involved in some land I have; I own it personally. I am talking about doing a project for low-cost housing and this project is called Quadrex.

We have a 500-home development in Hull with which I tried to get the minister's attention. I presented it to the new Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), but he has done nothing about it.

In effect, we have houses down there selling for $11,000. These are three-bedroom homes selling for $11,000 and $13,000. I'm sorry. The $11,000 home is a two-bedroom one and the $13,000 is a three-bedroom home. The technique they use is steel and concrete for building a Quadrex housing unit. I've been down to see them and they're simply a lovely development.

I'm going to put a development of about 70 of those in Owen Sound because I see the need to give people housing which they can afford.

Mr. Rhodes: Is that a philanthropic move on the part of the member or is he going to make money?

Mr. Sargent: Pardon?

Mr. Rhodes: Is that philanthropy or is the member going to make money?

Mr. Sargent: I believe in the free enterprise system as the member for Sault Ste. Marie does. Mr. Speaker, we have been hearing a lot about the Niagara Escarpment.

Mr. Stokes: He believes in ripoffs, but just little ones.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): In partnership with Shouldice.

Mr. Sargent: The Ontario government, according to the Speech from the Throne, is not telling us very much about this development. The Speech from the Throne announced that legislation concerning land use and control will be introduced and did so in the usual grandiose terms. "The preservation of our physical resources is one of the most urgent requirements facing all governments today," it goes on to say.

We have watched this development up our way, in the Bruce county area, and we have been told they are going to acquire 93,000 acres in my riding. A couple of years ago a local citizen bought a tract of land and he sold it to an American for $35,000. A few months later this department bought the land from the American for $350,000.

We have a situation there, Mr. Speaker, wherein the warden of the county has been barred from meetings with the officials. At another meeting, two reeves and one deputy reeve, members of the press and members of the public were excluded by this force from the government; and when they tried to bar me and the press, I said to try to stop us! So we barged in and we had this meeting.

But it is a long, sad story. I can go on two or three pages and tell members of the complete lack of continuity and follow-through, but I will finalize the last page. It says:

On April 6, 1972, McKeough confidently boasted that he foresaw no difficulties with members of the board in terms of land acquisition, that all was going according to schedule.

We can't get any planning items approved. The whole peninsula is in limbo. No one can undertake any development of the land because the government plans to acquire 90,000 acres. I say it is one hell of a mess. The Bruce Peninsula is in limbo because no one there knows what is going one.

Repeatedly I have asked—

Mr. Leluk: They need a new member.

Mr. Sargent: Well the member should try that some time. I would like to run against him some time!

This member—I get them all mixed up, Bert Lawrence is his name—I asked him repeated times. And he said: "I don't know, you will have to ask Leo." And Leo can't give answers, because Bert has got to ask somebody else. So it's a big shambles of responsibility; and it is hard to believe it can happen in 1972.

Mr. Laughren: We would like to ask Bill, but he speaks only to God.

Mr. Sargent: That's right. When you meet him in the hall in the morning and you say "Good morning," he says "Thank you."

Today the Treasurer (Mr. White) was saying in the House that the member for York-Forest Hill approached him on his approach to regional government. I just thought; he's appointed another series of committees, a couple more; municipal liaison committee—we are the most 'committeeing' country in the whole world. We must have hundreds, or 200 or 300 committees around here costing us maybe $50 million a year. No one seems to know; we have committees coming out your ears.

I think of the time the grand old man of General Motors, Charles Kettering, was working in his lab one day in 1927 and someone rushed in and said: "Charlie Lindbergh has just flown the Atlantic alone." And Kettering said: "Hell that's nothing, let him fly it with a committee!"

I think that's about what happens in this place.

But, Mr. Speaker, let's have a look at the ethics of this blooded group we have here.

Let's start with the member for Chatham-Kent. He was caught in a land deal, so he resigned because of alleged conflict of interest. I don't know how you can measure, but it goes back further than that. I'll complement that by saying that he resigned to keep the lid on. How do the members like that one? Yes, there is a lot more to it than ever came to the surface and that would be coming to the surface if anyone wanted to press it.

And what happened in the London subdivision mess down there? When it takes anyone in this province a good eight months, a year or two years to get a subdivision plan approved from the raw plan to the final, what happened in London? The president of the Conservative association boasts to his friends, "I can do it for you in 30 days." How do the members like that one?

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): The member should hire him.

Mr. Sargent: We can't because we haven't got his connections with the government. He owns the government.

Mr. Laughren: It is like getting a liquor licence.

Mr. Good: In his hip pocket.

Mr. Sargent: And now we have this minister, who resigned in very much disfavour, back in his seat and second in command, I understand, I don't know. But what a charade; what a mess.

During his term of office he was the golden boy. He cost us hundreds of millions of dollars in regional government. And look at the mess in this book as provincial Treasurer. I can tell the House he was party to loading booze on the aircraft down at the island airport—numerous time I saw this—and yet they refused, they arrogantly said to me, "You cannot see our logbooks." What kind of a group is this that allows this to happen? It is amazing how they can.

We have the Attorney General (Mr. Bales). He was caught in a land deal. He offered to give the money back to charity.

Mrs. Campbell: What charity?

Mr. Sargent: What would have happened if he hadn't been caught? Wouldn't he be in an awful spot—he couldn't give it to charity. Wouldn't that be terrible? But luckily he was caught and he can give it to charity.

Mrs. Campbell: What charity?

Mr. Sargent: I don't know. He'd have to keep the money; that would be awful. He was at a meeting the other night and someone asked him—this is how much this man consumed—what he thought of the Indianapolis 500. He said, "I think they're all guilty."

Mr. Rhodes: That is 1949 vintage.

Mr. Leluk: That is an old joke.

Mr. Sargent: He's an old guy.

The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) thought, "I might as well get on the merry-go-round too." He said, "I'll pave my barnyard." He gets $3,000 to pave his barnyard. He might as well.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: How many thousand?

Mr. Sargent: Three thousand. Does the member want more than that?

An hon. member: What's important? Does the member mean if it was only $1,000 he would be less guilty? Is that it?

An hon. member: He made the rules.

Mr. Villeneuve: That is all he was entitled to.

Mr. Stokes: And it was meted out on the basis of need.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: We'll get to you too, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stokes: Kind of hurts, eh? How much did you get?

Mr. Sargent: Now you take the Cuban ambassador, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence). He thought it would be nice to take a trip in a plane. He didn't like the treatment he got in the House. You guys weren't very nice to him.

Mr. Good: You are lucky you have your own plane, John.

Mr. Sargent: Now to Charles MacNaughton. He's out of here now. He didn't get caught. He retired a wealthy man. I can tell the House there will no tag days for Charlie MacNaughton. We'll leave that one there.

Next, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Crossman). We are getting down the line here. He was removed from his cabinet post on the liquor board because of conflict of interest. The members opposite didn't know that. They've jockeyed him around, but he is still in operation.

Mr. Keith Brown was going to be a cabinet minister. He has a sweet land deal in Peterborough. He didn't get caught, though. It elected one of the NDP members one time.

Then we had the $1 million furniture and desk deal last year, that "no tender" deal. That was all right; there was nothing wrong with that. There's also the Melchers case that the member for York South keeps bringing up, about a bagman charging $10,000 to get on the shelves. We've had the Bramalea scandals. And we've had the Talisman case, where they sold a liquor licence to Labatt's—and they're still doing it, I understand—or still trying to.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Still selling it?

Mr. Sargent: Well, check the ongoing licence application of Holiday Inn for a hotel in my town. Who owns the land but the vice-president of Labatt's.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The company owns it!

Mr. Sargent: We had hundreds of billions of dollars in contracts set up by Eddie Goodman, a director and legal counsel of Cadillac Development. We had the British Mortgage caper, where Leslie Frost and his friends in Victoria and Grey made several millions of dollars that I know about, because the Province of Ontario loaned him $3 million in credit to buy out British Mortgage. That was completely illegal—completely illegal.

We had millions of dollars in Ontario Development Corp. loans for friends of the government. We have Mr. Caswell, the Tory president in North Bay, who gets good big loans from the Ontario Development Corp. We had a law partner of John Roberts who received $155,000 for his work in the Atlantic case. These things are just accidents; they could happen to anybody!

We all know about the Fidinam case, and the $50,000 payoff there; and the Canada Square deal, whereby a good friend of the Premier received a 30-year deal with a potential profit of $6 million a year for putting up a building on Hydro land for $1 a year on a "no tender" deal.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: My hon. friend is really embarrassing his own members.

Mr. Bullbrook: What?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: He is embarrassing his own members.

Mr. Bullbrook: The hon. member can't be serious. My colleague is telling the truth. Embarrassing us? The member has got to be kidding. Everything my colleague is talking about is absolutely true—$183 million in potential revenue on the Hydro deal; Gerry Moog is a friend of the Premier's. ETV and OISE—the same fellow. The Premier was the Minister of Education when he made that deal.

Mr. Leluk: Who's making the speech?

Mr. Sargent: He's doing pretty well. Leave him alone. He's doing all right.

Mr. Bullbrook: Embarrass us! That'll be the day.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): They can't be embarrassed.

Mr. Sargent: Every time the members opposite get embarrassed, that's what they always say. The hon. member for Victoria-Hamilton is in a rut; he should change his tune.

Every Tory in the House is on a committee of some kind. They're getting free rides some place. It's the old "John Root" style—everybody's milking the government in some way. And it kind of irks us; year after year the NDP and the Liberals sit here and the House is just loaded with Tories. We get pretty sick of their arrogance. Believe me, it's pretty tough to put up with all this arrogance. Pardon me for my arrogance, but I'd rather be this way than knuckle to them.

Mr. Laughren: The strengths are resolved.

Mr. Rhodes: If only the Liberals could strengthen their benches.

Mr. R. Gilbertson (Algoma): They did.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a great concern for the need to consider the small businessman in this province.

Mrs. Campbell: You'd better have; he's almost gone—along with the small farmer.

Mr. Sargent: When one considers all the areas where government is involved, these words of John Kenneth Galbraith come to mind:

In North American society the big business bureaucracy and the public bureaucracy work in close alliance, and the goals of this alliance are essentially in conflict with the interests of most individual members of North American society.

There is a system of several thousand giant corporations which dominates the economic life of the continent, and the bureaucracy of this corporate world in alliance with the public bureaucracy is increasing the focus of public power and is responsible for the inequities and irrationalities which are deeply inherent in the structure of the system in all developed countries.

Or to quote another Canadian, Eric Kierans: "Corporate managers and civil servants keep the same company." I repeat that, Mr. Speaker—underline this: the corporate managers and the civil servants keep the same company, think the same way and deal with other people's money.

Mrs. Campbell: And the assessors.

Mr. Sargent: That's right. They also have the same kind of utter confidence in themselves that they know what is good for the people.

We don't know here—but the civil servants know what is good for the people. However, they do not represent the vast majority of the people who make this economy go.

There is no distinction between the civil servant and the high level bureaucrat of the large corporation. Neither of them is making these decisions for our benefit; and neither of them is handling his own money.

The small businessman has enough problems with the labour market, rising costs, the squeeze on profit margins and the fierce competition. Surely governments need not make it worse.

I always pay tribute to the member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly), for every year he gets up and makes a speech for the small entrepreneur; and no one else on that side of the House goes to bat for the small businessman.

Mr. B. Newman: They don't listen to him.

Mr. Sargent: No, they don't even listen to the member for Eglinton; and he's an average small businessman. What is wrong with the government? Don't they realize that, I guess, 65 per cent of our revenue comes from small businessmen?

Mr. Gilbertson: I'm for them.

Mr. Sargent: I know the member for Algoma. I'll buy those two gallons of syrup right after work.

An hon. member: Let's face it. He's trying to be big overnight.

Mr. B. Newman: Make sure it's not 52 per cent water, now.

An hon. member: Is the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations checking on that?

An hon. member: Has he got a vendor's licence?

Mr. Haggerty: I think he and the member for High Park have got a vendor's licence.

Mr. Good: At the member's prices this year, he wants to get big overnight though.

Mr. B. Newman: Get a quart of that.

Mr. Rhodes: The member for Grey-Bruce should have numbered the pages first.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I've got the wheels down now. I'll be coming in soon here.

We've been watching the final stages of the US takeover here. And we have been loaning them the money to do it; making large loans to US corporations who are in the excess profit brackets.

Time doesn't permit me, Mr. Speaker, to develop these areas of major concern; but this is by far the most important issue in Canada today, especially in Ontario.

I say to the hon. gentlemen that free enterprise left alone without government regulation can destroy itself. It can dominate the rest of the wheel of life—and that's what's happening in our surrender of control of our economic life.

This is why our free enterprise system needs tough government guidelines from the top, which we are not getting from Ottawa or Queen's Park. This latest legislation is not effective; it's closing the barn door too late. It's toothless. We have no real meaning in this legislation.

A couple of weeks ago there was a lead story in the Financial Post about a small firm in Cayuga, down west here a bit. The firm is in the metal casting operations and its accounts receivable were not building up; there was not sufficient working capital to keep going. The owners went around town and had the doctors and lawyers, merchants and friends sign his notes at the bank. He had 35 or 40 employees.

Finally the bank closed in on him and wouldn't honour his cheques. So the man had this alternative: to go out of business, or to sell to a firm in Buffalo. The firm in Buffalo could go to Queen's Park, borrow the money on a forgivable loan, buy the man out and own the operation.

This is what I'm trying to say. We have been in bed with the big corporations for so long that we have lost sight of the fact that people count.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that all of us here who love our way of life read the new book called "The Fall and Rise of Jimmy Hoffa." This will shock members into action. Who really controls Canada?

I was talking to an architect a while ago and he said that in the next 10 years our population here will increase to three million people. He said, "Do you know that in the life of a 40-year mortgage, we've got to build another Canada?" I said, "What's wrong with the one we've got?" He said, "Nothing, but in 40 years we're not going to have 25 million people in Canada—we're going to have 50 million! We will have to have twice as much of everything that we have now, twice as many new homes and twice as many new cars." But we have to protect our economy, our way of life.

In the past week or so I was travelling to North Carolina. I had a drink with a top US executive. He was a vice-president of marketing for the American Tobacco Co. After talking about the book—he was also reading the book about Hoffa—he said he knew Hoffa personally. He said he heard Hoffa say, "With a flick of the switch I can turn America off. I can paralyse America." He said he could do the same thing in Canada. This man who tells the President what to do is the real thing we have to worry about here in the years to come.

Gentlemen, I really believe that we have a great future here. I'm sorry the things I have said have not been in agreement with the other side but we're all working for the same things. We have our own acres of diamonds and everyone in this room is a builder or he wouldn't be here. I hope that we will become active participants in the public drama of our country, in view of the fact that we do care about ethics, about corruption in government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the second occasion I've had to engage in the debate from the Throne. I know a little more now than I did the last time, a year ago, and I know a little more about the role of the Speaker.

At that time I just assumed that Mr. Speaker ruled with a great sense of judgment and fairness and, really, my attitude hasn't changed much in that sense. I do detect though, Mr. Speaker, that a little bit of influence is being exerted on you; I suspect it's in a subliminal fashion, from your right whenever the supplementaries get a little hot. There seems to be a fairly high correlation between the number of supplementary questions asked of the ministers of the government.

Also, I hope that you are able to receive medical attention for your left ear in the next year. Either that or we should install a sound meter that records the levels of sound in the chamber when the "ayes" and the "nays" are called out. There have been several occasions when I was sure there was a congenital defect somewhere, Mr. Speaker.

I realize it is a very difficult problem. You have certain encumbrances about your neck from certain members of the Legislature, both on your left and on your right. I know that makes your problem very difficult.

I would like to welcome to the Legislature the new members who were elected in the last month or so. I've been disappointed already. I don't mean to be uncharitable at this time, and maybe I'll change my mind as the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) starts to feel more at home in the Legislature. I hope that I have an ally in the member for St. George on one of the topics I'm going to talk about this afternoon. I can always hope.

In the past year the vaunted strength of the Conservative government really hasn't been very awe-inspiring to the opposition. Those of us who were elected in 1971 in particular find it remarkably easy to detect flaws in the administration of the province.

Now there are admittedly a few of the ministers who make our job easy. In other words, there are ministers who really don't need to be criticized by the opposition because the criticism would come anyway from the media, would come from perhaps the Auditor and from the public at large.

I'm thinking, for example, that the situation in the Ministry of Health has been so bad that, whether there was an opposition or not, there would have been widespread opposition or criticism of that ministry in the past couple of years.

The rise and fall of that particular minister, the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter), has been really remarkable to see. It's been remarkable to see him go from his rather quixotic stance or activity of tilting at the windmills or at the status quo, to prostrating himself at the feet of the medical and dental professions.

That's been a rather tragic fall, I feel.

We could really dismiss that whole situation in the Ministry of Health as being a nightmare, except that there is too much at stake there. There's too much at stake in terms of the cost to the province, and in terms of delivery of health care to the province. I think that it means that since we cannot dismiss the nightmare that the minister must be dismissed from that ministry.

The Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. McNie) is another minister who is going to make criticism easy from this side of the House. I say going to, Mr. Speaker, because so far his pronouncements have been devoid of any kind of substance that would allow the opposition to sink its teeth into.

He's referred to by the Ontario Federation of Students, as you may know Mr. Speaker, as the "benevolent marshmallow"; and I'll leave it up to you to determine whether that's an apt description of the minister or not.

He's clearly, I believe, in the hands of his ministry and management board; and perhaps even the Deputy Provincial Secretary for Social Development.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): There are a lot of malignant marshmallows over there too!

Mr. Laughren: Yes, there certainly are.

But the new Minister of Colleges and Universities, I think, has set a new level of dialogue at the post secondary level. You probably remember, Mr. Speaker, the fellow who is the present Treasurer (Mr. White) and his slogan of "more scholars per dollar." Well there is something about that ministry that lends itself, I guess, to these outbursts of great prose, because the new minister is putting it together a little differently.

This is how he says it when he's talking to the Sarnia Construction Association's 6th Annual Apprenticeship Graduates Dinner on March 9 in Sarnia. He's summing up his remarks for the evening when he says this, and sort of telling people what it is like to be a Minister of Colleges and Universities. He says:

That's the way it goes in this ministry. Steamfitters and plumbers tonight, opera and ballet tomorrow; with library conferences and student sit-ins the day after.

That the Minister of Colleges and Universities—but I don't want to dwell on him very long, because I have a large assortment of speeches from the minister, I'm sorting them out and will deal with them in more detail during the estimates of that particular ministry.

Mr. Lawlor: Most of the speeches are like soap operas, aren't they?

Mr. Stokes: That was speech No. 18B that he was quoting from there.

Mr. Lawlor: That was the macaroni-and-cheese speech!

Mr. Laughren: The members have prompted me to read them another of his quotes. This, once again, is to the same group, the Construction Association's Apprenticeship Graduates Dinner, and he says:

You know, even in North America we may have become overly attached to our institutions. We point with pride to a multi-million dollar complex for education or commerce. Cities vie with each other for the honour of having the tallest building and these structures house companies and agencies and government ministries, each with their own little or large areas of responsibility.

So far it's not bad, Mr. Speaker. It's a real in-depth analysis.

We go to school. We go to the office. We go to the factory. All are institutions. The only thing that is missing from the story so far is Dick and Jane.

There are some who advocate an end to institutions. Well I don't. Among other things I wouldn't want to be blamed for putting the construction industry out of business.

Mr. Lawlor: Is that ever fatuous!

Mr. Laughren: That's just a sample, Mr. Speaker. We really must deal with the Minister of Colleges and Universities in much much more detail during the estimates.

Mr. Stokes: Does the member mean he is going to build more institutions?

Mr. Laughren: Completely fatuous.

Mr. McIlveen: I think the member for Nickel Belt should get an Oscar for this performance.

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, thank you. That's the parliamentary assistant to the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) speaking, in the front row of the Tories.

Another new minister, Mr. Speaker, who, I think, so far has had unusually good reviews from the critics, is the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Clement). It's good to see him here; it's good to see him here.

An hon. member: Relations; Commercial Relations.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): He's the only minister who is here.

Mr. Stokes: No more affairs over there; they are all relations.

Mr. Laughren: I detect a Potter-like stance in the new minister—Potter-like, the way the Minister of Health was a few years ago. But I would caution the minister—

Mr. Lawlor: Aw, the member wouldn't wheel him Potter-like.

Mr. Laughren: I'd caution the minister lest he end up with the same fate as the Minister of Health.

I must say that I cannot be as generous as other critics in my assessment of the minister, particularly because of a situation which is occurring in the Sudbury basin for the last couple of years. In that particular situation, the minister is very much aware that a subdivision development there has caused a great deal of heartache for a lot of people.

In that subdivision in Chelmsford, people made downpayments and subsequent monthly payments to the mortgage holder, only to find that the downpayment was not being applied to the mortgage. Indeed, the transfer of land had not even been made from the mortgage holder to the would-be purchaser, although the mortgage holder had agreed that this would be done, and the real estate salesmen had promised it would be done and that the purchaser would not have to hire a lawyer of his own.

Then the next thing that the would-be purchaser knows is that he receives a notice from the bank that his rent will now be paid to the bank. Well, it's an incredible situation to have made a downpayment, and to have made subsequently what you thought were monthly mortgage payments, only to find out that you were paying rent all the time and that your downpayment was down the pipe.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Who engineered that?

Mr. Laughren: Well I'll come to that.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations at that time—I must say, not the present minister—and the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) were both made aware of the situation. The amount of time that elapsed between the time they were warned and the time that any action at all was taken is just deplorable. It allowed the developer—in this case Ross Shouldice—to wheel and deal, certainly not to the benefit of the homeowners, and one would only have to assume that it was to his benefit that he was allowed to wheel and deal as long as he was.

The legal entanglements in that situation became absolutely ludicrous in the month of March this year when individual homeowners were served with a summons naming them in a $272,800 suit.

Mr. Foulds: Shame!

Mr. Laughren: To make it even more ridiculous, co-defendants with those homeowners were Ross Shouldice and some of his cronies. It is an absolutely ridiculous situation.

The whole story of that Shouldice subdivision in Chelmsford is one of land speculation, misrepresentation, fraud, usurious interest rates, substandard construction, contempt for the law and for people, and a fund-raising land speculator for the Conservative Party by the name of Ross A. Shouldice.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Outstanding Tory, eh?

Mr. Laughren: The Shouldice project itself has raised yet again the question of the integrity of the government and some of the people who are supporting its policies. It is just too much to ask us to believe that the political affiliations of Ross Shouldice had absolutely nothing to do with the time that elapsed between the time the government was made aware of the problems in that subdivision and the time that it took any action at all. To this date, Mr. Speaker, there has been no public inquiry announced into the affairs of that subdivision and no charges have been laid.

Mr. Stokes: Why?

Mr. Laughren: The real losers in this whole situation, Mr. Speaker, are not necessarily those people who put down the downpayment only to find that it didn't apply to the mortgage or they didn't have title to the land, although they are losers, too, of course. The real losers are the people in that subdivision who bought their homes there several years ago. They now have a substantial equity in that subdivision; they have made repairs on their homes and they have a stake in that subdivision.

Now how in the name of heaven do you expect those people to be able to sell their houses for any cause whatsoever, if they get transferred or if they want a larger home, or if they just want to move? Who is going to buy a home in that subdivision with the publicity that has surrounded it? And the publicity is the fault of the government, not the local members in the Sudbury district, because the only way we could get any action at all in that subdivision was by creating some sort of embarrassment for the ministers of the government.

There are at this time 50 empty houses in that subdivision, and it is inevitable that that subdivision will deteriorate unless something happens. The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) continues to ignore the situation entirely. He should have set a precedent by putting that entire subdivision under trusteeship and proceeded to rent or sell the homes in that whole subdivision once they became empty. He has refused to involve himself whatsoever.

He would have set a precedent, true, but what is wrong with that? The whole problem of the subdivision, Mr. Speaker, is one that the government really must realize requires a public inquiry; and quickly, too, not to allow it to drag out, because as time goes on the legal entanglements get worse.

If that subdivision was put under trusteeship so that people in the subdivision could come to the trustee, in this case Ontario Housing, with their legal problems, with problems they might encounter if they had to sell, Ontario Housing Corp. could attempt to rent the homes or to sell them if there were buyers for them.

So I think that the three ministers, at least in this situation—the previous and the present ministers because there has been sufficient time to lay charges—the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the Attorney General and the Minister of Revenue have really abdicated their responsibilities to the people in that subdivision. When you think of why they are abdicating their responsibility; when you think of the person on the other side—I am thinking now of the person who developed the subdivision and who pulled all the deals in there; and I search for words to describe that man. The words that best express it, without using language that would offend the members of the Legislature, is that—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Call him a parasite.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): There is no language to offend the members.

Mr. Laughren: Well, I'll go a little further than that. When you consider the number of people who have been hurt and the inaction of the government, and all for a two-bit, devious, scheming land speculator by the name of Shouldice, I can draw no other conclusion, Mr. Speaker, than that he has been protected and has been allowed time. I hope that it comes to an end very, very shortly.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, when I see the land holdings and the land speculation and deals that are carried on by the members of this government, as released to the press, I despair that we are ever going to clip the wings of the land speculators in this province. I fear they are one of a kind.

Among some of the other deficiencies of the Throne Speech read by the Hon. Lieutenant Governor was the absence of any kind of commitment at all to improve the role of women in the Province of Ontario, in this the country's most industrialized province.

It is not because the government has not been made aware of the need for the reform of our laws. The Ontario Law Reform Commission in 1969 made some very specific recommendations, and they have all been completely ignored. Those recommendations dealt with family law. They would have improved, somewhat at least, our rather antiquated system of justice as it applies to women in marriage.

The Ontario Committee on the Status of Women submitted to the government in March of 1972 a brief of considerable substance, and urged that two very specific recommendations be implemented without delay. These were the two: One, the establishment of an implementation committee to deal with the relevant recommendations, some 60 in total, of the federal Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada.

The committee was to consist of civil servants, representatives of women's groups, trade unions, professional associations, and members of the general public. I would suggest that there be a strong contingent of elementary school teachers and guidance counsellors on such a committee as well. Of course, at least half of the members of that committee should be women.

The second recommendation of the Ontario committee was that a member of cabinet be assigned to co-ordinate the implementation of the report of the royal commission. I was most disappointed to note that the Speech from the Throne made no mention whatsoever of such a committee. One would have hoped that with two women members in the government—one of them in the cabinet by the way—such a committee would have been recommended or would have been implemented and the opposition would not have to be prodding the government into taking this first step toward justice for women in this province.

If the member who represents the riding of Scarborough East (Mrs. Birch) is anything other than a token appointment to that cabinet, let her come forward and be counted by insisting that at least the recommendation of that committee be implemented.

This government creates select committees willy-nilly on such pressing sociological and ideological conflicts and problems as snow-mobles and land drainage, and ignores the injustices of our society toward half the population. It is inconceivable to me how the two women members of this government can continue to sit in this chamber while the government refuses to accept the fact that there is a problem or that there are injustices.

Mr. Deans: They are so embarrassed they are not here.

Mr. Laughren: The blame for the status quo, of course, lies not just with the government and not just with men in our society but with society at large in the way in which women have been delegated to inferior roles — not just now but for centuries. Surely if this government does not implement reforms the blame for the continuation of sex discrimination in the province will lie increasingly with it.

There is nothing to be gained by stalling. There is recognition that the present injustices are universal, and there is absolutely no justification for this government prolonging its present state of inertia. There is no question that women are playing an increasingly active and responsible role in society.

Mr. Lawlor: Look at the member for Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve) over there. He is a male chauvinist.

Mr. Laughren: I hope the member for Lakeshore will let me know if he can find one who isn't.

There is no excuse for women, as members of the work force, not being entitled to, and receiving—I emphasize the words "and receiving", Mr. Speaker—the same rights as other working people. Yet such is not the case. Despite there being a women's bureau within the Ontario Ministry of Labour, discrimination continues and no charges are laid.

I emphasize the fact that they should receive the benefits because it is one thing to put in legislation that there shall not be discrimination but it is another thing to ensure that women in our society actually are not discriminated against. It is one thing to say, for example, that we must have equal wages for equal work but it is not happening because the government doesn't care.

The fundamental premises of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women are sound. They are not radical, not even for that group of—what is the right word?

Mr. Foulds: Inert male chauvinists.

Mr. Laughren: No, I was thinking of something much more reactionary than that.

Mr. Lawlor: Is there anything more reactionary?

Mr. Laughren: Yes there is; it is from the ice age though.

Mr. Foulds: Deep frozen male chauvinists?

Mr. Laughren: There were four basic premises of that royal commission:

1. Women should be free to make the choice as to whether or not to work in or outside their homes.

2. The mother and father in society are responsible for the care of children.

3. Problems related to pregnancy and childbirth place a special onus on society to assume more responsibility for dealing with these problems.

4. Society must be prepared to afford special consideration to women because of the need to catch up and erase the discriminatory practices and conditions of the past.

Those are the four premises of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. One could categorize the problems of sex discrimination endlessly. There are probably three aspects of discrimination against women which are most obvious and those are the ones I will deal with—education; the place of work; and the care of children.

Education has, of course, played a major role in the stereotyping of women and their roles. That stereotype has been reinforced by the realities of post-secondary education and subsequent employment opportunities—or lack of them—when they graduate. It's understandable, of course, that with the traditional concept of women as domestic chattels they would consider themselves as either incapable or unworthy of higher education. As a result, their involvement in social or economic functions was a token one, and the cycle was complete—truly a self-fulfilling prophecy.

It's absolutely essential that in order to overcome the centuries of conditioning that our educational system be jolted out of its present lethargy. This is a difficult task. That bureaucratic bastion of empire builders is more dedicated to retaining the status quo than to the concept of equality in democracy. But jolted it must be.

Mr. Foulds: Right on!

Mr. Laughren: It is becoming clearer all the time that that jolt must come from outside the ministry itself, and outside the government. We can only hope that societal indignation will manifest itself in ever-more uncompromising demands by parents, by students and by teachers that sex discrimination be removed from our schools. This government, through the Ministry of Education, should adopt books, and only books that portray women in diversified roles in society.

Guidance counselling must assume a major responsibility for encouraging girls to continue their education in virtually any field, according to their interests and abilities. Career counselling must also provide girls with a greatly broadened horizon of job opportunities.

The physical education programmes in our elementary, and particularly our secondary schools, have been guilty of discrimination. Enormous sums of money are allocated to the boys' athletic programmes, such as football and other team sports, while the girls tumble on mats in the gymnasium. Does anyone believe for a minute that the large, expensive facilities such as football fields, swimming pools and gymnasiums would have been built for girls' programmes?

The girls are encouraged to develop one set of skills and the boys another. Naturally, the boys' sports lead to the reinforcement of stereotype sex roles again—hard-nosed, muscular and swift.

Surely the budgets of the girls versus the boys phys-ed programmes should be examined. The present programmes are not, in the long run, in the best interests of boys either, since football, for example, is hardly a life-long leisure activity that most men pursue.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Tell them what Norman Mailer said about men who play football.

Mr. Laughren: Yes; I don't think they're ready for it.

Mr. Lewis: No, I don't think they're ready for it either.

Mr. Laughren: Better to train both sexes in sports such as tennis, badminton and so forth—activities they may very well engage in throughout their adult years.

The provincial colleges of education and the teachers' colleges also have a responsibility to offer courses that examine sex stereotyping and provide suggestions on eliminating sex discrimination from the schools. Of course, the boards of education must cease their discriminatory policies as well, of promoting men to positions of responsibility, both in the schools and at the board level. Surely seeing virtually all the administrative positions filled by men has an adverse effect on the deliberations of a girl choosing a career.

Even the salaries of women and men elementary and secondary school teachers vary significantly. In Canada—I must exclude Ontario and Quebec here because the statistics were not available to Statistics Canada.

Mr. Foulds: I wonder why.

Mr. Laughren: I wonder why too.

Mr. Foulds: I wonder why Ontario's afraid to reveal those figures.

Mr. Laughren: The salaries of men elementary school teachers were 25.2 per cent higher than those of women. At the secondary level, men's salaries were 17.7 per cent higher. These are very significant figures since they are from a sector of our society that pays equally for equal qualifications.

This is very important, because of course it shows rather starkly, I think, that establishing equal pay legislation, which we have in this province, does not solve the problem entirely. Of course it helps, but it doesn't solve it.

Although Ontario has the highest participation rate in Canada for women in the work force, they are there as an inferior sector. This is at least partly caused by the smaller proportion of women who graduate from our post-secondary institutions.

According to Statistics Canada, 35 per cent of full-time enrolment in Canadian universities in 1970 was comprised of women. Their projection for 1980 to 1981 indicated only a slight improvement, to 39 per cent. The picture at the graduate school level is even worse, with only 21 per cent of enrolment being female in 1968.

Even more dismaying is the fact that in 1928, 28 per cent of university graduate enrolment was female. In 40 years, this is a decline of seven per cent in graduate enrolment, despite the fact that girls generally perform at a higher academic level in our secondary schools.

At the doctoral level in Ontario only nine per cent of doctoral degrees awarded in 1970 were to women. Of 16 selected years between 1931 and 1970 inclusive, only 230 doctoral degrees were awarded to women out of a total of over 3,500 awarded. It should be clear that the problems at the post-secondary level are a result of earlier conditioning in the school system as well as at home and in society at large.

For this reason, it may very well be necessary to offer special assistance to women in the form of scholarships, grants or bursaries in order to encourage them to continue their education. In particular, once again as a temporary measure, there should be special incentives for women to enter a more diversified range of professions, such as law, medicine and engineering. Until the faculties of our colleges and universities are more fairly staffed by women, it will be difficult for female students to envisage post-secondary teaching as a career. This could be somewhat alleviated by special incentives for women to continue into graduate programmes.

While the problems of sex discrimination in our educational system are serious, they are even more shameful in the whole field of employment. Despite ever-increasing participation in the labour force, women continue to be discriminated against in almost every conceivable fashion and occupation.

I really must express my amazement, Mr. Speaker, at how docile women's organizations have been. There are those in our society who regard the leading spokesmen of the women's organizations as radical. But when one examines the facts, even superficially as I have done, the reaction is one—must be one—of disbelief. Perhaps docile is not a good word to use.

Mr. Lawlor: The government's not only anti-human, it's even anti-feminine.

Mr. Laughen: That's right!

But the word docile implies apathy perhaps, and I don't think that should apply to the women's organizations.

In the light of the seriousness of the discrimination in the area of employment, I must say that the acceptance of the status quo could only be the result of very effective conditioning on the part of our entire society of both men and women. This government can, of course, shrug its collective shoulders, point to its women's bureau in the Ministry of Labour and claim it's aware of the problem.

If the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) is looking to the women's bureau to rectify the problem, he'd better look again and he'd better look elsewhere. The bureau will not solve the problem. I suppose they'll bring into line a few of the sweat shops of the province and eliminate some flagrant abuses—all without prosecutions. I really wonder if they think that prosecutions are unladylike.

The enormity of the problem is such that no one ministry can solve it. A co-ordinated, concerted drive must be launched to change the attitudes as well as the hiring and promotional practices of employers. But first to be changed must be the attitudes of hiring and promotional practices of the government itself.

In the cabinet of this government sits the Minister of Labour, the same minister who points with pride to the women's bureau. The Minister of Labour is pointing to a token gesture only and his deeds match not his words. The minister's labour-management arbitration commission list, at the latest figure I was able to get, has 41 approved potential board chairmen, and not one woman. He claims he cannot find one. The Ontario Labour Relations Board has 14 members, and not one woman.

Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Labour has plenty of company in his discriminatory ways. On 54 selected boards, commissions, committees, councils and so forth appointed by the government, there are 917 members, of which 46 are women. Only two of those are chairpersons.

It is inconceivable to me that in this day, with the winds of change whistling past their ears, the various ministers would not be more sensitive to the injustices they perpetuate.

Mr. Foulds: The ministers are completely insensitive about all things.

Mr. Laughren: Let me give you a few examples of sex discrimination in the appointment of boards and commissions to show you just how ludicrous the situation is. Perhaps the makeup of some of these boards or commissions has changed in the last couple of months, but when I obtained these figures they were up to date.

The minister's advisory committee on rehabilitation, 11 members, no women; the minister's advisory committee on geriatrics, nine members, no women; Teachers' Superannuation Commission, 10 members, two women; the minister's advisory committee on child welfare, 13 members, four women; the St. Clair Parkway Commission, 10 members, no women; the Ontario Labour Relations Board, 14 men, no women; the committee on university affairs, 13 members, three women; the Ontario Research Foundation, 25 members, no women; Ontario Housing and Ontario Student Housing, 19 members, one woman—I wonder if she feels like a token; Ontario Economic Council, 19 members, two women; the Niagara Parks Commission, 10 members, no women; the Ontario Council of Regents, 15 members, one woman; the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, 13 members, one woman, the board of governors of OISE, 34 members, three women; the Ontario Provincial Library Council, 22 members, four women; the board of governors of Ryerson, 11 members, one woman; the Assessment Review Board, 403 members, eight women; the committee on assessment and taxation of special purpose properties, 19 members, no women; the Ontario Municipal Board, 16 members, no women; the advisory committee on Algonquin Park, 16 members, no women; the Quetico Park advisory committee, 12 members, no women; the pesticide advisory committee, 12 members and no women at all.

Mr. Foulds: What about the ONR?

An hon. member: No women.

Mr. Stokes: Would the minister like a woman on the board?

Mr. Laughren: These are selected organizations. Mr. Speaker, but of course the total of 46 out of 917 indicates the kind of discrimination that's going on. In some cases it is really astounding.

Let me select a few of those, Mr. Speaker. Look at the advisory committee on child welfare; four out of 12 members are women. The Ontario Labour Relations Board, although 38 per cent of the work force in this province is female, there are no women out of 14 members. The Ontario housing committee has but one woman out of 19, even though I am sure that a substantial, if not the majority of the tenants of Ontario Housing are women; one member out of 15. The Ontario Council of Regents has one woman out of 15, and it is a good indication of just how weighted the colleges of applied arts and technology are in their discriminatory practices against women.

Mr. Stokes: Right on!

Mr. Lewis: Did the member mention the arbitration panel?

Mr. Laughren: Yes. But I suspect that the colleges of applied arts and technology are even worse. If we were ever to include the boards of governors of every college of applied arts and technology in this province it would just tend to substantiate what I am saying; it would probably weight it even more and be evident of being even worse than these figures show.

Mr. Foulds: Absolutely!

Mr. Laughren: The OECA, the Educational Communications Authority; one woman out of 13 is just incredible, considering the nature of ETV and the fact that when ETV is beamed into the homes I expect the majority of viewers will be women.

Actually, the organizations concerned with education reveal a great deal about why reform is difficult and excruciatingly slow. If the boards of governors of all our educational institutions were taken into consideration, I think it would just further document what I am trying to say.

Also, the absence of women on parks and environmental committees is most regrettable. Those same men who presided over the deterioration of our environment are now being given the job of protecting that same environment.

I don't think I need to go on any more. The most revealing statistic, I think, is 46 women out of the 917 government appointments on boards and committees. It is really shocking. There is no way that the government can justify that.

Mr. Foulds: Absolutely unforgivable!

Mr. Laughren: I would really hope that the member for Scarborough East would come forward on this matter. I mentioned earlier in my remarks that I was disappointed that the member for St. George did not talk about this in her remarks in the Throne debate. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, we need help if we are going to rectify the situation. The government is obviously not going to do it.

The civil service itself it a beautiful example of discrimination. There are approximately 23,000 out of 63,000 civil servants who are female. It is hard to nail down exactly what is management in the civil service, but the best estimate I could come up with in talking to a number of people is that out of those 23,000 less than 50 have achieved any top managerial positions. It may be considerably less than that.

Of course, the Ontario government doesn't stand condemned alone. Society at large does. But it is up to the Ontario government to rectify that.

Mr. Foulds: They should show some leadership.

Mr. Laughren: The participation rate of women in Ontario has risen steadily to the present level of over 38 per cent. But, by and large, women perform the menial jobs, the low paying jobs, the temporary jobs. They are the first to be fired and the last to be hired. Even when women do the same jobs as men they are paid considerably less, despite legislation to the contrary.

There are two very serious problems to which this government must address itself. First, it must at least attempt to solve the problem of job classification, because job classification now allows employers to classify jobs differently and pay accordingly. The criterion should not be job classification but the actual worth of the labour being performed.

Secondly, there are the promotional practices through which employers promote men first and faster. With 35 per cent of the work force in Canada as a whole, and 38 per cent in Ontario, why is the percentage of women in managerial positions less than 4 per cent? If work of equal value is being performed by women, then rates of pay for women should be raised to the level of men doing perhaps different work, but work of equal value. Employers must be prevented from using different job descriptions to ease out of their responsibility as outlined in the Ontario Equal Employment Opportunities Act.

According to Sylvia Gelber, director of the women's bureau in the federal Department of Labour, between 1961 and 1971 the percentage of women in the labour force rose from 27.6 per cent to 33.3 per cent in Canada, but during this time the percentage of all women in managerial position rose by only 0.2 per cent from 3.7 to 3.9 per cent. This indicates that while women are joining the labour force in substantial numbers they are just not being promoted.

It is possible in industry after industry, and in occupation after occupation, to document the differences in wages between women and men who do the same jobs. To list just a few examples—and these examples were provided by the Canada Department of Labour. These average wage rates per hour: In the tobacco industry, cigarette-making machine operator, average wage for women $4.02, for men $4.24; finisher in leather tannery business, $2.44 for women, $2.70 for men; synthetic textiles, spinner, $2.22 for women, $3.22 for men; a thrower, $2.11 for women, $2.91 for men; in the men's clothing business, a tailor, $2 for women,

$2.84 for men; a bundler in the paper box and bag industry, $1.99 for women, $2.60 for men; in wire and wire products, an assembler, $2.06 for women, $2.71 for men; motor vehicle parts and accessories, an assembler, $2.45 for women, $3.82 for men; an inspector $2.72 for women and $3.84 for men.

I could go on and on, but I think that suffices.

In managerial occupations the percentage differences in men's over women's earnings for the latest year for which statistics were available is 135.4 per cent greater for men. More specifically, in professional and technical occupations the salaries for men were 87.1 per cent greater; in clerical occupations, 53.1 per cent greater for men; in sales occupations, 166 per cent greater for men; and in services and recreational occupations, 120.8 per cent greater.

And these figures, I remind you, are the differences in average earnings in those occupations.

In our schools all across this country, an area that should be the least susceptible to sex discrimination, the average salary differences reveal who gets promoted. Except for Ontario and Quebec, men earn 17.7 per cent more. And I say except for Ontario and Quebec only because those figures once again were not available; only for those two provinces were figures not available. But that doesn't mean that we have any reason to believe that the figures were any different for this province.

And it doesn't matter how much education women have either. For those with no education whatsoever, men earn 84.5 per cent more than women who also have no education. For those with a university degree, men earn 84.4 per cent more.

So while education increases a woman's income, naturally, it does not lower the difference between the two. With no education at all men earn 84.5 per cent more and with university degrees 84.4 per cent more. So education is not the answer as long as this discrimination is practised.

And regionally, discrimination plays no favourites either; and I'll document a few figures derived from survey returns in Toronto. This was in 1971—this is even with the job classifications.

Junior accounting clerk, women $94 a week, men $111 a week; senior accounting clerk, women $117 a week, men $151 a week; senior bookkeeper, women $124 a week, men $162; junior clerk, $85 for women, $94 for men; intermediate clerk, $105 a week for women, $118 for men; senior clerk, $122 a week for women, $153 for men; cost accounting clerk, $104 a week for women, $137 a week for men; material record clerk, $94 a week for women, $133 for men; order clerk, $107 a week for women, $135 a week for men; and tabulating machine operator, $108 for women, $132 for men.

Go get them women's bureau. They are all there to be had. Let's have at least one prosecution this year. Let's set the new benchmark.

The most surprising difference in salaries between men and women occur among the faculties of our colleges and universities. In 1970-1971 men with a doctorate degree earned 13.5 per cent more than women with a doctorate, while men with lesser degrees consistently earned more than women with similar degrees.

It is clear that regardless of the industry, the occupation, the job description or the location in this country, women are discriminated against in the work force.

And the professions are no better. According to Statistics Canada for the latest year available, the breakdown was as follows and Statistics Canada had the figures for 1961, but the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education has updated those figures and projected them as follows for 1971.

Physicians and surgeons, 11 per cent of physicians and surgeons are women, 89 per cent are men; lawyers and notaries, four per cent are women, 96 per cent are men; judges and magistrates, five per cent women, 95 per cent men; dentists, seven per cent women versus 93 per cent men. And engineers, three per cent women —

Mr. H. C. Parrott (Oxford): Does the hon. member want to know why some of these figures are true?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, I sure do want to know why some of those figures are true and if the hon. member could tell me I would be absolutely delighted.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Nickel Belt will sit down, if the member for Oxford wants to tell him.

Mr. Laughren: If he'll stand up and the Speaker will let me have the floor again, I'd be glad to let the member stand up and tell me why there is this discrimination in the Province of Ontario. Stand up on a point of order or a point of privilege and I'd be —

Mr. Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt has the floor, go ahead.

Mr. Laughren: I'm willing to relinquish it temporarily, if the member is willing.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Oxford will be very pleased to explain the male discrimination in his profession and all related professions—and he knows that is true.

Mr. Parrott: Of course. There are valid reasons.

Mr. Lewis: Well then will he just tell us why? What are the valid reasons?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The member for Nickel Belt has the floor.

Mr. Laughren: One of the saddest commentaries in this whole area is that the attitudes of the professions and their governing bodies make it even more discriminatory than the professions themselves.

Mr. Foulds: Hear, hear. Absolutely!

Mr. Laughren: The third serious problem faced by women in the province is the problem of child care. Probably no government action could benefit so many women so quickly as would an aggressive child-care programme for the province.

At the present time there are thousands of mothers—almost half of whom are the only parent running the household—to whom daycare centres offer the opportunity to become a free agent in the work force. A child-care centre should serve not only the poor and the wealthy, but any women who decide their potential as individuals can best be realized outside the home.

Mr. Foulds: Right on!

Mr. Laughren: It is just not possible to assume that child care is the responsibility of the family alone. Society has a collective responsibility to its children and to the mothers who bear them.

Mr. Foulds: That's hitting it.

Mr. Laughren: Because traditionally the mother was trapped in the home is no reason she should remain there in a somewhat sophisticated and highly industrialized society such as we have in Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: That's good stuff; sock it to them.

An hon. member: This is a terrific speech.

An hon. member: It really is. I am enjoying this one.

Mr. Laughren: Put simply, Mr. Speaker, working mothers should have child-care centres available to them. For parents with low incomes or single parent families, child care is probably the only alternative to poverty in the home, with all its subsequent social costs. That's something this government doesn't seem to realize.

Mr. Foulds: Certainly this government doesn't.

Mr. Laughren: Child-care centres offer such families opportunities to break the cycle of poverty, which would pay immeasurable benefits to society in the long run. Child-care centres also offer an exciting opportunity to provide decent delivery of health and social services to children and to mothers at a critical time in the development of the child.

Preventive health care for the children and counselling for the parents are just two benefits that would in themselves justify a substantial allocation of public funds for the development of a variety of child-care centres in the province.

One should not overlook, when one is talking about sex discrimination, the importance in our economic system of the presence of a inexpensive labour pool. And of all the conditioning that has taken place, this probably has the most important ramifications. I understand why it is necessary to have women as a cheap reserve labour pool, but I sure find it repugnant.

Mr. Foulds: We can't accept that, Mr. Speaker; but the Tories can.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I shall leave that for now.

As a socialist I just couldn't make a speech in the debate on the Throne Speech without talking about the lack of a resources policy for this province. As a socialist from northern Ontario, I cannot rise in this Legislature and criticize the policies of this government without expressing my contempt for the ministry that presides over the depletion of the natural wealth of the province.

And of course, as a socialist from the Sudbury basin I cannot criticize the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) without at least talking about or mentioning the International Nickel Co.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): He is stealing the speeches of the member for Sudbury East, stealing his material.

Mr. Laughren: It is not because either I or my colleague for Sudbury or Sudbury East are paranoid about the International Nickel Co.—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Just paranoid!

Mr. Laughren: On the contrary, we often talk about that constituent—and it is a constituent of ours. But the reason we talk about it so much—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: He's cutting in on the territory of the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Just listen and learn.

An hon. member: He's just adding variety and spice.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, it is because the Sudbury basin is completely dominated by that company. It dominates and controls the environment in the Sudbury basin. It dominates the entire economic health of the Sudbury basin. And more important it will dominate and control the future of the Sudbury basin.

Mr. Martel: And the Ontario government.

Mr. Laughren: It has controlled the Ontario government for years.

Mr. Foulds: Certainly the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Mr. Laughren: I really doubt that most people of Ontario realize just how big the International Nickel Co. is.

An hon. member: Pretty big!

Mr. Laughren: Just in land alone it owns 210,000 acres in the Sudbury basin.

An hon. member: It's a shame.

Mr. Laughren: And it has proven ore reserves in this country of 387 million tons.

I might add that those ore reserves are not being depleted. If you look at the ore reserves of the International Nickel Co. for the last 20 years you'll find they are always about the same. As a matter of fact they are higher this year than they were last year.

An hon. member: They buy them.

Mr. Laughren: The reserves are not being depleted. Of course, the depletion allowance they get is because we're supposed to believe they're being depleted, but we know better than that.

An hon. member: It's just a put on.

Mr. Laughren: In fact, let me tell members how big they've been in the past, translated into profits. Since 1894, which was the beginning of the International Nickel Co., although it wasn't called that then, total dividends distributed to shareholders to the end of 1971 were $1,962,952,000; almost $2 billion! The company distributed another $75 million this year.

Mr. Bullbrook: Has the member any idea of how much of that goes out of the country?

Mr. Germa: It is inflationary.

Mr. Bullbrook: What percentage of that would go to the United States?

Mr. Laughren: Probably in the neighbourhood of a half now, but in previous years it was more than half.

The total taxes paid by the entire mining industry from 1919 up to 1971 were $328 million. Dividends to the International Nickel Co. shareholders alone were almost $2 billion. But revenue to the province, in the form of revenue from all the mining companies in the province, was a little over $300 million. That tells us the sense of priorities of this government and the kind of perspective it has on who should pay taxes in this province.

Mr. Germa: Sell them!

Mr. Foulds: Hit the little guy.

Mr. Martel: I don't know why we just don't give it away.

Mr. Foulds: Hit the little guy, that's the Conservative cry.

Mr. Martel: Just give it away.

Mr. Laughren: I would like to speak for a few moments on the resource wealth of this province, since I'm convinced that the government needs some good advice.

I'm also convinced that future generations in Ontario will read, with total disbelief, how we allowed the private sector to ship out our resources for its own short-term benefits because it was more profitable for it to do that than to develop a secondary manufacturing industry in this province. That's the only reason—and when we consider that they're all non-renewable resources, it is all the more sad.

Those ores are being sold out at bargain basement prices. With no overall industrial strategy in Ontario, it is not surprising that the province has developed in a rather lopsided way, with resource extraction in the north and a somewhat more sophisticated development in the south.

Mr. Martel: Wholly-owned by the United States, mind you!

Mr. Laughren: The population pressure in southern Ontario, which has threatened to turn the whole "Golden Horseshoe" into a megalopolis, is at least partly caused by the flow of people from the north because of the lack of job opportunities up there, particularly for the more bright, ambitious young people. The publication of the Kierans report on natural resources in Manitoba has raised in many people's minds the question of ownership of the province's resources. If, as Eric Kierans says, the issue of proprietorship of our resources has already been established—and it is public—then we must determine whether or not we are obtaining the maximum benefit from those resources for the people of our province. It should be clear that as long as our resources are left in the private sector the people of Ontario will not receive the maximum benefits from those same resources.

Simply put, Mr. Speaker, the best interests of the private sector do not parallel the best interests of the public at large in this province.

Mr. Foulds: Right on!

Mr. Laughren: Eric Kierans sums it up just beautifully and I would like to read a little bit of Kierans into the record.

To be satisfied with the new jobs created and to forgo the surpluses and profits inherent in the development of its own endowment is hardly the mark of a strong and mature government. It accepts the role of hewers of wood and drawers of water for its people when they are capable of much more. That role provides wages and salaries and little else.

The profits which direct and finance the future belong to those who have been invited in and this capital formation, which amounts to 28 per cent of the value extracted, does nothing for Manitoban priorities in the fields of agriculture, health, education or whatever.

A developing nation, a province or a colony, may be rich in its beginnings, but when that wealth is depleted through the poverty of its policies nothing remains of the original endowment but the instability, dissatisfaction and political unrest arising from poorly-conceived policies.

Mr. Martel: There is no policy.

Mr. Laughren: To continue:

A new resource policy will undoubtedly bring the government of Manitoba into conflict with the federal government and the large multinational corporations, two formidable opponents. It will not, however, violate prevailing political or economic philosophies.

Then he goes on to sum it up in a very brief paragraph:

Investment in developing natural resources does not require vast investment sums. It's highly profitable and the surpluses could be used to strengthen the economic base and social institutions within a province. Exploitation by the private sector leads to none of these results, providing only temporary employment during the lifetime of the resources. Leases granted by the provinces for nominal fees are the source of large capital gains when sold by successful prospectors to established firms and yield high rates of profit to mining firms. This capital generated from resource exploitation rarely stays in a province to strengthen its economy.

So has spoken Eric Kierans.

A most refreshing aspect of the Kierans report is its rather devastating comments on the myth that mining is a high-risk sector.

The large corporations with their sophisticated equipment in control of markets take very few risks, and the concentration of progressively larger and fewer firms dominating the industry is a trend that probably will continue. During the five-year period between 1965 and 1970 the number of metal mining corporations in Canada declined from 852 to 218 and, in 1969, 36 of those firms controlled 87 per cent of the assets, 86 per cent of the equity, 84 per cent of the sales and 86 per cent of the profits.

Mr. Martel: And that's called free enterprise!

Mr. Laughren: The day of the independent prospector is gone, as is the day when mining was a high-risk enterprise. The taxation of our resource industry has been disgraceful all across Canada, with the corporations and their shareholders keeping 85.3 per cent of profit and only 14.7 per cent going to the people.

Mr. Martel: Fourteen per cent!

Mr. Laughren: If we apply the Canadian figure to Ontario, the result is interesting. Ontario metallic mineral output is about 44 per cent of the total Canadian metallic mineral output and in 1971 totalled $1.29 billion. In that same year, the people in Ontario realized in total revenue from the mineral industry only about $25 million.

Mr. Martel: Isn't that great—$25 million.

Mr. Laughren: When all minerals are considered, the revenue to the province was $27.6 million in taxation on a total output of of $1.55 billion, for a return to the people of the province of 1.78 per cent for their natural resources.

Whenever we talk about the enormous wealth of the Province of Ontario in terms of its resources, we should divide by the figure 56, because only 1/56th goes to the people and the rest goes to the corporations.

What makes it so ludicrous is that we give depletion allowances to the corporations for taking out our own resources. That is the part I find the most incredible—giving them a depletion allowance to take out our resources. It just doesn't make sense.

Mr. Martel: We're subsidizing them.

Mr. Laughren: Eric Kierans has recommended to the government of Manitoba that a 15 per cent mining tax be levied, based on the value of annual output. If this rate had been applied in Ontario, it would have meant $228 million for the provincial treasury in 1972.

Mr. Martel: Instead of $27.6 million!

Mr. Laughren: Any government that feels the necessity to raise the tuition fees in our post-secondary institutions and to cut health costs, surely is irresponsible if it does not tax all the potential tax revenues that are available to it.

The Kierans proposal that reserves be subjected to tax is particularly appealing, because it puts the mining companies on equal footing with other landholders such as farmers. Of course, Kierans' purpose in assessing such a tax is to speed up the pace of repatriation to the Crown of these reserves. In Ontario, even if a 10-cent-per-ton tax on proven reserves was applied, it would mean $38.7 million from the International Nickel Co. alone in 1971.

Surely the provincial Treasurer must salivate at the thought of $228 million in revenue from the tax on output and another $38.7 million from a tax on proven reserves.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Laughren: If all other companies, reserves were included as well, the government would undoubtedly have a figure in excess of $300 million. This would not only provide excess revenue for the province but would effect the same thing as Kierans is saying for Manitoba, speed up the repatriation of our resources to the people of this province, because that's who they belong to and that's who will eventually get them. But it won't be this government that gives it to them.

Mr. Martel: Despite the Tories.

Mr. Stokes: It would run half of the ministries in this government.

Mrs. Campbell: It would bring up more bureaucracy.

Mr. Laughren: I would like to read to the House a couple of figures from the International Nickel Co.'s 1972 annual report, just released and hot off the press.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Laughren: This is a consolidated report, so it includes more than their operations in Ontario, and I hasten to add that. In 1972, net sales were $900,323,000; net earnings—they had expenses—were $109,000,906. Taxes were $42,298,000. But of the $42.2 million in taxes that they claim here, $29.8 million are deferred, so that they are left with a current tax of $12.4 million on $900 million in sales.

Mr. Martel: Poor Inco.

Mrs. Campbell: Wait until they get to the assessments.

Mr. Martel: They're starving.

Mr. Laughren: That is approximately 1.4 per cent of sales and 11.4 per cent of profits. If the province gets 12 per cent rebate from the federal government on its corporation tax, that means the province gets 12 per cent of $12.4 million, which is $1.4 million. That's the corporate, the income tax return, to the province of Ontario for a company that does in total—not just in Ontario admittedly—$900 million in sales. It is less than $1.5 million.

Mr. Deans: Much of it in Ontario though!

Mr. Laughren: Much of it, or most of it in Ontario; certainly the vast majority of it in Ontario.

But let me tell you some of the things that they are allowed to write off: Depreciation and depletion, $56.2 million. Depreciation is somewhat of a legitimate expense, but of that $56.2 million, $9.4 million was depletion. Depletion is not a legitimate expense in a non-renewable resource or in any resource. Deferred income taxes were $19.3 million and writeoff of obsolete facilities, equipment and capitalized exploration, $15.5 million.

So you can increase that profit figure that I quoted to you of $109 million on net earnings. That's what the profits will come out as in the paper—they already have I suppose—$109 million.

But it's not $109 million; it's $200 million. You have to add a further $90 million to that if you are going to get an accurate figure, a true figure that really represents the surplus realized by that company in 1972.

I have one other set of figures, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stokes: Tell us how much what they are investing in foreign countries.

Mr. Laughren: I'd like to compare the taxes and the dividends of the International Nickel Co. for just two years. I won't bore you with all the last 50 or 70 years. In 1971, International Nickel Co. declared a profit of $94.2 million. They paid taxes of zero. As a matter of fact they had a tax credit in 1971, even though they earned profits of $94.2 million.

Mr. Martel: Thanks to Benson.

Mr. Laughren: When they couldn't afford to pay any taxes on that $94.2 million their dividends were $97 million, over 100 per cent of their earnings in 1971—103 per cent of earnings. They couldn't afford to pay income taxes to the people of this country, but they sure as hell could pay dividends of $97 million.

In 1972 International Nickel Co. had a profit of $109.9 million.

Mr. Martel: Poor year!

Mr. Laughren: Very bad year!

Mr. Martel: Bad year!

Mr. Laughren: Taxes, when we have taken out the fluff, were $12.5 million; dividends $75 million or 68 per cent of earnings, while profits were 11.4 per cent.

Mr. Bullbrook: Taxes!

Mr. Laughren: Pardon?

Mr. Bullbrook: The member said profits; he means taxes.

Mr. Laughren: Sorry, taxes were 11.4 per cent of profits, yes.

What kind of nonsense is that, when we are trying to improve the quality of life in the province and in the country, when we allow a corporation to pile up accumulated dividends, retain earnings, allow all sorts of writeoffs and enormous profits, and we get virtually nothing from them to improve the quality of life in this province. It's a disgrace.

Mr. Stokes: They tell me Sudbury hasn't even got a city hall, is that right?

Mr. Laughren: Sudbury does not have a city hall.

Mr. Martel: It also has a tax bill three times higher than any city its size.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: I listened to Benson when he was in Sudbury. He was going to get tough and he backed off all over the ballpark. He was so squeamish. Benson was going to take them on and he backed off.

Mr. Laughren: He sure did. That's evident in the kind of taxation he introduced.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk a moment about energy. The removal last year of the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) from the cabinet sent shockwaves throughout the province because of the fact that he carried a pretty big stick with his multi-portfolios. Now, of course, he formulates policy concerning the energy requirements of the province.

The member's assignment is in order, I suspect, because Ontario is faced with a problem in energy since it uses a lot more energy than can be supplied from within the province. I think that in the years to come the availability of energy in the province is critical if we are going to continue to grow at our present rate.

I was delighted, I must say, to see that the member had not been deluded into thinking that we, in Canada, have an energy crisis.

Speaking in Samia on March 9, the member reminded his audience that the United States had an energy supply crisis, not Canada. It is just remarkable how that parliamentary assistant to the Premier can identify the colonial status of some province, but not the Province of Ontario. Remarkable insight by the member from Chatham.

Commenting on the announced intention of Alberta to increase the price of natural gas, the member expressed sympathy for Alberta's dilemma in responding to Ontario's concern over the increased price of gas. And he said:

All the arguments basically against Alberta proceeding with higher gas prices distilled down to the country asking Alberta to gore its own ox in the interests of Canada, or other parts of Canada, and to be the first in line. Whose ox will be next on the line? Might it be Ontario and its nickel, iron, copper, uranium or even some as yet undiscovered resource? How would we react as citizens, as producers, as a government, if we were asked to forgo the price-setting mechanism of world markets in the interests of Canada?

Well Mr. Speaker, the former Treasurer still believes there is a market price determined by the laws of supply and demand in the resource industry! Of all industry, he believes it of the resource industry! I didn't realize that a former Treasurer of the province would still believe that.

If there is a price-setting mechanism out there, it sure as hell is not set by supply and demand, or in the interests of the people of the country. It is set in the interests of a few giant corporations, not the whole country.

And I also wonder where the member for Chatham-Kent has been while this province's resources were being shipped out hous bolus, at bargain basement prices. And does he know what the tax rate is on our resources?

Here's another quote—and to those people who know him better than I, does this sound like that fervent free-enterpriser from Chatham?

What I do know is that our reserves represent the strong card in our industrial negotiations with the United States. [I could comment on that.] That gas gives all of us, as Canadians, a position of strength, whether we trade it, manage it in return for secondary manufacturing opportunities, and in turn export opportunities.

And then, commenting further on the need for a national energy policy, the member said:

We need a superior organization that is able to impress upon all Canadians and the rest of the world that we do have a preferential future, and that we recognize that right in a manner that is both intelligent and informed, in the widest context of national needs.

Mr. Speaker, that really is too much! That is too much from the former minister who couldn't even come up with an overall provincial plan for development, too much from the minister who couldn't come up with any kind of programme for local development across the province, and too much from the Treasurer who could sit back and see the kind of revenues that we get from our resource industries ourselves.

We receive a negligible amount of revenue from our resources, and he is laying it on the Alberta government and on the federal government that we need a federal policy and that he thinks the federal government is remiss in not having done so. Then he condemns the Alberta government for giving the corporations five-sixths of the price increase while only taking one-sixth for the revenues of the province.

How much did the province of Ontario get when the International Nickel Co. raised the price of electrolytic nickel from $1.33 to $1.53 a pound Sept. 4, 1972? How arrogant can you get, to start telling another province that it is not realizing enough from its resources and it is giving too much to the corporations; and telling the federal government that we need an overall federal plan—when he couldn't do the same thing for the province of Ontario?

It is time, Mr. Speaker, that the province stopped playing footsie with the private sector and brought under public ownership those key resources that are the key to the development of a fully integrated industrial base in this province. There is very little difference between giving the private sector five-sixths of any price increase and collecting less than two per cent of the value of ores extracted.

If the parliamentary assistant is going to make a positive contribution to this province he will see to it that our energy resources are brought under public ownership. This should include the Onakawana lignite deposits, and the uranium mines at Elliot Lake at present controlled by Denison.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let us return the energy crisis to its place of origin, the United States.

Mr. J. Lane (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Was there any agreement among the three parties as to which member would speak next?

Mr. Lewis: They are both Tories, it doesn't really matter.

Mr. Speaker: I see three hon. members on their feet at the present time—four of them now.

Mr. Gilbertson: Mr. Speaker, sometimes there is a little confusion about getting them in order, so if the opposition have no objection I think we will get back on the right track after the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, if that is all right.

Mr. Martel: If they have no opposition?

Mr. Lewis: I understand the member for Algoma gets extra money each year for saying this kind of thing.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, the last word I got was that the Conservatives were withdrawing their speaker so that I would be following the NDP.

Mr. Speaker: If those are the arrangements that were made, the hon. member of the Liberal Party my speak.

Mr. Ruston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with some interest to the former speaker (Mr. Laughren). I can't say that I learned very much from him.

Mr. Lewis: We wouldn't expect the member to.

Mr. Ruston: I will see if I can't enlighten the chamber a little. Since they talk out of their mouths two different ways all the time it gets a little disgusting.

Mr. Ferrier: The member is a pretty good expert on that too.

Mr. Ruston: However, we won't get into that. I know my opposition, as far as I am concerned, is across on the other side. Since the last by-election we know who we are fighting—we are fighting the Conservatives, we are not fighting the NDP. That was shown in Huron where they went down from 3,400 to 1,700, and when rural people come to the conclusion that they are no longer any good then I think the handwriting is on the wall.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to say a few words at this time and I want to congratulate you on the operation of the question period in the last few days. Last week I think it got a little out of hand and I want to congratulate you now for bringing it back into line with a little more order to it.

It is a pleasure, too, to have two new members, from St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and Huron (Mr. Riddell) joining us and I do know that they are very capable members. I might say that the member for St. George happens to be my member for the few months while I am staying in Toronto, so it is a pleasure to have a lady member in the Legislature sitting on my behalf.

I would like to talk for a few minutes on agriculture. There seems to be a lot of publicity lately on meat prices in particular, and I think it's overrated to a great deal, Mr. Speaker. It seems that in the last number of years, provincial and federal governments have not really taken the leadership in any way whatsoever to try to consolidate, or try to see that we had a national food policy or a national agricultural policy, so that the farmers would know where they're going.

We've had no control of production and we've had imports. We've had to fight our prices with prices from other countries because of imports. We've had to fight high costs of operations here because of spiralling wage costs, and the costs of inputs that farms have with tractors, machinery and such things as that. I think in the last 10 years the cost of what we would call an average-size tractor of about 60 to 80 horsepower has about doubled. This certainly has to come from someplace.

The farmers have got efficient. In fact, right now one farmer is feeding about 40 people in Canada. The world average, I will tell the members, is a great deal lower than that. So our farmers have got efficient, and probably have got too efficient because they were not getting paid for their efficiency.

With the talk of the meat boycott and so forth, I see one article here from Nov. 23, 1971, where the Ontario Federation of Agriculture was meeting in Hamilton. The headline was, "Dim Farm Future Pointed." Mr. Ernie Belzaire wrote that. I might say Mr. Belzaire was a farm reporter for the Windsor Star. He passed away only about a month ago. I think he was one of the most able farm reporters in Ontario. The farm people and the agricultural people are certainly going to miss him, because he did understand farming and the whole farming gambit.

We look at meat prices today, and we talk about sirloin steak. I suppose it runs from $1.39 to $1.69. I have figures showing that three years ago sirloin steak was $1.49 in Loblaw's store on Bloor St. in Toronto. I see in today's paper that Loblaw's have sirloin steaks at $1.35 a pound.

The cost of producing a pound of beef has gone up considerably, especially in the last few months. It generally takes about eight pounds of grain to put a pound of gain on beef. At the present time the general cost of producing one pound of meat is about 29 cents per pound of gain. That doesn't include the price of this critter before that; that's just the pound of gain.

So, you can see, Mr. Speaker, with that kind of cost it certainly is necessary to have a price somewhere in the range that we're paying today. We've probably been spoiled in the last number of years. I think among the general public in buying meat and so forth, with our barbecues and everything, every spring and summer everyone gets his barbecue out and I guess he figures everybody has to eat steak. But if you get a cut of meat off a good critter, I would think there's as much protein in any one cut as there is in a cut of steak. So I don't think we all have to eat steak every day of the week. Of course, there is only so much steak you can get off a critter, and so naturally if there's an awful demand for it, the price is bound to go up.

It was only two years ago that the price of pork was about 30 cents a pound. The cost of producing that meant at that time that most producers were really losing money. Now, true, it has gone up in the last few months to around 44 cents a pound, and even up to 56 cents. Now, if we consider that two years ago the federal government paid a subsidy on all pork production in Canada of $5 per head to anyone who had produced them that year, because the price was so low.

The maximum anyone was allowed was up to 200 head, so you could collect $1,000 in subsidy because the price was low.

Well that's being subsidized out of taxation. Certainly we won't have to subsidize any hog growers this year, so we're saving money there. We were paying for it, but a lot of people didn't realize it.

Subsidizing farmers is not really the answer, in my opinion. You're just really fooling everybody. If you really want to buy a car, you pay the price. If you're going to buy a shirt or pair of shoes, you pay the price that that manufacturer figures he has to have in order to pay the wages and operations and get a reasonable profit.

Now, if you tell a farmer to produce a pig at $30 a hundred, and then keep the price of that meat down so that people on low incomes can buy it, that's fine. But when you've got to bring taxes in and pay a subsidy on it, otherwise he's going in the hole. So you're just fooling yourself.

What we should have is that it should be the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. That's the price it should be. If we have people in the low income bracket who cannot pay for it, cannot afford to buy the necessities of life, then it's the responsibility of we the public to have a minimum guaranteed income. If they're on social assistance we have to make that higher so that they can buy the commodities they need, and the person producing them can still make a reasonable profit.

Mr. Laughren: Who is the member to be talking about guaranteed poverty!

Mr. Ruston: Pardon?

Mr. Laughren: Why is he talking about guaranteed profits?

Mr. Ruston: Well, knowing the member's party that's an interesting point. You know, this party here, of course, gets all its financial support from the unions—

Mr. Lewis: Not all. Not all.

Mr. Ruston: —and I see that the unions had a meeting in United States last week and Emile Mazey, the secretary-treasurer of the union, came out with a resolution to have a boycott on meat April 1. If every farmer in United States and Canada says "Well, damnit, we'll have a boycott on every car that the union makes," and didn't buy a car for a year, I wonder what they'd say then.

Mr. Bullbrook: They wouldn't like it.

Mr. Ruston: I wouldn't like that either, because my family work in the automobile factory and they've got to live and we've got to live and the farmers have to live. But that's not the idea of the union heads. "To hell with them," they'd say. "We're just looking after ourselves."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston: That's just the way they work. And I know all about that.

Mr. Laughren: . . . Tell us what to do in Canada.

Mr. Ruston: They are not. I have belonged to the unions. I know how some of the union heads work.

Mr. Laughren: The member really loves to work for them, doesn't he?

Mr. Ruston: Yes. I do. I get along very well with them. I don't take money from them to run my campaign though, like the NDP does.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Where did the member get his?

Mr. Ruston: Why doesn't the member look at my financial statement.

Mr. Bounsall: He doesn't get it from workers?

Mr. Ruston: Yes. I get it from a lot of workers.

Now Mr. Speaker, another thing that we talk about that caused some feed prices to go up and in turn caused meat prices to rise was a higher cost of production. Soybeans in the last few months, as most people are aware, have gone up a terrific lot. I was noticing that the soybeans got up as high as $6.40 a bushel. But the interesting thing is, a lot of that was speculation.

Look at the amount of soybeans that were sold. In September there were 70,000 bushels sold at $3.19 a bushel on the average. In October, 3,184,000 bushels sold—this is in Essex and Kent county, Ontario—at an average price of $3 a bushel. November—2,560,000 bushels at an average price of $3.32 a bushel. December—1,863,000 bushels at an average price of $3.83; January—3,365,000 bushels at an average bushel price of $4.20.

Now, the soybean farmers have gone to the federal government asking for a floor price of $3 a bushel, so at least they will be guaranteed $3 a bushel. I think the problem would have been better for all of us if that price were to stop at about $4 or $4.50; although it is good that someone did get a higher price.

If you go back to 1969 in the area where I live, they had no soybeans at all; and yet at the end of the year they had their farm taxes to pay and everything, the same as everybody else. So it will certainly take them a while to catch up from a disastrous year like that.

We have the tax rebate to farmers that has been in effect in the last two years, and I think that we had some input in that. There was a resolution on the Legislature floor and it was discussed and the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Treasurer (Mr. White) announced it that fall. Now I see by the Provincial Auditor's report that he thinks that it should be put into a special bill instead of being affected just by regulations—and it certainly should. There were a number of people who actually had money sent to them for their farm tax rebates and then mailed it back.

The Auditor's recommendation is that a special Act of the Legislature should be passed, spelling out the rules and regulations for all payments be made on the basis of an application form; and probably at the same time we should designate what a farmer is in order to clear up that bit of legislation.

Mr. Deacon: How did the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) get into that?

Mr. Ruston: It is an interesting point as to whether the Minister of Agriculture would be qualified for that. I would think it best for cabinet ministers not to accept it. It seems to me that that would be the best situation in the community. His farm might be eligible for it, but I think it would be best for him not to accept it.

Mr. Speaker, I also wanted to mention health care. Again, the cost of health care has spiralled a lot in the last few years, but there are one or two things that I think we have probably forgotten about why the cost of health care is up so much; for example, if we look over the past 10 years, there is the number of people who now have access to all forms of health care.

I can recall having been associated with one of the local county co-ops where an awful lot of people just didn't have it. They had what they called an insurance plan, but it only covered them if they had a surgical operation in hospital. If they went to the doctor's office or had eye examinations or something like that, they paid for that out of their own pockets. Now this was available to everyone in the province.

I can recall one time where a person added full coverage for his four children, his wife and himself. And two days after they had the full coverage they all had their eyes examined. That cost us $90, so I suppose he hadn't had them examined for five years. So I think that what we have got here is a case of people making use of the service.

No doubt it is something that we certainly need; and maybe we should have some form of regulation to it with regard to the person receiving that service.

Maybe we should have a card, like a credit card or something, where they go into the doctor's office and a bill is made out, and they sign it—the doctor puts on it how much the service is. At least they know what the doctor is charging. Now you go in and you come back out and you don't know what it is.

When we ran it they would come in and look over their card and say: "Do you mean the doctor charges $30 for that 10 minutes consultation?" And I said: "Well, he is a specialist and that is what he is allowed to charge. It is unbelievable to them. A lot of people don't realize what this is costing us, the taxpayers—and the government. Maybe this is one thing we should have.

Another thing we might find is that individuals may go to one doctor today; and if they don't think they get the right answers, maybe four days later they will go to another doctor. He might tell them something a little different; and maybe he will send them to a specialist. We have seen it happen, where they run to more than one doctor. If we had them on the computer instead of the doctors, we might be able to find out why there are over-usages. Some of the doctors perhaps aren't aware that health insurance is being over-used by some people. I think this is something we should find out in this age of computerization and that perhaps could be looked into.

I want to mention something very briefly, Mr. Speaker, about the purchasing of Hydro rights of way. As you know, in our area we are kind of in a peninsula and we have to have a lot of Hydro lines running down to serve the city of Windsor and the industrial area there. We already have a number of rights of way through, but they are expanding on them, building duplicate lines alongside of them and so forth.

One thing really bothers me. When the Hydro negotiators go in and start talking prices they seem, when they are negotiating at first, to set a price that is not too high, naturally, because it is their first time around. The second time around they may get a little higher. Then if the owner is in a position where he could use a little extra money right then he thinks: "Well, maybe! I am going to have to accept at some time anyway, I can't stop the hydro line." Rather than go to expropriation maybe he'll say: "Well, all right, it sounds pretty reasonable. I'll sign the agreement"

Then someone down the road, maybe the next farm over, someone a little more experienced in financial matters, a little more financially capable of holding out a while longer; he'll maybe say: "Well, I'm not going to accept that. That is not good enough." So the buyer will come back in another month or two and he'll say: "No, I'm not accepting that either." He'll hold out and hold out, and Hydro ends up paying some of these people 25 per cent more than in the original instance when the fellow settled just three or four months earlier.

This is certainly not fair and it is not right. It is the same land and the same value, and they certainly should all receive the same.

I think what they should do is when they make these agreements it should be the same agreement for every farm if it is the same type of soil. They shouldn't have the fellow who is willing to accept the agreement in the earlier stages losing pocket money because he is agreeable to a line going through.

I should maybe mention a thing or two on regional government and local government responsibilities. I noticed some of the areas where the province has put regional government in they are passing some of the responsibilities now carried by the province over to the regional governments; highways, for example. What they are doing, really, is they are sloughing off some of the responsibilities they have had for a number of years onto the regional government. Instead of giving the regional governments a boost they are giving them a kick.

I think of our own area where the city of Windsor annexed parts of about three of the townships adjoining it. Provincial highways—three of them—running through these townships were wholly maintained by the provincial government. As soon as the city of Windsor annexed all the area they had to take over the responsibility for all these highways; all the province now pays on them is 50 per cent. This added charge of operating and maintaining these roads has been a real burden on the local taxpayer.

We had the same thing with roads that were passed on to the county from the province. It is just increasing the burden on the local taxpayer in the real estate tax.

On planning, this was mentioned the other day when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. F. Nixon) made reference to Chatham township — I was reading some of the correspondence on that, going back as far as four or five years negotiating with the Minister of Municipal Affairs about their plan — and the fact they just hadn't got anywhere with him.

I recall in our own area, when we put in the plan in our township, the amount of correspondence back and forth with the department. It was about four years before we finally had it approved.

Certainly planning is a necessity now, but there is one thing that concerns me, and that is whether we are maybe getting a little too stringent with our planning and zoning when it comes to a farm family wanting to pass on a lot or something to the son or daughter.

I know I had some in my own area. It concerns me some when a person has 100 acres and wants to pass a lot or two along to a daughter or son, who may not actually be farming full-time now but may be in a few more years.

In fact, I could see that if farm prices were to stabilize at the prices some of them are now, a number of people who are now in cities working could very well quit and go back to the farm. In the last number of years farming has been very poor—incomes have been poor. A lot of people went to the city to obtain an added income.

Mr. Deacon: Or get some income!

Mr. Ruston: They had to have it to keep the farm going. They have been using the income from cities to keep the farm going for the last number of years.

It's getting near 6 o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I suppose I could end soon but I wanted to mention the flooding conditions in the area. I think we should be taking a really serious look at what we are going to do about controlling the action of the high lake levels on properties. I'm not just thinking of buildings. It's the erosion of the land. It is certainly a serious matter.

I know that the people living there are certainly aware of it but a lot of people are not. We have to have a front line somewhere to stop this erosion, and if we allow the present beaches to go, where do we go from there? We'd be losing more soil. The eroded soil going into our lake system is bad too, because of the pollution coming from the soil itself—the nitrogen and so forth which runs off into the lakes cause pollution problems and cause more growth in our lakebeds, so we certainly do need some form of erosion control on the frontage of our lakes.

I don't think we want a dike all around the whole area but I think we should be certainly experimenting with weirs or groyne out into the lake at certain angles, depending on the wave actions in the areas. It is surprising how some people who have lived in these areas for 30 or 40 years seem to know just where these should be. If we had some engineering done on that, and some of these were put in, at least on a trial basis in the worst areas, I think it would certainly be worthwhile.

I think this is definitely the responsibility of the provincial government. It is really discouraging for people living in the area to attempt to discover who has the responsibility for our lakes and lake frontage. With the British North America Act the federal government has control of the waterways yet the province has the land underneath it. It seems rather confusing to the local people; they ask who takes over? In the United States, of course, the federal government does have control and in many areas it goes ahead and does some of this work. But here, we seem to be at loggerheads as to who should do it.

Personally, I think it is the responsibility of the province to take the initiative—start it and then go to the federal government for assistance. That's really the only way that I think we can go.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's 6 o'clock and I could go on for 15 minutes but—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ruston moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I believe when we rose at 6 o'clock the member for Essex-Kent had the floor. He may continue.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, another subject that I want to mention very briefly has to do with pollution devices on automobiles in both the United States and Canada. I am concerned about the 1973 emission controls. I read an article from the Detroit News of Oct. 22, 1972, and I think it is rather interesting:

When an auto expert starts hoarding cars you have to ask yourself if maybe he knows something the rest of us don't. This summer Leslie Henry bought three new 1972 Mercury Comets. Henry is curator of the transportation collection of the Henry Ford Museum at Greenfield Village. He plans to store two of the cars until the first one wears out then start on the second, and he figures the three cars will last him 20 years. "I'll drive all three until the snow flies," he said "to make sure they are all okay, and while the guarantee is still good, but after that two of them go into storage."

Henry believes this is his last chance to buy a good car. "I think auto performance is going away down starting with the 1973 models," he said, "because of the stringent emission requirements that legislation has put on cars. The standards are a lot tougher than they need be. A tree on your front yard will put out more hydrocarbons than they'll allow from a car. These new rules are going to adversely affect car performance, cars will cost more and they will require extra maintenance."

After talking to a number of people who have 1973 model cars I think that this gentleman certainly has hit the nail on the head. The auto industry is enjoying one of the highest sales years of its lifetime. But at the same time the gasoline mileage of the majority of cars is running from 14 miles a gallon down, and that is the majority of Canadian and American-built cars. A great number of them are doing about 10 miles to the gallon.

So one really has to wonder whether we are really, in effect, doing a great deal of favour to ourselves by having these emission controls so strong, though no doubt they are needed like that in California or Los Angeles and probably in some of the heavily populated cities.

I want to mention about—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): What did they have, some for the country and some for the city?

Mr. Ruston: Could be. I wanted to mention, Mr. Speaker, about issuing of—

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

I wonder if I can break in for just a moment. We have a group of visitors in the gallery, guests of the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mrs. Birch), the YPC group from Scarborough East.

The member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. Ruston: I'm glad to have that pleasant interruption, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it was for a very good cause.

Mr. Deans: I didn't know there were so many.

Mr. Ruston: I am concerned about the issuing of sewage treatment permits in Kent county when I see what happened in Chatham township with the issuing of permits for Multi-Malls.

This permit, I understand, was approved by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) and Kent county health inspectors requested some assistance. The brief time it took to get the permit is amazing when in a number of areas in Kent county—the village of Merlin and the hamlet of Charing Cross—the health inspectors have refused to give sewage permits because they claim that it would be harmful to the environment and cause pollution of the waterways.

If one or two small homes are going to pollute the waterways the way they say, I don't know what this place is going to do. It's going to have 300 homes and a giant shopping centre worth about $7 million or $8 million. One just wonders how they can get approval for such a project and others can't even get one for individual homes.

A matter of great concern to a lot of us is the plight of a number of people find themselves in between the ages of 55 to 65. In my own area there are people who have lost their jobs or are partially disabled and they don't have much in the way of funds saved. They try to get financial assistance to help them along and this, to me, is one of the most serious problems I've run across in my riding. I find the people over 65 who get the new pension allowance that everyone receives in Canada now, get along reasonably well in most cases, but I find that the ones under that age are the ones most in need.

I recall a case I had not too long ago in which the man and wife were 64 or 63 years of age. She was receiving $175 a month pension as a retired schoolteacher but he was not really able to work although he wasn't completely disabled under the Disabled Persons' Allowance Act administered by the province. His condition worsened and we then applied for a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan. He did qualify for that and received $51 a month.

That is still only $226 a month for a couple whereas at the age of 65 they would be entitled to over $300 under the present pension plan. I think, living in the richest province in Canada, a province that should be capable of looking after those in need, that we should be looking at a better system of payments to our senior citizens, especially those between 55 and 65 years of age.

I often think, too, that we should be looking at a system of a guaranteed income for anyone over 60 who wishes to retire. Some of them have pension plans—but some of them aren't too large—and if we could give an allowance to them so that they could live in comfort, a number of these people probably would go out of the work force and that would create many more jobs for younger people. I think that is something we should be looking at in the very near future.

I wanted to ask a question—rather than ask a question, I think I'll put it in this way: I would ask the Premier (Mr. Davis), and I am sure that someone will draw it to his attention, if his parliamentary assistant (Mr. McKeough) is now, or has ever been, on any retainer fee with the Canada and Dominion Sugar Co. Ltd., or the Union Gas Co.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The member is not going to speak like that about his constituent, is he?

Mr. Ruston: Yes. I might say to the hon. member for Cochrane South that he is a constituent of mine. However, I would like to know if he has been in the past or is now on a retainer fee with the Canada and Dominion Sugar Co. Ltd. or Union Gas Co. The reason I ask this is that there are a lot of rumours going around to this effect.

We had an application for an Ontario Development Corp. loan in my area—in the township of Tilbury West—for a tile company to make plastic tile. It was turned down. There are an awful lot of people who think that it was turned down because the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) had some financial interest in the Canada and Dominion Sugar Co. which owns Daymond Co. Ltd. which received an Ontario Development Corp. loan to put a plant in Huron county.

We know who the member for Huron county was. No doubt, he had quite a bit of sway and we ask that question now and hope that in the near future we will have an answer to it.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that pretty well covers all that I have to say at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr. J. Lane (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you on the very excellent job you do as Speaker of this House. The wit and sense of humour that you display here in your daily work is greatly appreciated by all. It is my sincere hope that you will occupy this position for many years to come.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. Winkler) is even funnier.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: He is. He is much more entertaining.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, I sit here in this House each day and listen to the members of the opposition parties take crackshots at the various ministers. The other day, I believe, the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis) called them a sorry lot. I would like to take just a minute at this time and tell it like it is, just for the records.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I serve a sparsely-populated area and we have many problems so I've had to call on each and every minister over the months that I have been here. I've had excellent co-operation, in many cases away beyond the line of duty. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to give you an example of what I mean.

The riding of Algoma-Manitoulin has many transportation problems and in order to try to solve some of these, I had to call on the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton). I told him about the very poor service that the existing ferry was providing to Manitoulin. I also told him about the total lack of air service to my riding and, of course, about the terrible condition of the roads and highways. Well, the ferry service was fairly easy to understand as the situation has been brought to the attention of the government for the past many years so the problems were well documented.

After having discussed the matter and had a large delegation in, the minister called a meeting with the federal Minister of Transport and the matter was resolved. There will be a new ferry on the Tobermory-South Bay run in 1974. I know there have been some recent newspaper stories to the contrary but, believe me, the right decision was made.

However, the road problem was another matter and seeing that the minister had never been to my riding it was decided that he would come and we would have a first-hand look at the situation. A date was set for the trip but shortly thereafter the minister had to go out of the country on business and the day before he was to be in my riding, he found himself leaving Germany.

He arrived home in the late evening and with only a few hours of rest, he got on another plane. At 9:30 a.m. on the appointed date, he arrived at the Gore Bay airport and travelled with me over 200 miles of roads in my riding to look at the problems. I think the Province of Ontario is very fortunate to have men of this calibre in charge of our ministries and because of this I feel the future of this province is indeed very bright.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to mention my Indian friends. In the riding of Algoma-Manitoulin, there are nine Indian reservations. For as long as I can remember there has been a great cry that the Indian people should be helped. But everything that was done in response to that cry seemed to be pretty much giveaway programmes or even direct handouts. Unfortunately, this tended to brand the Indian as a second-class citizen and a recipient of the charity of this country.

I would like to make it abundantly clear that I consider the Indian people in my riding to be first-class citizens who neither want nor need handout or giveaway programmes. As long as I am the member for Algoma-Manitoulin riding, I will never ask for this type of programme. I will ask for self-help programmes, the kind that will allow the Indian people to develop to their full potential; the kind of a programme that will allow them a better standard of livelihood and make them able to provide increased services for themselves.

I realize my criticisms apply mostly to federal programmes as it is only recently that the provincial government has become involved with Indian programmes to any great extent. These programmes, however, have been of a very constructive nature and will benefit the Indian people greatly but I think there are other ways we can be of assistance. For instance, we can help the Indian people in the development of their own police forces on the reservations.

At present the Department of Indian Affairs makes it possible for young men from the reservations to attend the Ontario Police College at Aylmer, but when these young men graduate and begin their work as policemen, if they work on the reserve, they receive a great deal less per year than the starting salary of our Ontario Provincial Police. This is not much incentive for the young Indian police graduate to stay on his reserve and give it the benefit of his training.

I feel we should have an integrated plan with the federal Department of Indian Affairs which would allow these policemen to enforce the provincial statutes on the reserves. I feel we should assist such a force with part of the costs of equipment, such as that needed for transportation, and a supplement to the present salary to bring it more in line with the scale used by other police forces.

There is no doubt in my mind that we would reap great benefits from any investment we would make in such policemen. I am sure that they can make a great contribution to law enforcement in Ontario and, in many cases, they would get better co-operation from their fellow men on the reserves than might be given to the Ontario Provincial Police officers, as the situation now exists. I would like to stress the fact that such a force would be providing a real service and answering a real need. It is an example of the kind of programme I would like to see this government provide for the Indian people.

I mentioned before that I am not in favour of giving moneys or anything else and getting nothing in return. But I must say that there are areas in my riding where there is little or no opportunity for people to find employment, where able-bodied people are obliged to take welfare because there is simply no work for them to do, however, much they desire it.

I believe every able-bodied man and woman should have a job that would provide him and his family with a reasonable standard of living. For those people who through no fault of their own are unable to earn by their efforts, I feel we must provide better assistance. Our present method of assistance, in most cases, is inadequate for the disabled, the widowed and others who need help.

For those who can work and, in most cases, want to work we must find jobs. This can only be done if the government will develop pilot programmes in the various areas of my riding where there is not enough employment. Many of these people I speak of are unable to meet the age and health requirements for the mines or the paper mills which provide the main source of employment in my riding, yet they want meaningful work which will provide them with a livelihood and, in most cases, with a little help they could do it.

In my riding there is plenty of wood, stone and rock. Products made from this material and produced in those areas would provide employment, would not contribute to pollution and would eventually operate at a profit. To begin such production, they would need financial assistance because the people living in the area do not have, nor can they get, the money required for capital and operational costs.

The products I am thinking about are toys, souvenirs, jewellery and other industrial and household items. There are many, many dollars being spent today on these types of articles. More often than not these articles are made in some other country.

Souvenirs, for example, sold here to represent Canada are seldom made in Canada. I am sure visitors to our country would prefer—

Mr. Singer: Even the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet was funnier.

Mr. Lane: —to have something truly Canadian to remind them of their stay here.

Mr. Singer: He is much more entertaining.

Mr. Lane: Surely we should be able to supply them with a Canadian souvenir? We could, if there were pilot projects begun in my riding which would use the wood and other resources found in the area, allow the people who live in the north to make products from the north.

Mr. Singer: Isn't there a rule about reading speeches?

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I am sure there is.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): He is speaking about the north and those in the south over there are just making a useless noise.

Mr. Lane: Wood production could supply other things. It could answer the demand for rustic furniture to be used in cottages and on patios. Knotty pine and any kind of wood furniture could be produced in my riding if we had the finances to begin these projects.

The development of these projects would mean that we should reforest all the land in the general area which is not now productive and supervise it, so we could continue to have sufficient raw material to supply the industries created in the pilot projects. This reforestation would also provide much-needed employment.

I have recommended to the minister that a pilot project be started in my riding as soon as possible. I feel this would have many advantages. First, we would get people off welfare and into meaningful employment and, second, we would be providing souvenirs and other useful articles to visitors to our province.

We also have farmland—some of the best farmland in the country. Should we not be producing fresh vegetables, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables for ourselves and the markets in Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie? All of these products are now being imported into the north with a considerable markup in cost. With a small investment, these could all be produced in my riding—just help in financing the greenhouses, freezing and canning facilities.

We do have the potential. We could develop small industries that would have a good chance of success. We could provide people who have no choice now other than living on welfare with work that would give them great satisfaction.

I am a great believer in getting 100 per cent value on every tax dollar we spend, but I don't believe it can ever be done with a welfare cheque; it has to be done with a paycheque. I am sure the money invested in pilot projects like those I have mentioned will provide those paycheques for the people who are well qualified to operate and work in this type of small industry, which would be compatible with the tourist industry.

It would also mean that many of our young people could find suitable work in the area. It is of great concern to me that they now have to leave the area to find meaningful employment, for of all the resources we have in the north our youth is our greatest resource.

Mr. Speaker, while I am speaking of industry, I must mention the tourist industry. My entire riding has a great potential for tourist development, and many of our young people would like to get involved in this industry but in many cases they lack finances. I know we have NODC and other agencies to go to for financial assistance, but it seems to me that up until now these plans have not been flexible enough and that too much consideration has been given to the past performance and financial statements of past years rather than consideration to the potential.

Many of these young people who would like to start in business do not have enough money on hand to have much owner equity in the business, and, as a result, many applications have been turned down. I really feel that NODC was set up to provide risk capital, and such being the case, if the area has the potential and the applicant has the ability, this should be the main factor in considering the loan.

Oftentimes, the financial statement for the past five years means very little, because many of the existing tourist businesses were started a number of years ago and the owner in many cases was a middle-aged man who did not want to spend big dollars to expand the business at his age. So if this is sold to a young person who could take full advantage of the potential, then past history means very little.

If the people in my riding are to get the full advantage that the area lends to tourism, then we must have more and better facilities and we must always be on the lookout as to how best to achieve the best results for our efforts and for our people.

In this respect I would like to point out that it is urgent that the government acquire the Ontario Paper Co. lands on western Manitoulin. I need not elaborate on the splendid recreational, timber and wildlife potential of these lands in Dawson and Robinson townships and on Cockburn Island.

With increased pressure for recreation close to major metropolitan areas, Manitoulin Island will become increasingly important as a destination for tourists. But we must not delay, because if these 80,000 acres should be purchased by some wealthy person and if he should prohibit its public use, it would be a terrific loss not only to Manitoulin but to the entire Province of Ontario.

I mentioned last year in my maiden speech that I felt the federal government had a responsibility in providing recreational and park land for future generations, and that I felt ARDA should be the vehicle through which this property should be purchased. I still feel the same way, but I must point out that property has been changing hands very rapidly on Manitoulin in the past few years, and I feel there is a great urgency to acquire this property now, and that it would be in the best interest of the Province of Ontario to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned a few moments ago about the wildlife potential that the Ontario Paper Co. lands offered. I think it's fair to state that a very large part of my riding has a great potential in this field, but there are some serious effects on our deer herds as a result of wolves. The past winter was an exceedingly easy winter on deer insofar as the depth of snow was concerned. However, I have had a number of reports of deer killed by wolves in the winter feeding areas and on the lakes. As you know, I was very concerned about this matter when the wolf bounty was discontinued last year, but I was advised that predator control would be stepped up and, if need be, in problem areas, local hunters or trappers would be hired to help keep the wolf population in check.

Some will say we must not upset the balance of nature and that the deer and wolf population will take care of itself if left alone. Well, this may be true, but remember that hunters take thousands of deer every year. So our wolf population must be controlled.

I do not want to see the wolf exterminated, but unless they are controlled, deer hunting—which is profitable to many in my riding as well as very profitable to the provincial government through the sale of thousands of licences — will stop. The deer population is already seriously depleted even with having had the bounty control on wolves. Even apart from the revenue which deer hunting brings to my riding, the deer itself is a very beautiful creature and certainly must be protected. I hope this government will take all of these things into consideration and step up predator control in the problem areas.

Mr. Speaker, last year I mentioned my interest in the need for rent-gear-to-income housing for our senior citizens.

I am happy to say that during the past year the towns of Little Current, Gore Bay, Massey and Manitowaning have been given approval on this type of housing for their areas, and I'm sure more approvals will be forthcoming for other towns and villages in my riding.

My concern for proper housing for senior citizens goes beyond the boundaries of my own riding to the large cities where, because of high rent and the cost of travel and entertainment, many of our retired people have to just exist. I have suggested to the minister that consideration should be given to creating senior citizens' villages in my riding. These villages could be adjacent to existing towns or villages so all the services would be available.

It would mean that a retired person would have an opportunity to grow a garden, have some flowers and grass, get some recreation such as hunting, fishing, hiking, etc., at very little cost. The cost of recreation such as curling in a small town or village is only a fraction of what the cost is in the larger areas. With land cost in the area being only a fraction of the cost of larger areas the overall picture should be very attractive to the older person who would like this way of life.

I know in the past few years many people from various parts of Ontario approaching retirement have bought homes, and bought land and built homes on Manitowaning Island and other places in the riding for their retirement years. So if it is desirable for people who can afford it to move to this area for retirement, then it must be equally desirable for those who cannot afford to own their own homes.

It used to be that when we thought of retired people we would think of someone 75 years or over, but now it is 65 and in many cases younger. So instead of thinking in terms of five or 10 years of retirement, we are now thinking in terms of 20 or 25 years, which after all is a good chunk of a person's lifetime. I would hope that we will be able to give our older people a choice, and I would like to see this idea tried as a pilot project in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being accused of repeating myself, I must point out again—

Mr. Singer: Oh no, don't run that risk.

Mr. Lane: —as I did last year, the need for the equalization of prices for basic commodities—

Mr. Singer: Who wrote that speech? Who wrote that?

Mr. F. S. Miller (Muskoka): The member should listen, he might learn something.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) doesn't listen, I will say that.

An hon. member: How would he know?

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): We listened to them this afternoon, so they should button up.

Mr. Lane: —the need for equalization of prices for basic commodities across the province. Food, gasoline, oil, etc. should be the same price to the people in the north as it is to the people in the south.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): And it should be reduced in the south.

Mr. Lane: I would point out that it costs more to get from point A to point B in the north because of distances involved. Along with this higher first cost is a second cost of higher prices for gasoline, and mother nature has arranged that we must heat our houses in the north for a longer period of time than do our friends in the south. So again, we have a second cost in higher prices for oil. Even if we take into consideration the cost of moving products north — that in itself would only account for a very small portion of the price spread.

Mr. Dean: The party the member supports is irresponsible, that is the problem.

Mr. Lane: I do not feel that we should take the competition out of trade, but I do feel that our government should take a serious look at this problem.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I would draw attention again to the great need for a scheduled air service to my riding.

Mr. Laughren: The member mustn't tamper with the free enterprise system.

Mr. Lane: At the present time we do not have an air service. In fact, a good portion of the riding does not have any sort of public transportation at all. There are, however, airports at Gore Bay, Elliot Lake and Wiarton.

I would hope that either a private carrier could be found or another leg of norOntair could be established to service this area, because it seems to me that we can never develop to our full potential until we have a good dependable air service. Also, in this day and age surely all the people in the province are entitled to some type of public transportation.

Mr. Speaker, I realize I have ranged over a very broad area in my remarks, but these things are of great interest and concern to me and the people of my riding. Indeed, I hope that for the most part they are of interest and concern to many people throughout the province.

I wish to thank you for this opportunity to make these observations and comments at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to engage in this debate and to follow a member who speaks for some of the problems of northern Ontario and presents his solutions. While I may not agree wholeheartedly with them, I am glad that he is speaking up on northern problems.

While the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) is in the House I would like to say that it came as a pleasant surprise to learn from the Speech from the Throne that the government is going to raise the minimum workmen's compensation pensions — at least those that are greatly out of date and some that were established years ago, especially in the mining industry for silicosis and so on; they're so low now they're unrealistic. And I hope that when the government determines the figure that it will set a reasonable amount.

One other aspect of workmen's compensation that I'd like the government to consider is the board hearings that we have down in Toronto. At present they can be held only in Toronto; and if a person happens to live in this vicinity he can go to a hearing without it costing him anything, whereas if he lives a great distance away he has to pay if he loses. If he wins, though, he's all right.

Sometimes there is justification for having these hearings, but people are deterred because it is quite an expensive proposition to come down to Toronto from northern Ontario. If there were something the government could do to equalize this, it would be a slightly fairer application of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Don't nod your head. Do something!

Mr. Ferrier: There is another problem I want to mention in passing; and it has something to do with my old clergy background—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): It isn't that old.

Mr. Ferrier: I can't get away from it—and I am sure the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) will support me on this. It has nothing to do with the regulating of Sunday retail selling in Ontario. I think that the move toward an open and completely commercial Sunday, if it ever comes, is a bad thing. We should try to preserve the kind of day we have for family purposes, as a day off when people can get together and—

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Go to church!

Mr. Ferrier: Go to church, for sure—and preserve this very vital part of Ontario's life. I hope the government will move in a positive way in this issue.

There are two things in particular on which I want to speak tonight. I don't think I will be very long; but one has to do with the whole question of the high school situation in what used to be the town of Timmins.

The Timmins High and Vocational School was built in stages; and, believe it or not, there are 11 different floor levels in that school today. The kind of congestion in the halls that exists there just boggles the mind.

The gymnasiums they have are poor. I could read reports that have come to me from various people who have toured it—and I've toured it myself. The gymnasiums are inadequate. The building is sort of a hodge-podge, in that it has been constructed in a number of stages. There's no overall planned educational outlook for it.

There's no real cafeteria. The music room is down in the basement next to the automotive room, and it's so dry down there that I know some expensive musical instruments have been damaged; I saw a $400-$500 instrument that had cracked.

The school simply is inadequate. Of course, the Ministry of Education have recognized there is a problem, but their answer is to rebuild the worst parts over about five years. They've allotted $1 million this year if the school board will take it. The school board is supposed to deal with some of the worst problems on a unit basis, which means that once the demolition and new construction are done, everything is put back as if no more work was going to be done. Maybe next year they'll go ahead and authorize another section; but while that's going on there'll be all the noise and disruption and so on.

When it's all completed, even if they go ahead with this five-year programme, they'll still have many glaring inadequacies. The gymnasiums that they are proposing will be less than they have in another school in the same school board's district. It has about—well, quite a bit less population.

Timmins was a town that grew up around the mining industry; and as we all know, the mining industry is a depleting resource—and some day you think that you're going to reach the end of it. When the school was built, in stages, people still had the idea that they were going to a mining community; they were going to make their bundle and they were going to get out. Well, some did—but there were an awful lot that didn't.

Then the Texas Gulf situation came along. One of the largest ore bodies ever found was discovered there and there's now a major complex built up around that. There were some smaller ore bodies discovered and the community now has a long degree of permanency; so that we're not thinking in terms of a community with 10 or 15 years future, but many, many, many years.

Rumours go around the mining community, and I have been told by some—I don't know how much truth there is to it—that Texas Gulf has found a great deal more ore on its property which will extend the length of its mine even many more years than already projected. So the community is going to be there for a long time.

Here you have this old school. There's no outside facilities where they can have a track. They have a lot of portables where it can get up to over 80 or 90 degrees in the spring and in the fall, and where it's freezing cold in the winter. There's no parking in the fall and in the spring; the cars are all around the neighbourhood—and the whole situation is bad.

Now if the Ministry of Education goes ahead with its proposal to rebuild the school in stages, it's still going to spend probably $5 million and it's going to have a complex that is certainly much better than what is there now; but it's not going to be a co-ordinated and well-planned school complex. It's going to cost just as much and you're going to have many of the problems still there as far as the track is concerned and a field for outdoor athletics—all this parking and congestion and this type of thing.

The school board, in talking to the Minister of Education, (Mr. Wells), suggested that really we should be thinking of a new school and not these kind of repairs to what we already have. His answer was: "Well, we've got budget restraints on capital spending and we can't go above those; so you'll have to be prepared to accept what we offer."

Now I say, Mr. Speaker, that that wasn't a very realistic answer as I understand it. The people are prepared to wait two or three years and let that money sort of accumulate so they can go ahead with the new school. They are not demanding that it be now; if they get the promise of this and the outlook of getting it, then they will be satisfied.

The support in the community is solid. We talk about having regional government. The government created a large city so there would be more decision-making at the local level and the local input would have some relevance—would have some say in what goes on there. You've got all kinds of people backing it; the teaching staff; you have the JC's, who have written a letter within the last few days to the Minister of Education—you've got the Chamber of Commerce. I don't know who all you haven't got, but it's a pretty solid community support.

I think one of the complications in the whole thing has been that we have just completed in the last year a high school for the French-speaking population. Now I would like to say that I am very proud of the town of Timmins and the leadership that the school board has given over the years. When the legislation went through to allow French secondary schools full public support, the school board immediately reacted in a positive fashion and rented facilities and went ahead with the construction of a new school.

I think this is tremendously commendable to the school board and to the fact that the community has been behind that whole concept. But I think now that there is another glaring problem, the government should take a pretty careful look at it. Realizing the time that the community is now going to be there, and realizing how much is going to have to be spent over the years to come up with the programme that the government has tentatively outlined, I think that we should try—even if it is a little more money—to provide another school on another site—a new school.

I think the benefits that will accrue to the students, to the staff that work there, the satisfaction of the town that its wishes were taken into account and the government has reacted positively to them—I think that the reward will be great for all concerned. I ask the Minister of Education and his officials to go back and to study the thing once again; to consider all the implications of this and to see if they can come up with something that is much better than they have proposed so far.

The reason that it is being bandied around in the community is here in the JC's letter and it is written in an editorial in the Daily Press. They say the only reason why the government has acted so unsympathetically and has not considered the arguments on a rational basis, a reasonable basis, is because our riding is not represented by a government member. They are saying the government is guided in its decisions mainly by whether you are on the government side or not; and they quote in this article: "They say everyone is equal in the eyes of the law, but some are more equal than others."

So they are suggesting that—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Even this government wouldn't be that callous.

Mr. Ferrier: I wouldn't think that this government would be that callous about a school where the future citizens of this province are concerned; and where so many in the community itself are behind the idea of a new school.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): How about the bridge on St. Joseph Island?

Mr. Ferrier: Well now they got a bridge to the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ferrier: I just wonder whether this pork barrel idea—I don't think it's the main reason, but I wouldn't be surprised if there is some validity to it. I would just like to say that this type of thing had better be decided on its own merits.

Mr. Stokes: The Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mr. Welch) wouldn't tolerate that sort of thing.

Mr. Ferrier: If you are going to have good government and you are going to make wise and fair decisions, then this kind of basis for making decisions really has little place in the overall scheme of things.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ferrier: I hope these supporters of the government party in my riding, I hope that they have misjudged their party. Maybe they know the party a lot better than I do, being a part of it, but I would hope that this isn't true.

Mr. Stokes: I think they are away off base.

Mr. Ferrier: However, there may be some validity to it.

Leaving that issue and going into another issue, the Ministry of Natural Resources has just gone through a phase of reorganization. It has created a number of smaller offices, I think they call it, or smaller regions. But then it has created an overall region with responsibility for quite a large area where formerly there were maybe four or five regional offices. In our case it created the offices at Cochrane, Timmins, Gogama, Chapleau, Kapuskasing, Hearst, Moosonee and Kirkland Lake; and there is to be a regional office overseeing all the work in that area.

I noticed in the appointments of the personnel to the regional office that has been set up in my area that all the top dogs are from the old Lands and Forest Department. And a lot of the unrest and the anxiety among the people from the forming mining section is very much justified; that is that their role in the new ministry is not given very much consideration.

In deciding where this office should go, the decision was made to put the regional office in Cochrane. I just do not think that was the best place to locate that office. There is no mining operation going on up in that section. There is lots of mining going on in the Timmins area and in the Kirkland Lake area. There are forest products operations going on in both those areas too. I feel the most logical place to put that regional office would have been in Timmins. The second most logical place would have been Swastika. But no, it ended up in Cochrane.

Why did it end up in Cochrane? The member for Cochrane North and the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle) is reported to have said to one of the leading lights up in the Cochrane North area there was no way that office was going to come into an NDP riding. So I suppose they had to rule out Timmins at that point, just as we had to rule out Sudbury when the office was moved from there over to Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Germa: It's the pork barrel!

Mr. Ferrier: It's the pork barrel.

Mr. Laughren: Did I hear an oink-oink?

Mr. Stokes: The Conservative Party didn't make any friends over that because it alienated half of its civil service in that ministry.

Mr. Ferrier: I want to tell you this, Mr. Speaker, the Timmins Press said that the only justification is that it is the pork barrel theory of politics.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): It is the Conservative theory of politics.

Mr. Ferrier: They are looking after the Conservatives. But I don't know why they didn't put it in Swastika; there is a government member there. Why wasn't he given some consideration? Maybe there is a pecking order and when he wasn't in the cabinet he didn't get second choice either.

I just think those kind of nearsighted decisions, made on the basis of who is the member, are not doing the government any good. I would say that when the government feels that it has to make decisions on this basis, it is beginning to crumble. I think they were very much worried, and I didn't realize the chinks were beginning to show until the results in St. George and in Huron.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): What was the vote you got in Stormont again? I haven't heard it, for 24 hours.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): The NDP didn't do so well.

Mr. Ferrier: My goodness, two of the ridings that returned the largest Conservative majority in the last election are now over here in the Liberal camp.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Sixty per cent.

Mr. Deans: Forty per cent voted against the minister.

Mr. Ferrier: I would like to say this to the hon. member for Don Mills (Mr. Timbrell), that probably the government is going to have to do this kind of pork barrelling more and more in the next two years, because its support is crumbling more and more and that will be the last-ditch effort where it tries to hold onto office and stay in power.

Mr. Laughren: More HOME lots in Scarborough, more HOME lots in Scarborough.

Mr. Ferrier: But the old pork barrel is pretty slippery you know, and I think you can slip from it.

Mr. Laughren: They should make the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Energy. That should do it,

Mr. Ferrier: One thing that I want to take issue on is the following from the Timmins Press. It said, "Every time our car hits a pothole in what we laughingly refer to as provincial highways in this riding, we feel a little more bitter about the pork-barrel theory of politics." I hate to brag—that is not given to my nature—but I'd like to put it in this perspective: that there has been more highway work, more roads paved and upgraded, and more work done in my riding in the last five years than I think in almost any riding in the province.

Mr. G. Nixon: A good government. We are looking after the member.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Except maybe Stormont.

Mr. Ferrier: I don't know what I have done to be the beneficiary of this aspect of the pork barrel.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Renwick: That statement will get wide distribution in the riding. The member has said that to all his constituents.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): And I'd be glad to compliment the government.

Mr. Ferrier: Anyway, I have come full circle, Mr. Speaker, and in bringing my remarks to a conclusion I should say a couple of things about that land-drainage committee of which I am a member. We have been into the ridings of many of the members here—

An hon. member: Has the committee drained all the NDPers out?

Mr. Ferrier: We have had hearings about many of the problems that are concerning the rural people of this province in their operations, and invariably we get the report that it is the best meeting they have ever appeared before, that the members of the committee have been prepared to listen and to enter into dialogue and to offer some helpful suggestions as to what might be done to improve the Land Drainage Act and the production of agriculture in the province.

I've been happy to have had some little input into that and I think that committee will provide, when the report is finally in, a very useful and worthwhile contribution to the rural people of this province.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, you are continuing to provide very excellent decision-making in the chair that you hold. You have continued to hold the respect of the members of this House and I don't think that anybody would say that you have an easy job. But I think the fact that people have the respect for you that they have, and that while we may not always agree we abide by your decisions, I think that speaks very highly of you. So with those remarks I'd like to resume my seat.

Mr. Lewis: That says how it should be. That's how it should be.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Perth.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I'd like to join with the other members who have spoken in this Throne debate in offering my congratulations to you on the manner in which you conduct the business of this House, and of course I'd particularly like to make note of the way in which you have handled the question period in the last few days. I think it is a considerable improvement over the past.

I'd also like to just make a comment of congratulations to the retired member for Huron, Mr. MacNaughton. I know he was here as a member for a considerable amount of time and he was certainly a good neighbour.

However, since the recent by-elections—and I'm happy to say our party was 100 per cent successful in those by-elections—I'm most happy to be a little closer connected to the new member for Huron (Mr. Riddell), particularly now that he is a neighbour not only in the constituency but a neighbour sitting beside me here in the Legislature.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What did the former member say after that by-election? Did he say that the people of Huron would be sorry?

Mr. Edighoffer: I believe he was quoted in the newspapers as saying that they would be sorry.

An hon. member: I think he just had a bad night.

An hon. member: I would like to think so.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): He had a bad night. He was bitchy and vindictive. He was sorry to have lost the seat.

Mr. Edighoffer: As a matter of fact, I think I recall one day in the House here he referred to himself as a tired politician, so maybe that's the reason for the retirement.

Mr. Speaker, I always look forward to this Throne debate. A lot of members, of course, spend a lot of time speaking on behalf of the people in their riding and this is what I've done on many occasions in the past, speaking on behalf of the people in the Perth riding—

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) leaving?

Mr. Lewis: What about those women chairing arbitration boards? Has the minister made any decisions yet?

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to forgo some of that tonight because I know a lot of that information—

Mr. Stokes: Say something about Stratford.

Mr. Edighoffer:—and suggestions are already in Hansard. If the member for Thunder Bay insists, I would be glad to make a comment in particular about the Stratford Shakespearean Festival.

Mr. Stokes: Fine town!

Mr. Edighoffer: We in southwestern Ontario, along with all the other people in the province, are very proud of this great tourist attraction which has just completed its 20th season. Members might be interested to know that this company—I should say the Stratford National Theatre Company, which is the name given to the company when it is on tour—just recently completed a tour of Denmark, Holland, Poland and Russia. On their arrival home they had many dignitaries out to meet them. I believe one included the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. McNie).

Mr. Lewis: I would not call him a dignitary.

Mr. Edighoffer: He was kind enough to present them with a plaque commemorating their return home. I know this was appreciated. I certainly hope that this member as well as many other members in this House visit Startford at some time or other during this summer.

Mr. Lewis: Always. Every summer.

Mr. Stokes: Fine town. Wonderful hospitality. Expensive, though.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, I have looked over this Throne Speech several times, but really I have found the vagueness somewhat alarming. This could be one reason why the Premier's (Mr. Davis) office decided to send a copy of the speech, I presume, to each member to his home address.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are very interested and concerned about efficiency and economy here in this government. I thought it would be interesting to draw to your attention the fact that the Premier's office didn't see fit just to hand us one of these Throne Speeches. They went to all the trouble to put them in large envelopes and mail them to our home addresses at a cost of 32 cents each. Believe it or not, I received my copy on March 24, which was considerably after the date the Throne Speech was read here in the House.

I'd like to suggest that this could be—

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): Take it up with the Postmaster General. He's one of the member's party. He does a great job.

Mr. Edighoffer: For the information of the member, I just happened to keep the postmark. The speech was given on March 20 and the postmark is March 22. So one can't really put all the blame on the postmaster.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The member for Fort William didn't win on that one.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, we find in many parts of the province that growth has been very rapid. I find in the area which I represent that the growth in the population and industry and tourism is not moving upward as quickly as some of us would like to see it. Many comments have been made in the past stating that highways are an adequate means of transportation, and this is one of the stimulants needed to produce desired results.

Constant pressure has been brought to bear on the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) because we really need better access for our area. A group of our area representatives met the minister last fall and now a feasibility study is taking place in part of our area. I thank the minister for his co-operation in this regard, but I urge that this study should be completed as soon as possible.

In reference to highway planning and studies, I would like to mention for the minister's benefit—I'm sorry he's not here tonight but I'm sure he'll read this in Hansard—that I did receive his letter dated Jan. 31, in which he referred to a Lake Huron-Georgian Bay area highway planning study. In that letter he stated that he was very pleased to forward to me a copy of a complete technical report for that area in Ontario. He also enclosed two copies of a summarized version of the report which, he said: "I trust will be of interest to you."

Mr. Speaker, when I received that summary I thought it looked very familiar to me. I went through my files and—after rummaging through my files I pulled out the exact summary which a former minister released three or four years ago. There is no updating in this report except that the letter intimated there might be some in the future. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Transportation and Communications is more up to date than this suggests. The Lake Huron-Georgian Bay area to which I refer is a great tourist area and it needs better attention than it appears to be receiving.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a moment or two on OHIP, the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. Since the Provincial Auditor dealt at some length with the plan, much attention has been given to this matter by the public in all parts of Ontario and, I think, for a very good reason.

On March 29, the daily paper in my area saw fit in its editorial to make some clear comments and it's well worthwhile to place them on the record as they refer to OHIP and other matters. I would like to quote from this editorial on this matter. The headline of the editorial said:

FIFTY-MILLION-DOLLAR LOSS COMES FROM TAXPAYERS' POCKETS.

Premier Davis and his cabinet now know how the federal cabinet feels every time Auditor General Maxwell Henderson lets loose with his annual report on government misspending and extravagance. Mr. Henderson's counterpart in Ontario has revealed in his report that Queen's Park can rival Ottawa in slipshod methods of spending and collecting money.

To begin with, there is the sum of no less than $10 million in fines that were levied by our courts but somehow never got collected. Even that, however, pales beside the funds which are, in actuality, owing to the government's health insurance plan.

In February and March of last year no less than $50 million in premiums was lost because the government didn't get around to collecting it or, more accurately, made the decision not to collect it. In addition, under-billing by OHIP cost another $5 million. The $50 million in uncollected premiums is most significant in that it is precisely the amount that Health Minister Richard Potter had to request from the government to see OHIP through for the year. In other words, if the premiums in question had been collected, Queen's Park would not have had to hand over $50 million extra of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Without telling us what had really caused the need.

Mr. Jessiman: What $50 million?

Mr. Edighoffer: To continue, "C. D. Howe—"

Mr. Jessiman: An old personal friend of mine, too.

Mr. Edighoffer: Great.

Mr. Jessiman: Great person!

Mr. Edighoffer: As I was saying:

C. D. Howe, the dynamic and influential cabinet minister of the Mackenzie King and St. Laurent governments, once brought down the wrath of the opposition by saying, "What's a million?" The Ontario government has gone much farther than Mr. Howe and seems to be saying, "What's $50 million?"

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I think this gives you a general idea of how the people feel around the province.

In regard to health insurance, I find I have a fairly heavy load of constituent work. Included in this workload is a substantial amount of correspondence covering identification, general coverage, premiums and claims. The Provincial Auditor, and I believe it's on page 92 of the Provincial Auditor's report, stated:

The . . . requirements for efficient claim processing have not been met mainly because of the errors present in the enrolment and claim information submitted to the plan. The sources of this information are the subscribers and the physicians providing health services.

The quality of the information submitted by them is subject to only limited control by the plan. Consequently, the computerized system has produced claim rejects that have from time to time accumulated in quantities that were too great for the plan staff to investigate and correct.

To pay these claims, plan management has elected to override or bypass the main controls in the computerized system. These controls are basically designed to ensure that payments are made only on behalf of insured persons, and that the claim is in fact payable . . .

Then the auditor continues on for the rest of that page. Over on page 94 he also states:

The most significant deficiency in this bypass system was the fact that claim payment was made without confirming that the recipient of the rendered health service was an 'insured person'.

Many times, Mr. Speaker, I have heard it suggested that the identification card is insufficient. This is the credit card age, and I feel it is time the government set up a system whereby each person covered will have a card similar to a Chargex card or an oil company credit card so that each person receiving service will acknowledge receipt of that service.

The government has spent a considerable sum of money on commercials to tell the people that they are responsible for the price of health costs. Credit cards, by having the patients sign for the service received, would make people much more aware of the costs; and they would be a safeguard from the one deficiency mentioned by the Provincial Auditor.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to make a passing remark about Ontario Hydro, because of the increasing costs. Last week, my leader placed before this House the case of the Ontario Hydro office building just a stone's throw away from here. I know I'm going to think about that building every time I pay my Hydro bill during the next 30 years.

I just can't comprehend the need for Ontario Hydro to accept the terms on a proposal basis. If the building is needed, I see no reason why it could not have been built in some less congested area or decentralized in several other areas of the province.

An hon. member: Very smart ideal

An hon. member: Quite right!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Edighoffer: The reason I mention this concern is that on Feb. 14 of this year I received a very lengthy telegram from the western Ontario regional office of Ontario Hydro in London. I won't read it all, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Who paid for that?

Mr. Edighoffer: —but the substance is contained in a few sentences so I'd like to quote this telegram so the hon. members will know what's really going on in western Ontario. This is dated Feb. 14:

LATER TODAY, WEDNESDAY, A CHANGE WILL BE ANNOUNCED IN ONTARIO HYDRO'S RETAIL ORGANIZATION IN WESTERN ONTARIO AND AS A MEMBER OF THE LEGISLATURE, WHOSE CONSTITUENTS ARE AFFECTED, WE THOUGHT YOU WOULD BE INTERESTED IN THE DETAILS.

THE 11 AREAS IN OUR WESTERN REGION ARE BEING CONSOLIDATED INTO SEVEN BY ENLARGEMENT OF THE RURAL TERRITORIES SERVED BY [SO ON AND SO FORTH].

THE CONSOLIDATION IS PART OF A PROVINCE-WIDE PROGRAMME OF REORGANIZATION BEGUN SOME YEARS AGO, WHICH ACHIEVES A SAVING TO RURAL POWER CONSUMERS OF MILLIONS OF DOLLARS ANNUALLY WHILE MAINTAINING SERVICE AT A DEPENDABLE LEVEL.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): A bunch of hogwash!

Mr. Edighoffer: It goes on:

THESE PRESENT MERGERS ALONE WILL SAVE ONTARIO HYDRO, AND ULTIMATELY ITS RURAL CUSTOMERS, $247,000 A YEAR IN OPERATING COSTS.

And that's just in the western Ontario area.

The other sentence which I found most interesting in the telegram was:

IT IS IMPERATIVE THAT ONTARIO HYDRO DO EVERYTHING POSSIBLE TO COMBAT RISING POWER COSTS.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Gee whiz!

And they're going to spend $180 million on College St.!

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Would my friend mind repeating that?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Yes, say that again.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Yes, say it again.

Mr. Ruston: Look at that—$180 million on College St.!

Mr. Edighoffer: The sentence reads:
IT IS IMPERATIVE THAT ONTARIO HYDRO DO EVERYTHING POSSIBLE TO COMBAT RISING POWER COSTS.

Mr. Singer: Yes, that's a good idea.

Mr. Edighoffer: To me, Mr. Speaker, that last sentence doesn't seem to correspond with the decision to contract for the new office building at a cost of $6 million a year for 30 years.

An hon. member: Holy smoke!

Mr. Ruston: They're running us right down.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, the people in my area are concerned about regional government and in particular about the cost. On page 5 I believe, of the Throne Speech, I believe, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor read, and I quote:

My ministry has received proposals regarding regional government both east and west of Metropolitan Toronto and will introduce legislation in this regard. My government believes that a strong and reformed local government is in the best position to determine its own priorities and proposes to transfer to strengthened local governments more authority and responsibility for many of the decisions that relate to local matters.

Mrs. Campbell: And shorter term of office.

Mr. Singer: Education costs and all that sort of stuff.

Mr. Edighoffer: This all sounds great if we really don't think about it.

The first sentence refers to proposals from east and west of Toronto. This covers a lot of territory, and the way the parliamentary assistants have been beating the bushes, this could extend over a wide area.

Then the second sentence implies that it is felt now that some of the local governments are not strong enough to carry out their present or additional duties. This feeling has been presented in many different areas by government spokesmen.

I thought the House might find it interesting to know that I've been interested enough to follow the speeches given by one of the parliamentary assistants to the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White), the hon. member for York East (Mr. Meen). I don't see him here tonight, but again I'm sure he'll reread this speech—

Mr. Lewis: He's out making a speech.

Mr. Ruston: He's probably giving one of those speeches someplace.

Mr. Deacon: That's right. He's still busy trying to explain why it's a reasonable type of government.

Mr. B. Newman: Government that listens.

Mr. Edighoffer: On looking over many of the speeches that he has given recently, I read one delivered on Feb. 5 of this year to the Ontario Association of Rural Municipalities; it was headlined, "Fears, Fallacies and Facts." In the course of his remarks he asked a number of questions, but two of them I found rather interesting. I quote from his speech:

Don't we have to ask whether that reeve is ready for all the problems that are likely to beset his township in the years ahead, assuming they haven't begun to engulf him already? Can he, and his council contend with urbanization, pollution, congestion, traffic, and the increasing demand for services.

I found this most interesting because I suggest that these elected people can, if they are given the right tools. I think of one case in particular, regarding pollution, which the parliamentary assistant mentioned. I think of the town of Palmerston in my riding. We had a snowstorm a few weeks ago. They seemed to be having trouble with their sewage disposal system. I just read in the Palmerston Observer an article headlined "Something Has Really Hit the Fan."

Mr. Singer: Spell it out.

Mr. Reid: Name names!

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, it appears that the plant is not large enough to handle the town. Each day the town has to take 15 tons of sludge that is pumped out of the settlement chambers at the plant and spray it as fertilizer on farm fields. This seemed to work well until this snowstorm came up and many of these fields were inaccessible.

The Ministry of the Environment said that in such an emergency the town should spray on the site of the now abandoned Palmerston landfill garbage dump. The town did this because it thought it had the approval of the Ministry of the Environment. As they were doing it, they received word from the county health unit that this was impossible, because they were within 600 ft of a drainage ditch or natural watercourse.

Mrs. Campbell: The government that plans.

Mr. Singer: The government that listens.

Mr. Edighoffer: I am giving you this, Mr. Speaker, as just a typical example of how a town can be caught between two bureaucratic departments if the government is too remote.

Mr. Singer: But they listened.

Mrs. Campbell: But not to each other.

Mr. Ruston: They don't speak to one another.

Mr. Edighoffer: Referring to this parliamentary assistant's speech—I believe it was in the same speech—dated Feb. 5, he decided to make a comment about the school boards which were amalgamated a few years ago. He said:

I am referring, of course, to what happened to Ontario school boards during the time when our present Premier was Minister of Education. Under his programme of modernization, some 4,850 school boards were dissolved to make way for 150 boards of broader jurisdiction. The result is no longer a matter of opinion or debate. It is a fact that these newer, stronger boards have been far better able to cope with the problems of urban growth, to meet new educational needs, to control spiralling costs, and to take advantage of certain improved forms of technology.

Mr. Deacon: Who was saying that?

Mr. Edighoffer: This was the parliamentary assistant to the provincial Treasurer. To continue:

Yet that programme of consolidation aroused much criticism and hostility at the time. Today there is scarcely a trustee or taxpayer in all Ontario who would defend the old system.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the government obtain a little more information about the feeling of the people of the province, because I wonder why the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) is receiving so many delegations for more money today.

Mr. Singer: Because he holds interesting meetings to which he only invites Tories.

Mr. Edighoffer: Oh, that is the reason.

Mr. Singer: That is the reason. And he complains that they are giving him a snow job.

Mrs. Campbell: He is.

Mr. Edighoffer: I enjoy reading the speeches of the member for York East. I would like just to refer to a speech to a Lions Club on Feb. 12, 1973. The topic was "My Role in Regional Government." He referred to the Niagara region. I will just quote various short paragraphs.

Finally, the communities of the Niagara region are communicating more effectively with Queen's Park than ever before. Later this week, for instance, the chairman of the Niagara Regional Council, John Campbell, is coming to Toronto to discuss his proposed budget with us, and we expect to clear up this matter in a single meeting.

That's a far cry from the old days when the budgets of 26 separate municipalities would each have required 26 separate meetings. If that isn't an improvement in our machinery for governing municipalities, I don't know what is.

Again, Mr. Speaker, according to my colleague, the member for Welland South, delegations are forever being received with their requests for more money.

Now, I really enjoyed his speeches so much that on Feb. 22 when he spoke to a PC association—

Mr. Ruston: PC? What would that be?

Mr. Edighoffer: I think that is Progressive Conservative Association.

Mr. Ruston: Pretty conservative and not very progressive.

Mr. Edighoffer: Again he was speaking on behalf of regional government and during that speech—well he said a lot of things—

Mr. Ruston: Didn't amount to much, did it?

Mr. Edighoffer: —but during that speech he said one sentence which shocked me a little bit, and I quote:

We believe that a great amount of the power which we are using now should be passed to the municipalities as soon as they can handle it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: They can levy their own taxes; they can determine whether they are going to build expressways; they can do all those things.

Mr. Ruston: Oh boy, isn't that something.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Is the member for Perth for or against it?

Mr. Ruston: Doesn't that sound swell—"when they can handle it." What an arrogant bunch.

Mr. Deacon: When does the Premier decide when they can handle it?

Mr. Ruston: The arrogant Conservatives.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, on March 7—you see how interested I am in his speeches—the same parliamentary assistant spoke in the city of Stratford, which happens to be in my riding!

Mr. Ruston: Great place!

Mr. Edighoffer: I am sorry I wasn't able to attend because he just didn't offer to take me along.

Mr. Ruston: The member was lucky.

Mr. Singer: If we had only asked.

Mr. Stokes: The member didn't ask, that is what the member for York East said today.

Mr. Singer: Yes, if we had only asked we could have come to the meeting.

Mr. Reid: He might have let us on the government aircraft.

Mr. Singer: In or out of Ontario?

Mr. Edighoffer: He was very fortunate because the meeting was reported in the newspaper the next day and one of the comments reported stated:

By 1975 we hope to work out the jigsaw puzzle to show what may be considered outside boundaries of regions.

And he was referring to regional governments. This, Mr. Speaker, is most frightening to the people in my area.

Just recently the county hired a full-time planner at its own expense to work with the local elected officials to maintain orderly development. I see no reason why the local people with this initiative cannot continue to plan and govern as efficiently and effectively as possible.

I get the impression from the people I talk to—and these are people in elected positions—that they are even now afraid to ask the provincial government for advice on making changes for fear that they will step in, present a proposal and then say: “Think about it for a couple of months.”

We in our area would welcome any suggestion if the government can back it up with facts and figures showing that efficiency and economy will be maintained.

I was happy, of course, to hear the provincial Treasurer in his speech on April 3 to the Association of Counties and Regions in Ontario say:

There are no secret studies in the works and we have no specific plan for local government reform in any part of Ontario not already covered by our published proposals.

We will see in the very short future how correct that statement is.

Mr. Ruston: I think he has got them, but he has just buried them a little deeper.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, I have come close to the end. I have covered a few different areas, but to sum it up I would like to read an editorial from the Listowel Banner dated March 29, with the headline, “Auditor’s Report Could Be Tip of Iceberg.” I will quote so that I won’t get any of the words incorrect:

As the fictional lawyer, Perry Mason, used to say on television, “The truth will out.” By “the truth,” Mr. Mason was referring to the plain truth, sometimes called the unvarnished truth. That is the kind of truth that packs the wallop of a 10-oz boxing glove delivered by a heavyweight. It can hardly be compared to that disguised truth which sometimes can be so polished that it actually sounds like good news when it’s really so bad.

Ontario residents are still reeling from the result of the release last week of the first detailed public look at government spending in this province. It was something of a revelation. It’s hard to imagine how anything as efficient as the “big blue machine” could be guilty of such blunders as that made by the Ministry of Health when it somehow or other neglected to collect $50 million in premiums.

Add to this the fact that the head of one of the province’s many royal commissions had a taxi bill that ran up to over $3,000; that cabinet ministers and their families, booking charter flights for God knows what, charged them to the former Department of Lands and Forests; and that the province borrowed almost $6 million from Ottawa to help finance municipal projects but allotted only $75,000 of this amount and you end up with what somebody has aptly described as a rat’s nest.

What bothers us is that this is the first year the province has received this kind of Maxwell Henderson-type report. We can’t help but wonder if similar blunders and stupid, if not shady, practices in past years haven’t added greatly to this province’s debt. We’ll never know what was buried in those rosy financial reports of days gone by.

We have taken a jab at the “big blue machine” but in all honesty we must say that any party—right, left or centre—which has been in power as long as the Conservatives have in this province would be in the same position. The PCs have held a virtual dictatorship position in Ontario for over three decades. That’s a long time to keep your eyes and ears open.

I’ll read the whole article.

Mr. Ruston: Oh, yes! By all means; it is a good article.

Mr. Edighoffer: It really refers to all of us. Now I’ll continue to quote:

When we think of the Ontario Conservatives our mental image is not that of a “big blue machine” but of fat cats sitting in the sun, licking the cream off their faces.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Edighoffer: Just wait a minute.

Mr. Ruston: Not as fat as that member is.

Mr. Singer: All nine Tories are avidly listening.

Mr. Edighoffer: To continue:

Personally, we prefer to see a government with a lean, hungry look.

Mr. Deacon: Some of them aren’t fat cats.

Mr. Edighoffer: It goes on:

But not enough of the other fellows contesting seats give that impression either. And so we get an auditor's report like the one we got last week.

It's great to be able to point the mad finger in somebody else's direction but don't forget we're the ones who have put those in power where they are for 30 years. We know it doesn't make it any easier to bear but we're getting the government we deserve. No more, no less.

Mr. Ruston: I must subscribe to that paper.

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, just so that—

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Get an LIP grant to look after it.

Mr. Edighoffer: Pardon?

Mr. Evans: Just get an LIP grant to look after it.

Mrs. Campbell: What about a snap, crackle and pop?

Mr. Edighoffer: Mr. Speaker, so that the iceberg referred to in the headline of that editorial doesn't expand any more above or below water, I wish to close by saying I wholeheartedly support the amendment placed before this House by my leader on March 26, 1973.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Stokes: Sock it to them!

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): There are only eight of the member's colleagues to support him.

Mr. Stokes: Sock it to them! There are only eight of them.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to join in this debate. Quite frankly, I had intended to spend a considerable amount of time in writing out a speech so that I might read it here but after having heard the comments of the hon. member for Downsview, I don't think it's safe to read speeches in the House.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I would have been after this member. I have a little sympathy for the other fellow.

Mr. Rhodes: He would be after me on that?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Rhodes: First of all, I'd like to say that I would like to join with others who have congratulated the new members of the Legislature, the members for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and Huron (Mr. Riddell). It was interesting to note the comments of the member for Perth (Mr. Edighoffer) who pointed out that they were the new members from the previous by-elections. I believe that right now on the desk of the member for Downsview is a copy of the article written by a former member of this House—a former New Democratic member, Mr. Walter Pitman—in which he has some comments to make on the by-elections.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I have read them.

Mr. Rhodes: There is a degree of truth in the remarks by Mr. Pitman—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Oh, I've read it.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): We read it.

Mr. Rhodes: I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to have the hon. member for St. George here, because a year-and-a-half ago, when I first came into this House, a number of jibes and comments came from the Liberal benches referring to someone changing parties and becoming elected. I am pleased to note that at that time I was a "turncoat," but I understand the hon. member for St. George is one who has found great wisdom and has joined the benches of the Liberals. So perhaps we have something in common.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): A many-coloured coat!

Mr. Singer: That's all though!

Mr. Reid: Except she's headed in the right direction and the member for Sault Ste. Marie isn't.

Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, before I get to make comment on some of the items I have in mind, I would like to draw one thing to your attention, sir. I say this without malice toward any member of this House, but I do wonder whether we should not find some way to avoid bringing strictly municipal matters into the Legislature for discussion.

Mr. Reid: How about we ban political matters too, as the Premier (Mr. Davis) would like it?

Mr. Rhodes: Very often in the House matters that are strictly of a municipal nature are brought forward, especially during the question period. I am sure you would agree that if all members of this House were to bring their particular municipal problems here we would spend an awful lot of time dealing with them.

Mr. Reid: We can't get an answer out of the civil service.

Mr. Rhodes: These are matters that are being handled by municipal politicians, duly elected by the people of the various municipalities.

Mr. Singer: Who do exactly as they want.

Mr. Rhodes: I am assuming, and I think correctly so, that they are qualified. Some of them have reached such high and lofty positions as to become members of this Legislature, which proves they were very qualified when they were municipal people.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): They would have been better to stay where they were, they could have done something.

Mr. Rhodes: I think a lot of our time is lost in dealing with what are purely municipal problems and would well be left at the municipal level. If they have a particular problem, then they could come here.

Mr. Singer: Like we could in education.

Mr. Rhodes: It's interesting to sit through the days of the debate and listen to the members of the opposition criticize, quite vehemently, the individuals who serve in the cabinet—

An hon. member: The member is too blind.

Mr. Rhodes: —picking out the ministers one by one and attempting to dissect them, which I suppose is the function of the opposition as long as it is done in a critical fashion that is constructive. But it's rather difficult for me—

Mr. Lawlor: That's what the government always says.

Mr. Rhodes: —to accept that people will sit and use such terminologies as "incompetent," as has been used, "sorry lot," as has been used—

Mr. Singer: What's wrong with those words?

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): They only apply across the floor.

Mr. Rhodes: I don't think they really mean that, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Of course we do!

Mr. Rhodes: I don't think they really mean that. They are simply saying that they themselves would like to have the opportunity to sit on these benches and would like to do the job themselves.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Doesn't the member feel what we feel that about the fellows opposite sometimes?

Mr. Rhodes: It would perhaps be well if some of them would take the time to join with the ministers and find out what their activities are—

Mr. Singer: Yes, we ask questions and they won't tell us. They say: "I don't care to discuss that today, or tomorrow or the next day."

Mr. Rhodes: The very ministers these members criticize, criticize for their incompetence, criticize for their inability to do their job—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Rhodes: These same members are very quick to go to those ministers. I see them trotting across the floor regularly and asking them to do something for their riding—

Mr. Lawlor: They leave us with very little alternative. Who are we going to talk to? Better to talk to a nincompop than to nobody.

Mr. Rhodes —which the ministers very graciously do because it's part of their job. And the other feature of it is these are the same ministers on whom demands are made to go all throughout this province to carry out their duties; I don't feel it is just to criticize these people, no matter who they are—

Mr. Singer: No, they are beyond criticism.

Mr. Rhodes: —for not doing their job; because they are doing their job; and a very onerous one it is too.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't blame the hon. member. If I were he I would say the same thing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: Unfortunately for the hon. members opposite, none of them have had the opportunity to enjoy that position.

Mr. Lawlor: We are getting ready.

Mr. Rhodes: And none of them have had the opportunity to really assess what the responsibilities of the job are.

Mr. Drea: Nor will they.

Mr. Rhodes: I will not go so far as to make that prediction. In the year 2,000, God knows what may happen.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: Well Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that members from northern Ontario—and certainly members from my riding, Sault Ste. Marie—have stood in this House for many years and have complained about the condition of the highways in northern Ontario.

I certainly am not going to change that tradition, because I am satisfied in my mind—as I am sure other hon. members from the north are—that there is a definite and distinct need, now, for something to be done to improve the highways in northern Ontario.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): If they can spend $1.3 billion in Metro Toronto—

Mr. Rhodes: It has to be done in the very, very near future.

Mr. Singer: All those municipalities; be careful!

Mr. Rhodes: Now I have listened with sympathy, I must say, to the members from Metropolitan Toronto—the member for York-Forest Hill (Mr. Givens), the member for Downsview, the member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon)—my goodness, do they have anybody outside of Metropolitan Toronto? Oh yes.

Mr. Ferrier: They haven't got many from the north!

Mr. Rhodes: Anyway, they have talked about the problems here in Metro; and when one comes down here from the far northern hinterland as I have, and the hon. member for Cochrane South and the others from Thunder Bay and the Sudbury area—

Mr. Reid: And Rainy River!

Mr. Rhodes: —we do understand, after being here a while, that they do have major problems here. There is no question about that.

Mr. Stokes: They are in a dilemma of their own making.

Mr. Rhodes: Many of them they have created themselves, but they are there.

Mr. Reid: With the government they have over there—naturally!

Mr. Laughren: It wasn't our government.

Mr. Rhodes: What I am simply saying is that—if I can come from the north and recognize these problems and sympathize with the members in the Metropolitan Toronto area, for goodness sake can't they recognize the problems we have up in the north?

Mr. Singer: We do, we do. It's the cabinet that won't do anything.

Mr. Rhodes: I stood here in this House the other day—

Mr. Reid: It's not this party!

Mr. Stokes: Give it to them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: I stood here the other day and made a comment about the problems we have in the north. The member for Downsview very quickly interjected that I wouldn't understand the problems in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Reid: Sault Ste Marie hasn't got those problems.

Mr. Stokes: He is talking right at the minister? He is the only one there.

Mr. Rhodes: What I am saying is that something must be done to improve highway conditions in the north.

Mr. Stokes: Sock it to them!

Mr. Rhodes: May I simply draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, one particular area of highway in northern Ontario that is of great concern to me, and that's the area of Highway 17 that runs from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury, a distance of approximately 185 miles.

Mr. Singer: The former member for Sudbury did his best.

An hon. member: His best wasn't good enough!

Mr. Rhodes: Let me say this: I am using 1971 statistics—

Mr. Singer: Elmer made an annual speech for 11 years—

Mr. Rhodes: —but in 1971 in northern Ontario—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Give the member for Sault Ste. Marie a chance to speak.

Mr. Ruston: He is not saying anything!

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): He is saying more than the member for Essex-Kent. We listened to him and he didn't say anything.

Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, in what might be called northern Ontario, that area from roughly North Bay to the Manitoba border; 245 persons lost their lives in highway accidents in 1971.

In the area between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury a total of 35 persons were killed.

Mr. Stokes: And that's one of the better parts of the north.

Mr. Rhodes: When we look at the mileage of paved highway in northern Ontario, the 185 miles from Sudbury to Sault Ste. Marie make up five per cent—

Mr. Singer: Wouldn't the member have thought that the great Tory government would have done something about it?

Mr. Stokes: After 30 years?

Mr. Rhodes: —and yet 15 per cent of the fatalities occurred on that highway from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury.

In the whole of northern Ontario we have approximately 10.8 per cent of the total population of this province. In the area between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury—and I think I am being a little generous here; I'm including the metropolitan area of Sudbury, the city of Sault Ste. Marie and the communities in between, as well as Elliot Lake slightly to the north—approximately 240,000 people reside. With 245 fatalities, there was almost one killed per 1,000 of population on that piece of highway in northern Ontario.

Mr. Singer: One would think the government would have done something about that.

Mr. Rhodes: If we had the same average throughout the province, 7,700 persons would have been killed in the Province of Ontario. (See retraction on page 628).

Mr. Singer: Shocking—absolutely shocking.

Mr. Rhodes: I think something must be done, and must be done soon, to improve that highway's condition.

Mr. Singer: Right.

Mr. Foulds: Too bad the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) isn't here to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Rhodes: In the north we have to travel long distances between our communities. It must be convenient for those who live in this part of the province to be able to go from city to city with a degree of speed and with the highways in a condition that can handle the traffic. I think sometimes they have to be extremely brave to do it, but I think they do it and do it well. But when the closest municipality is 185 miles to the east and 400 miles to the west, highway travel becomes very vital, not only to the individual wishing to communicate between these cities for business purposes, but for the moving of goods, the moving of services between these communities.

As an example—and I say this because I think it is common for many people in the southern portion of the province—recently a task force on housing was formed and is presently going about the province.

Mr. Singer: Where, oh where, is the Minister of Transportation and Communications?

Mr. Rhodes: When I received the list of where these people were going, I found out that they would be in Thunder Bay and they would be in Sudbury, but they were not going to visit the community of Sault Ste. Marie, which is a city of approximately 85,000 with a surrounding area of 100,000 people.

Mr. Singer: Does the minister ever listen to the member?

Mr. Rhodes: When I inquired and asked why it was so, I was advised, "Well the people from the Sault Ste. Marie area can commute to Sudbury or they can go to Thunder Bay."

Well of course it is ridiculous. It turns out the reason for it—and I say this again without malice—you just don't understand the distances that we are living with in those communities.

Mr. Stokes: They are treating the member with disdain.

Mr. Rhodes: So I think really that you must recognize the need as it applies to transportation needs in the north.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the minister listen to the member?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: In the Throne Speech one of the points that was brought out by His Honour was the need to control the use of land, and it pointed out the fact that the Planning Act and other legislation related to land development will be put under review.

Mr. Stokes: What about those mobile home parks they won't let you establish?

Mr. Rhodes: The thing I want to say to you is this, that we in northern Ontario have long said that we recognize that you are rapidly using up all of the land in this area. You are building on it faster than you can clear it in some cases. We are saying that what we have in northern Ontario is a lot of land, a lot of good land that can be used for good industrial development.

Mr. Stokes: And they won't let him develop it.

Mr. Rhodes: I am asking you to recognize the need for that industrial growth of secondary industry in northern Ontario. I am asking you to recognize it by putting this industry in that part of the province.

With today's technology and the advances that have been made in pollution control and environmental consideration, industry can be developed in these areas without doing harm to the environment, by starting from square one and building. To attempt to do that in this area now is very difficult. You are using up valuable land that is needed for agricultural purposes, for recreational purposes! valuable land that should not be used for paved parking lots or industrial development, but should be left as it is, as usable land either to be farmed or to be used for park area or to meet your very great need for residential development.

But come up and see what we have to offer. I think that industry can locate there. It is going to require some government consideration. You are going to have to look at incentives for these people to get them up there. There is going to have to be serious consideration given by the federal government. My Liberal colleagues might talk to their colleagues in Ottawa about this.

Mr. Drea: What about Sudbury?

Mr. Rhodes: We are in the same spot in northern Ontario—as was shown on television last evening I believe—as the people are in western Canada. Freight rates are killing us. It is almost impossible to get your material out, and it costs a great deal to get it back in again.

Mr. Reid: Don't tell us, tell them.

Mr. Rhodes: These are the things that are important.

Mr. Drea: Tell Ottawa.

Mr. Rhodes: We need jobs in northern Ontario. These jobs can be brought about by industrial development and growth in our communities. We want to keep our children at home. We want to keep our young people in our northern communities.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Why doesn't the minister jump in bed with them?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Because the member is supporting them now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am not worrying about the member either.

Mr. Deans: I can tell he isn't.

Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, we spend a considerable amount of money in building schools and educational facilities in northern Ontario. Our product, which is our youth, comes out of these fine educational facilities, which we pay for in taxes throughout each year. Yet they find no jobs in their own communities. They must come down here into this metropolitan area that is supposed to be the great end-all where opportunity is. Yet they would be better to stay home, because in coming down here they only add to the problem that we are told exists here, and we recognize exists here.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): That is what regional government does.

Mr. Rhodes: If they could stay and do something in our part of the province we would be much better off, and I think the province as a whole would be better off.

I don't for one minute think this should all happen overnight, as has been suggested is going to happen; the wave of a wand, a change, if there was a different government it would all have happened. I don't believe that at all. I don't believe for one minute that if the New Democrats were in power this would have been done. And I don't believe for a minute that it would have been done with the Liberals in power.

Mr. Reid: Oh, yes it would.

Mr. Rhodes: I honestly believe that progress is now being made now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: I can tell you this, Mr. Speaker, that you can walk into my riding any time you like—and I want anybody to walk around—and tell me what has been done by the federal government in my riding to help that area grow. So let's not get too excited about what the great Liberal Party would have done at all.

Mr. Stokes: They built a forest research school. That's something this government hasn't done.

Mr. Rhodes: Not in my town, they didn't.

Mr. Stokes: They did in Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Rhodes: Well, it is a different Sault Ste. Marie. I would say that the hon. member for Thunder Bay must be lost in that vast, huge riding of his, because if he can show me a forest research school in Sault Ste. Marie, I would be pleased to find it and I've lived there all my life.

Mr. Stokes: I will take the member around some time.

Mr. Rhodes: Would he do that? He is too busy catching pickerel.

Mr. Speaker: I'd like to touch upon the Ontario Municipal Board—

Mr. Reid: One of them is wrong.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): It is evident it must be the member for Sault Ste Marie; the member for Thunder Bay is never wrong!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Will the member for Sault Ste Marie proceed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: I think, Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the member for Thunder Bay, his choice of words was wrong. He is referring to a forest insect pathology laboratory and research facility. It's not a school. If that's what he is referring to, the hole is dug.

Mr. Stokes: That's what I am referring to.

Mr. Rhodes: Oh well, it is not a school.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Rhodes: Anyway, I'd like to touch on the Ontario Municipal Board for a moment.

Much has been said about the inadequacies of the Ontario Municipal Board and some of the problems that they face each day in attempting to handle planning and what have you. I personally am not a great fan of the Ontario Municipal Board, but I don't know what could take its place.

The Ontario Municipal Board has performed a very useful function as far as the citizens of my community are concerned. The Ontario Municipal Board has worked effectively. It has been that court of last resort that many citizens look to as the only protection they have from municipal politicians, from planning boards and what have you.

I think the Ontario Municipal Board has done a good job in the past, and if there is any criticism of them it is because they have had too much work to do. I think a lot of the things that are sent to the Ontario Municipal Board for approval could well be left off their agenda.

It seems utterly silly that little planning things or simple rezoning, where there has been no objection from anyone, have to be sent to the Ontario Municipal Board for their approval and it simply drags on for months. These sort of things could be handled effectively, I think, by changing—

Mr. Reid: He doesn't like anything about this government.

Mr. Rhodes:—and I'm pleased to see in the Throne Speech that is going to happen. There is going to be a look at the Ontario Municipal Board, and that's something that I'm looking forward to having happen. Credit the government with a very good step forward.

Mr. Singer: The minister waited all night for that!

Mr. Rhodes: I'm so pleased to have the hon. member for Downsview present. I miss him when he is not here.

Mr. Singer: The member does? I will stay for the rest.

Mr. Rhodes: And I must say, Mr. Speaker, when he came in this morning I didn't know whether to applaud or salute that tie, it's a beautiful thing.

Mr. Singer: One modest dresser to another.

Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, another item in the Throne Speech that I was interested in was the move to increase the government's activity in forest management. If you live in northern Ontario that is a very important factor.

Our economy is dependent to a great extent upon the forest industry. To do something to enrich that forest industry and to make sure that the forests of our province are going to be a good resource is important. The government is taking that step and I'm looking with interest to see how effective it can be.

I think it is essential that it be done now, and that we get moving into keeping that resource as it is. The cost of the product is getting higher as a result of it having to be hauled so much further to mills. I don't have to tell the members for the other northern ridings about that, but I want to see that resource management and the reforestation programme carried out.

In tourism, again there is a move by the government to provide more assistance to the tourist industry. I agree it may sound parochial, but it is important to our economy in the north; tourism is a great industry for us. It dumps untold millions of dollars into the economy of this whole province. And we want this to happen.

Mr. Laughren: A real tax base there.

Mr. Rhodes: A real tax base is the comment from the gentleman from the Nickel Belt riding.

Mr. Foulds: With a note of irony in his voice.

Mr. Ferrier: Some of the NOTO people weren't saying kind things about the government in their last issue.

Mr. Rhodes: I'm sorry, I didn't hear the member.

Mr. Ferrier: Some of the NOTO people weren't saying very kind things about the Premier in their last issue.

Mr. Rhodes: I am not too concerned about what the NOTO people might say about me or about my colleagues.

Mr. Ferrier: They are the member's supporters.

Mr. Rhodes: This simply goes to show that we don't jump up and down every time one particular group applauds or pulls the string, unlike some members of this Legislature that I know, or members of certain parties that I know.

Mr. Laughren: Except the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Ferrier: The members opposite jump for the Chamber of Commerce pretty well.

Mr. Rhodes: I don't have to jump for the Chamber of Commerce either. I simply say that despite comments from the member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Reid: The government just jumps when Mr. Moog pulls the string.

Mr. Lawlor: That is the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Rhodes: If the member for Nickel Belt wants to stand in this House and say openly and publicly to the people of northern Ontario, or for that matter of all of this province, that tourism is bad for this province, then by all means I will give him the time to do so now.

Mr. Laughren: It does not provide a tax base and the member knows it.

Mr. Rhodes: Tourism has paid a lot of money; it has helped to keep a lot of people working. All one has to do is take a look at what's happening.

It's a great thing about the members of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker. They continually attack those things that provide jobs in this province. I understand that my friend from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) is going to take that on a little later on in this debate, and I want to listen with interest.

Mr. Laughren: The substandard wages too.

Mr. Lawlor: When International Nickel breathes, the party over there freezes with complete paralysis from the neck up.

Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, I understand there are a number of speakers left to go on before we adjourn for tonight. One in particular whom I want to listen to with a great deal of interest would be the member for Port Arthur, I think it is, who is apparently going to follow shortly. So I will simply conclude by saying this, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Foulds: Just as soon as the member sits down.

Mr. Stokes: Say to this government that if they ignore the north they do so at their own peril.

Mr. Laughren: Cross the floor.

Mr. Rhodes: I am convinced that in the last several years this government has shown a very keen interest in helping northern Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Like Highway 17.

Mr. Rhodes: I am satisfied that we are going to do that.

Mr. Reid: What was there in the Throne Speech that referred to northern Ontario? What was there?

Mr. Rhodes: I think with regard to the reference in the Throne Speech to air transportation—

Mr. Reid: Three airports for three northern Indian reserves; nothing else!

Mr. Rhodes: Let's wait and see what's going to happen.

Mr. Foulds: Nothing for the north and the member knows it.

Mr. Rhodes: We don't have to worry about what is going to—

Mr. Laughren: Support our amendment.

Mr. Reid: A fertilizer plant up in Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Rhodes: I didn't realize the member for Rainy River was so touchy. But I think he relates better to Manitoba anyway.

Mr. Reid: Did the member read the Throne Speech? What is in there about northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: He is running for the leadership, didn't the members know?

Mr. Drea: He was running for the leadership.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Oh I thought he was!

Mr. Reid: We have 22 running for the leadership. We have lots of talent.

Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, what I will do now is thank you for your attention and allow my friend from Port Arthur to continue.

Mr. Singer: He is one of the few Tories who has a sense of humour—one of the very few.

Mr. Reid: All of them have got to have it to sit over there.

Mr. Lawlor: The member could have been far more critical of his government than that.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne should more appropriately be entitled the "Drone from the Throne." It is almost as if Dalton Camp was on leave of absence this past year. Under the delusion that he is supplying the federal Conservatives with sure-grip ballet shoes, he is in fact probably at this very moment slipping sophisticated banana skins under the heavy-footed two-step of droopy-eyed Bob.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, the Throne drone—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I just have to hear to understand what he is saying.

Mr. Foulds: —looked like a scissors-and-paste job of leftovers from press releases, unimplemented legislation, and those unused, prefabricated speeches—

Mr. Singer: Who wrote that?

Mr. Foulds: —delivered at Rotary Club luncheons.

An hon. member: That's what it was.

Mr. Singer: Who wrote that one?

Mr. Foulds: The only other speeches delivered this session which rival it in unequalled inflated verbiage—

Mr. Singer: Who wrote that one?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): It sounds like an old reply to the Throne Speech by the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Singer: He used to deliver that off the top of his head. He didn't have to read it.

Mr. Foulds: —are the interjections by the hon. member for Downsview and the statement this afternoon by the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mr. Welch) on Heritage Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: That statement this afternoon, like the Speech from the Throne, was full of great vocabulary but the syntax certainly lacked any panache—and that is leaving aside the content. One can quite easily leave aside the contents of that statement this afternoon, and the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): And the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Yes, right; but he won't go away.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): He is going away, by heaven.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I might.

Mr. Foulds: Such a collection or resounding twaddle I have never heard; except of course from the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry. If the member wants to talk about me I'll stay.

Mr. Foulds: That is my last mention.

But nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the despair that I feel about this government; the tremendous ennui, frustration that one must feel every time one enters this chamber; the feeling that, "My God, here we go through the ritual again"—in spite of that feeling, I feel that one must keep trying—keep trying to penetrate the armour and the insensitivity of this government.

Mr. Lewis: And the member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) in particular. Just take a look at him.

Mr. Foulds: Let's just contemplate a few of the gems from the Speech from the Throne. How resounding it all does sound.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Now take it easy. We know the member can read.

Mr. Foulds: Take this one, Mr. Speaker, on page 6: New policy initiatives in the energy field are a matter of active and intensive consideration."

Now, that's not just a phrase, Mr. Speaker. It's not just a sentence in the Speech from the Throne, but a whole paragraph. Let's just roll those orotund tones of that one around again:

New policy initiatives in the energy field are a matter of active and intensive considerations.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Pretty impressive.

Mr. Lawlor: Should have said "energetic."

Mr. Foulds: Listen to the bugle call. Listen to the trumpeting. But what does that sentence, nay, that whole paragraph mean?

Mr. Drea: Did the member write that himself? He didn't write that.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): He did though. I watched him.

Mr. Foulds: In plain English, "New policy initiatives in the energy field are a matter of active and intensive consideration," means in effect, Mr. Speaker, we're thinking about what the hell we're going to do with energy. That's what it means. The member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence), the Premier (Mr. Davis) and even William Kelly are all together thinking—

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Mainly William Kelly.

Mr. Foulds —about what this province is going to do with energy. And before I go on in a masochistic way to the other—

Mr. Drea: Why doesn't the member put some in his speech?

Mr. Foulds: —delights of the Throne Speech, I would like to take a look at a few of my favourite cabinet ministers and a few of my favourite government members.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): It is an old pastime over there. Delete that. We have heard it before.

Mr. Foulds: I really don't think the member for Scarborough West—and I admire and respect him enormously—

Mr. Drea: The member had better.

Mr. Foulds: —really did justice last week in his review of the galaxy on the cabinet and government benches.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): I was insulted. The leader of the NDP missed me.

Mr. Foulds: There is little hope in the Throne Speech, so perhaps we'll have to look forward to the budget. That gets me to my first favourite cabinet minister, the Treasurer (Mr. White). He is always the doughty battler full of bumptious skill, good humour; a delightful opponent; the dead-end kid of the Conservative cabinet.

Mr. Deans: He's a miserable, useless—

Mr. Foulds: Carry on. I love this interjection.

Mr. Lewis: He said he's a dead-end kid.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Don't the members agree about him?

Mr. Foulds: Not quite. The Treasurer isn't quite the great white hope of the "big blue machine," but he is certainly the most rotund lightning rod for his slightly shifty-eyed friend who sits occasionally to his right.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Very occasionally.

Mr. Foulds: I take that back, Mr. Speaker; that's a little too harsh. The Premier can't really help it that if, in the remaking of the Premier, everything in fine precision has been remodelled except his eyes. Do you notice how they dart about—darting is probably a better word than shifty—

An hon. member: Yes, I've noticed.

Mr. Foulds: —like two alert, slightly doubtful but alive sparks imprisoned in a hollow outer shell. I noticed him on television the other night, Mr. Speaker. I don't often get a chance to observe him in this Legislature.

Mr. Deans: Nobody does.

Mr. Foulds: He was at that point reading his artful and yet hollow speech to the oil barons in Alberta. Those eyes kept darting around the audience, not quite exuding the confidence that the whole, sleek, well-tailored, persona does here in the Legislature.

Mr. Deans: He was looking for prospects for Bill Kelly.

Mr. Foulds: Did Hansard get that? He was looking for prospects for Bill Kelly.

Those eyes seemed to be saying, "How am I doing, fellows?" And they weren't really getting any positive response. They certainly weren't getting the positive response that the Premier gets from the sycophants here in the Legislature. In fact, those eyes looked a little bit as if they were watching a tennis match.

You know, I really have a great deal of sympathy for the Premier. I'd like to relate a story if I may, an anecdote that happened to someone whom I know quite intimately.

Mr. Drea: Why doesn't the member stick to the script?

Mr. Foulds: The Conservative Party, I understand, is still using the services of a market research company from Detroit. They are surveying the province, I'm told, on the average of once every two weeks or so to find out what the public is thinking. You see it's a government of reaction in the real sense, not only reaction in the conservative, legislative sense but reaction to popular opinion. They have no concept of leadership.

Mr. Laughren: They are working on the member for Wellington-Dufferin now.

Mr. Foulds: The surveyor came into my home, as a matter of fact, and asked my wife if she would care to answer a few questions. After the first six pages of things about—

Mr. Drea: Did the member for Nickel Belt write that? I didn't think so.

Mr. Foulds: —prices and the member for Scarborough Centre and other nonpolitical matters, it became apparent as the survey went on it was in fact a political survey. The key, turning-point question was: "There has been a lot of controversy lately about whether Mr. Davis should be called Premier Davis or Prime Minister Davis."

Well, my wife happened to have been in the Legislature a year ago December, late one Thursday evening when we were discussing the supplementary estimates of the then Department—soon to be Ministry—of Community and Social Services. My good friend and colleague from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) had raised the matter of the inadequate allowances paid to those on general welfare assistance and under the Family Benefits Act and that sleek group over there had pounded their desks in derision at the member for Sudbury East.

That, Mr. Speaker, seared itself indelibly on my wife's mind, so when this surveyor asked, "What do you think Mr. Davis should be called?", because the Premier had been there, along with the other cabinet ministers, calling down derision upon my colleague from Sudbury East, she said something in very unparliamentary language. Roughly translated, I think you could report it in this House as saying, "I think Mr. Davis should be called a fat, complacent person of unknown parental origin."

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That means she is a good NDP'er, I must say.

Mr. Foulds: Now I like the Premier, Mr. Speaker. I think that underneath that programmed exterior, underneath that false confidence, underneath that complacency—

Mr. Drea: Notice he guards his back.

Mr. Foulds: —underneath that arrogance, there is a human being striving to get out.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Foulds: And it's that Bill Davis—

Mr. Drea: He keeps his hand behind his back.

Mr. Foulds: —the one that never has any chance, that I wish well; the one that never has a chance to live.

The Premier's character has the stuff of tragedy in it—tragedy on the scale of Willie Loman.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, that's not bad.

An hon. member: That's pretty good.

Mr. Lewis: That's not bad.

Mr. Foulds: Now he might have to get a reference to get that one, but that's about it.

Mr. Laughren: He is Willie's oldest son.

Mr. Foulds: The inner being I wish well and freedom. The outer being represents all that is false, harmful and insincere in politics and in political life in this province.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I watch the Premier with fascination, with the awe, the horror and the compulsion of watching a tragedy.

For comic relief I turn to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells). Now there's a minister that one cannot watch with any sense of impending tragedy, no darting eyes there—

Mr. Laughren: It's already happened.

Mr. Foulds: —except, with increasing frequency, as the member for Scarborough West pointed out, to the often vacant seat of the Premier, seat No. 7.

No, the Minister of Education is fascinating in a totally different way—handsome, dashing—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, no!

Mr. Foulds: —jaw jutting out, well tailored—

Mr. Lewis: I dissociate myself.

Mr. Foulds: —he represents all that is good in the man who reads "Playboy," the grade 8 boy who has never quite grown up because he still doesn't quite know what girls look like without their clothes on—

Mr. Laughren: He's a locker-room boy.

Mr. Foulds: —so he turns to the tinted and glossy pinks of the Playboy centrefold.

Mr. Lewis: I assure you, that's quite true.

Mr. Laughren: Not bad, if not "Penthouse."

Mr. Foulds: But I must give the Minister of Education his due—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order, please. Rule No. 16(a), 12, reads as follows:

In debate, a member shall be called to order if he speaks disrespectfully of Her Majesty, or any of the royal family, or the Governor General or the administrator of Canada, or the Lieutenant Governor or the Administrator of the province.

Now, it seems to me that the hon. member should be permitted a certain amount of leeway and humour in his speech—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Did he say something bad about him?

Mr. Foulds: Not yet.

Mr. Speaker: —but he is speaking of the Premier of this province and I think he is just going a little bit too far.

Mr. Deans: No, no, he is speaking of the Minister of Education.

Mr. Speaker: He is going a little too far.

Mr. Drea: Come on, clean up the act. It's five after 10.

Mr. Laughren: What a lot of nonsense!

Mr. Foulds: To the point of order, and continuing my remarks, you interrupted me at a most opportune time, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): He isn't dry behind the ears yet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Drea: Clean up the act.

Mr. Foulds: I must give the Minister of Education his due.

Mr. Drea: Clean up the act.

Mr. Foulds: After his jaunt to Florida he has been doing his penance. He has been in his place during question period at least three days in a row, a capital and consistent performance.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, right.

Mr. Laughren: And unusual.

Mr. Foulds: Before I move back to the intricacies of the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Laughren: Illustrate it; illustrate it.

Mr. Foulds: —I'd like to turn kindly, if I may, to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Drea: He looks a lot better than the member does.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister of Education is wishing a thunderbolt would come down.

Mr. Foulds: It was just yesterday that the thought clicked in my mind.

Mr. Lewis: Save us, save us from the Burt Reynolds of the Legislature.

Mr. Foulds: We've got, not just one—

Mr. Laughren: That's the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko).

Mr. Foulds: We've got—

Mr. Drea: The member's colleague just flipped; he must make sure he says who it is.

Mr. Foulds: We've got not just one but two bush-league John Turners in our midst, the one from Peterborough—and the member for Peterborough (Mr. Turner) is an ingratiating chap, almost as ingratiating as the Minister of Education. Why, I am told that the member for Peterborough still thinks that the members of the Legislature are his constituents. He offers them rides in his station-wagon, he buys them coffee—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's an excellent member he is talking about.

Mr. Foulds: —he says hello; a good fellow; as Chaucer would have it, a hail, well met fellow.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Foulds: No, but the other, the second John Turner we have, is embodied in the personality of the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), the same hard, glinting determined look as the real John Turner, the one who danced with Princess Margaret—and I hope I don't speak disrespectfully of the royal family, Mr. Speaker—and the one who later became the federal Liberal Treasurer. The look of a man who wears contact lenses.

Mr. Drea: Does the member?

Mr. Foulds: Do you remember when he first came into the House, Mr. Speaker, how he fiddled with those glasses? No more of that now. Now he fiddles with his suit coat button as he answers all inquiries during question period in that basso profundo voice.

Mr. Drea: At least he has a suit coat on.

Mr. Foulds: But enough of this frivolity, Mr. Speaker. I must push things on to a higher plane, I quite agree.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, get off the Premier.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to talk now in what my colleague from Parkdale (Mr. Duksza) likes to phrase as "in a conceptual sense" about the cabinet and the government.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Foulds: Here we have two distinct types of situations in the cabinet. We have the ministers, the individuals such as the Minister of Education, who in 3½ years has served in three ministries. One of my constituents called him "a permanent revolving cabinet minister." Then we have the permanent revolving cabinet ministries, such as the Ministry of Treasury, Economics, and Intergovernmental Affairs.

In the short 15 months since the present Legislature was constituted, we have had three Treasurers, all cast in the same mould, abrasive, hearty, sometimes profound—seldom but sometimes—but three of them within 15 months! Is it any wonder that we have no sense of direction in this province? Instead we have a very strong sense of indecision.

As my colleague from York South (Mr. MacDonald) has pointed out on some occasions, the visible symbol of the whimsical direction taken by this government with regard to regional government is that at the present time this government doesn't have a separate person of cabinet rank now responsible for regional government.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Meen) just isn't going to get his cabinet post in spite of his hard work, doggedness and determination.

Now back to the Throne Speech itself. On page 8 there is this delightful quotation: "On receiving the recommendations of the task force of the Ministry of the Environment, my government will introduce legislation on the disposal of solid waste."

How many in the cabinet, Mr. Speaker, felt a pain when those words were read?

Mr. Laughren: I think all of them.

Mr. Foulds: Note once again, not just a phrase, not just a sentence, but a whole paragraph! How many in the cabinet felt "My God! He's talking about me?" I suspect there was a certain churning in the stomach—disposal of solid waste! "My God, the boss is going to legislate me out of existence."

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would, turning much more seriously now and with a good deal of sincerity—

Mr. Drea: The member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) didn't write this, did he?

Mr. Foulds: Yes, as a matter of fact I did.

Mr. Drea: No, I was talking to the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Foulds: I would like to turn with some sincerity to the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell). I remember the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrooke) being very gracious about my own first contribution to this Legislature not so very long ago and I would like to return the compliment.

If I may paraphrase the member for Sarnia, as well as my memory serves, I think that the contribution of the member for St. George speaks well for herself and for her party. I would be less than honest, I must say, if I wished the member and her party well politically but I do in a personal and very real sense welcome her presence to the Legislature and wish her well.

I would like now, Mr. Speaker, to turn to things of substance in the Throne Speech if I could. But alas there are no things of substance in the Throne Speech.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I didn't think there was anything in it.

Mr. Laughren: He will add substance to it.

Mr. Martel: It's difficult to find.

Mr. Foulds: I am going to deal briefly with a few of the issues that I think should have been mentioned in the Throne Speech with regard to northern Ontario. A number of important matters that require immediate and serious attention in northern Ontario were deliberately ignored.

For example, in a passing way, there were exactly three mentions of that part of the province—but there was no mention of much-needed highway development in northern Ontario; there was no mention of assistance for unorganized territories even though the former Treasurer and the Premier himself had said during the last session of the House that something in this regard would be forthcoming to help them with their financing problems. No new programmes to improve health care delivery in the north were announced.

I know it sounds to the people from southern Ontario a bit like a broken record, nevertheless, it's the only weapon we have—to keep reiterating the social and economic injustices that are visited upon the people from the north. To me the most disturbing announcement was the one that proclaimed with a great deal of smugness and self-satisfaction that a third school for the deaf would be opened here in southern Ontario, in London. Our children in northern Ontario must still travel all the way to Belleville if they have a hearing disability because there is no centre for deaf children in northern Ontario.

The ministry and the department talked with some emotion and with slight justification about the improved programme for getting those children home on weekends so that the ties with the family are maintained. But they cannot get the children from Belleville to northern Ontario and back for a weekend. Once again it is a clear case of discrimination against the people who live in northern Ontario.

The government announced a reforestation programme. It is welcome, yes, but long overdue also—and necessary because neither private industry nor the government itself has kept pace with the cutting of our forests in the past. There is no mention in all of the Ministry of Natural Resources, reorganization of a re-emphasis on the unit forester; no mention of the fact that we have been over-cutting softwood trees in northwestern Ontario; no mention of any concrete proposals in this regard.

I am frankly worried about the announcement that the government will be implementing some of the recommendations of the interim report of the select committee on land drainage of which the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) is the chairman. Although his far-fetched idea about the giant reservoir in northwestern Ontario has not reached the recommendation stage, people in northwestern Ontario are disturbed about that idea and the press that it received and the lack of denial by the provincial government—to the extent that the hon. member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) wrote to the Premier imploring him to ask that committee to refrain from visiting northwestern Ontario because he feared for their safety.

When the matter was raised in this House the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) laughed it off as if it were a joke. Well, it may be a joke but it is a very bad one. It is a joke that will destroy the way of life of a number of native peoples in northwestern Ontario, and that, Mr. Speaker, is something for which we will not stand. And that, Mr. Speaker, is a very real reason why there has been a resurgence, particularly in northwestern Ontario in the last year, of that perennial topic—separatism. That is not talk that I like to hear.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): He didn't even mention he was going to have a lake.

Mr. Foulds: The hon. member for Fort William says he did not mention it. The member is not a member of that committee and was not present when the statement was made. Frankly, I would rather trust the reporter from the Canadian Press than the later contradiction and denial of the member for Lambton.

Mr. Jessiman: I read what he said. I read what was quoted.

Mr. Deans: That is an exaggeration and the member for Fort William knows it. How could he have read what was said?

Mr. Jessiman: I read what he said.

Mr. Foulds: Was there a transcript of the hearing?

Mr. Lewis: Oh come on! That implies more than any of us are prepared to believe.

Mr. Foulds: The member's denials are based on ignorance. He didn't deny it when I raised it during question period. However, Mr. Speaker, I know I should not engage in crossfire. I should continue with the debate, a formalized ritual.

One of the things that intrigued us in northern Ontario as we read the Speech from the Throne was the provincial assistance for the development of airstrips and airports in the north. I would hope that that token gesture would be implemented as quickly as possible. I would also hope that the—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Would that be for jets?

Mr. Foulds: Well, it may be for private jets you know.

I would hope that the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) would give particular attention to something in the riding of the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) about which, strangely enough, he doesn't seem to have made strong representation to cabinet. That is the extension or the improvement of airport facilities at the town of Kenora.

It is very interesting that members of the Conservative government were invited to attend a meeting with the Kenora and district Chamber of Commerce. The Chamber of Commerce had transportation waiting at the Kenora airport for the arrival of the ministers of government and lo and behold they didn't arrive. The ministers found it more convenient to fly to Winnipeg and drive back, by their own passive admission indicating that the facilities at Kenora were inadequate for the kind of traffic that is now being generated in that area.

Mr. Stokes: We flew to Fort Frances last fall and had to land at International Falls, Minn.

Mr. Stokes: They couldn't accommodate us.

Mr. Foulds: Then the cabinet members had the gall to stand up at the meeting to point with pride to phase 2 of Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario Region, and tell the people about the development of airports and airstrips in northwestern Ontario. Not one of them had used the present service. Is that because it was inadequate? Is that a passive admission of their neglect of the north? I think so.

One other small matter has been intriguing me for some time, and I raise it in the form of a rhetorical question. Sitting on my desk for the last two weeks has been a press release from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. The press release goes into some great detail and has some hallelujahs of praise about an 11-man Ontario tourism team that left for Spain on the weekend before the press release was issued.

Mr. Singer: In a government plane?

Mr. Foulds: Well, the minister later said that all those who weren't government members had to pay their own way. But when one goes through the list of those people who are on the mission to Spain, there are a number of civil servants—and that's fair enough—but when one goes through the list and looks at the locations of the residences, one finds such addresses as the Royal York Hotel, Toronto; Cleveland's House, Post Office, Muskoka; 267 Bathurst St., London 15; The Continental Inn, Barrie; Arrowhead Ranch,

RR2, Collingwood; Wigamog Inn, Haliburton; Suite 8, 15 Clapperton St., Barrie; One Thousand Islands Travel Council, 209 Ontario St., Kingston—

Mr. J. P. MacBeth (York West): What is the hon. member reading?

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): A bus schedule!

Mr. Foulds: —development branch, Ministry of Industry and Tourism, Hearst Block, Queen's Park; and, finally, one address from North Bay.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): Does the hon. member know what he's reading? Does he know?

Mr. Foulds: Not one representative on that mission—

Mr. MacBeth: Of what mission?

Mr. Foulds: If the hon. member had been here and listening instead of yapping, he would have heard.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: Of that tourism mission to Spain—

Mr. MacBeth: What is he reading?

An hon. member: He doesn't even know himself what he's reading.

Mr. Foulds: Of that tourism team to Spain—do you want me to—

Mr. Singer: Start over again.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, to clarify things for the hon. member, I'll read the whole release into the record.

Mr. Speaker: I think not. No. Order. It would be out of order on the basis of repetition.

Mr. Martel: He's not. He's reading—

Mr. Foulds: I'm not.

Mr. Speaker: No. It would be repetition.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, if I may crave your indulgence.

Mr. Foulds: All I read were the addresses attached to the release.

Mr. Speaker: I heard them quite clearly.

Mr. Foulds: To clarify things for the hon. member I'll read the entire release—

Mr. Speaker: No, that would be out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: Well, if I may speak extempore, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. member: Paraphrase it all!

An hon. member: Extempore?

Mr. Foulds: For the hon. member and his enlightenment, the minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Jessiman: Has the member taken any trips lately? Have there been no trips for him up to Nickel Belt lately?

Mr. Foulds: Not lately. No. The member for Fort William should look at the public accounts and see who had the big expenses.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: Who claimed his mileage back and forth from Thunder Bay? Who went by plane, which was cheaper?

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Foulds: Now the press release on the mission that I was speaking about, Mr. Speaker, before—

Mr. Deans: What was that the member was saying about claiming mileage and taking the plane?

Mr. Foulds: Which was cheaper, yes.

Mr. Deans: Who did that?

Mr. Foulds: I'm not sure but I think if the member takes a look at the public accounts and sees the variation in figures he might get a hint of who it was.

Mr. Deans: What was that? I didn't get that.

Mr. MacBeth: Cheerful Tom!

Mr. Deans: Does the member know something about this?

Mr. Laughren: The member for Fort William must be careful.

Mr. Foulds: This tourism mission to Spain was sponsored by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. There was an 11-man team from Ontario. All of the representation on that team—

Mr. MacBeth: Well, where do you think the team was going to come from?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the member would address his remarks through the Chair.

Mr. Foulds: All of the representation on that team, Mr. Speaker, was from southern Ontario except for one person from North Bay.

An hon. member: Oh, that's the point!

Mr. Foulds: An 11-man team with one person from the north and nobody from northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Jessiman: There just happened to be one from Fort William riding on that team.

Mr. Foulds: There was? Did he get a free ride?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Foulds: Why wasn't he—I find this intriguing, Mr. Speaker. It is really quite delightful.

Mr. Speaker: I didn't quite hear the interjection.

Mr. Foulds: There was an unknown appointee on that mission whom the Ministry of Industry and Tourism didn't feel fit to name in the press release. It is really intriguing. It's amazing that—

Mr. Jessiman: There was fine representation from the city of Thunder Bay.

Mr. Martel: Was the member for Fort William there?

Mr. Foulds: This is really intriguing. Once again, the Ministry of Industry and Tourism has overlooked certain members who went along for a free ride, I gather. Let's leave Industry and Tourism to the hon. member for Fort William. He's very good at it; he enjoys it. I'd like to get back to the Speech from the Throne, if I may.

Mr. Laughren: If it wasn't for the Peter principle, the member for Fort William would be successful.

Mr. Foulds: I'd like to contrast the provincial government's attitude towards two professional bodies in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): The member for Nickel Belt shouldn't run down people he doesn't know anything about.

Mr. Martel: He's not running down people. It's a principle.

Mr. Foulds: One gets a hint of this in the Speech from the Throne on page 14.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Martel: He never even gave the name.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Port Arthur would defer to the hon. member for Sudbury East he might get the floor.

Mr. Martel: He's just looking for a little support.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur has the floor.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: There are more pre-palaeolithic Tories in the House tonight.

Mr. Martel: They think there's a full moon out tonight.

Mr. Jessiman: The member for Port Arthur should check with the member for Thunder Bay because this is his report on the same trip.

Mr. Foulds: Same trip? The member for Thunder Bay?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foulds: To Spain? The hon. member for Thunder Bay has gone to Spain?

Mr. Lewis: The member for Thunder Bay would not go to Spain.

Mr. Martel: He'd return to his car quietly.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: If he did, he wouldn't get out.

Mr. Lewis: That's why he wouldn't go.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Foulds: If the member for Thunder Bay had been appointed to the committee, I'm sure the Ministry of Industry and Tourism would not have overlooked it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foulds: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Speech from the Throne and contrast the government's attitude to two professional bodies in this province by little key phrases in the speech. On page 14 it says:

My government will present legislation with respect to negotiations between the teaching profession and school boards.

Mr. Martel: This is a pretty good place to adjourn because it's a new policy.

Mr. Deans: Yes, move adjournment.

Mr. Foulds: At the bottom of page 15 it says:

Further legislation will be presented to you to strengthen the position and clarify the role of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

On the advice of my colleagues and all members of the House, because I am getting into another aspect of the speech, a rather detailed analysis of the Reville report, if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would move the adjournment of the debate at this time.

Mr. Foulds moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could rise on what I hope you will consider a point of privilege—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): There is no such thing in the House.

Mr. Rhodes:—before the House adjourns. Well, a point of something or other, Mr. Speaker. I am rising on one of the simple points that the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) does regularly, whatever it is.

Mr. Deans: I see. He is not capable of one of those points.

Mr. Rhodes: Earlier in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I referred to a statistic in which I said—and I hope I quote what I said—that, if I used the figures that I would relate to northern Ontario to southern Ontario, it would indicate a fatality rate of 7,700 persons. That was erroneous; I used the wrong figures, and I apologize for using those figures, because they are not correct.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): What are the right figures?

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the remarks of the hon. member constituted neither a point of order nor a point of privilege. However, they are now on the record, and the record stands corrected.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): No. As a matter of fact, how do you correct an error in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 1973

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the east gallery are students from Bialik Hebrew Day School of Toronto and Dr. S. J. Phillips Senior Public School of Oshawa. In the west gallery we have students from the Welland Centennial Secondary School of Welland.

Statements by the ministry.

TOUR OF LIVESTOCK MARKETING FACILITIES

Hon. A. W. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation to the members of the House, I would like to advise through you, sir, that the Ontario Food Council is co-ordinating a tour of livestock marketing facilities in the Toronto area on Monday starting at 9 a.m. Generally, it is for the benefit of the members of the Queen's Park press gallery.

The gallery has already been invited to attend and notice has been posted on the bulletin board of the press gallery. Formal invitations will be provided along with background data of the places which will be visited. I understand this will be done today.

A bus will pick up those who wish to take the tour at the front door of Queen's Park on Monday at 9 a.m., and will return to the press gallery, Legislature building, in time for the 2 o'clock question period. I would like to extend an invitation to any or all members of the Legislature who wish to attend and to participate in this tour, to avail themselves of the opportunity.

The tour will include the Ontario Stock Yards market, one of the packing houses and the meat cutting facilities of one of the major supermarkets in the area. The general purpose of the tour is to give the inside story on marketing margins, dressing percentages and the facts and figures on waste, shrinkage, markups, etc., in the various processes of the packing industry.

Lunch will be served, and a round-table press conference will wind up the tour. Those involved at the press conference who will be available to answer questions after the tour has been completed will be members of the Food Council—I am hoping that the chairman, Mr. Williams, will be able to attend—Fred Campbell, the general manager of the Ontario Stock Yards, Keith Leckie of the Meat Packers Council; and one of the men from Canada Packers, whose plant I believe will be visited. I do not intend to participate in the tour, nor will I be attending the press conference.

In 1969 and 1971 the Ontario Beef Improvement Association sponsored farm tours for the benefit of food editors, farm editors, feature editors and members of the Consumers' Association of Canada. In each case two premises in the Toronto area were visited, including a cow-calf breeding operation and a feedlot. On each occasion between 80 and 90 people attended. In 1972 a similar tour in the London area was conducted and was similarly well attended. Certainly the knowledgeable and responsible reporting of those who attended the other tours is a clear indication of the success of these ventures sponsored by the Ontario Beef Improvement Association.

I sincerely hope that the tour planned on Monday will result in all those who are fortunate enough to participate in the tour gaining knowledge of what actually happens in the marketing, processing and distribution of livestock, an industry which means so very much to the total economy of our province.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Treasurer: Do recent statements attributed to him about the timetable for regional government indicate any change in the policy that had been previously enunciated? Specifically, is there any possibility that the government's timetable for the implementation of regional government in Hamilton-Wentworth may be delayed? Secondly, will the minister make public the recommendations for Haldimand-Norfolk, which have been available for more than a year, even if he has to extract certain recommendations that might be of a land-sensitive nature?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Well, I certainly hope we wouldn't have to postpone Hamilton-Wentworth, Mr. Speaker. I had a meeting yesterday, as I think I mentioned, with the reeve of West Flamborough, who is the warden of the county; I think they want to go ahead. I have a meeting at 11 o'clock today with Mayor Copps and 18 of his councillors; I rather think they want to go ahead. So my answer to the first question is that I am very hopeful we can deal with Hamilton-Wentworth during this session.

Insofar as Haldimand-Norfolk is concerned, I am sorry I am not well informed on this. At the convention of the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario, on Tuesday night, the wardens of Norfolk and Haldimand counties asked me to expedite the report. I have undertaken to do that, and I would hope to have that in their hands within the next week or two.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: But the report has been in the minister's hands for a year.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, certainly it has been in the ministry for a period of time but, as I say, I am sorry I am not informed about the details of it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Would it be possible, with the rather more conciliatory approach that the present Treasurer is taking in this matter—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Conciliatory?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, sure. If we are to accept his statements that as far as he is concerned the pressures on regional government are somewhat lessened, and that there is no rigid timetable which cannot be adapted to the needs of the community, is it possible that there can be a further delay, as was requested in Brant and Brantford yesterday of the Premier (Mr. Davis), in the requirement that the commissioner in that area make his report by the summer of this year?

Hon. Mr. White: I would like to take a little longer and do it better if that is necessary. If there is strong feeling that the report should be delayed, I would like to accommodate the people in the area.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have one last question, and that will be it as far as this subject is concerned. Will the minister give some formal statement regarding the reconsideration of the 150,000 population limit which was the established guideline for the last four years on proposed regional government areas?

Hon. Mr. White: I think I owe it to the House to make a formal statement on that subject. I've been spending most of my time on the budget, but immediately after the budget I would like to try to put in more formal sense the remarks I made yesterday in response to a question. I don't see any magic in 150,000 or any other criterion established by experts. I think it calls for judgement. I think probably every case is a little different, and I wouldn't lock myself into 150,000 or any other specific.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that as a result of his bungling there are communities in the Wentworth area which previously were in agreement but which are now bickering among each other?

Hon. Mr. White: No, sir, I am not aware of that.

Mr. Deans: One more supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No supplementary. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. V. Singer (Downsview): Are you not going to let me ask a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: No. We've had three supplementaries. The hon. member for Downsview realizes full well that questions must be matters of public urgency.

Mr. Singer: No, I don't.

Mr. Speaker: A question from the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Singer: When you can decide that policemen's duties aren't matters of urgency, then I don't realize it at all.

USE OF INDIAN PROGRAMME FUNDS FOR WOUNDED KNEE EXPEDITION

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question of the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services. Is he aware of a statement made by a Mr. Myers, ostensibly a field worker for the London branch of the American Indian movement, indicating that $5,000 of provincial funds, that had been allocated for a northern Indian youth development programme, had been spent by Indians in the southern part of the province and from Buffalo to finance an expedition to Wounded Knee in support of the Indian situation there?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge no funds have been allocated to any Indian organization for expenses to go to Wounded Knee.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I hope the minister will undertake to look into this matter, because the statement has been made publicly and been quite widely reported already in the London Free Press.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

PHILCO-FORD LAYOFFS

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: Was he informed in advance by Philco-Ford in Don Mills that they intended to transfer a considerable section of their manufacturing of auto radio assemblies to Brazil?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Harris, I believe, the public relations officer for Philco-Ford, wanted to see me on Wednesday. Unfortunately, I couldn't see him personally, but he came to the office and informed us that from 40 to 75 of their employees would be affected by this layoff.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, in fact the information from the company came to the minister virtually on the day when they made the announcement? There was no advance consultation with the ministry over a period of time?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No, the first time I heard about it was on Wednesday.

Mr. Lewis: Wednesday.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Did Mr. Harris indicate when these layoffs would occur? Would they all come at once or would they be over a period of time?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Can they justify them is the main thing.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: To my knowledge, he didn't give me any specific date as to the time of the layoffs; he didn't say exactly. However, we made sure of telling him of the provisions of our Employment Standards Act and we have also offered the services of our employment adjustment service.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is there any statutory obligation for an employer contemplating this kind of action to inform the Ministry of Labour some time in advance? If not, will the minister put such a statutory obligation on the books?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: It is a matter I will be glad to look into.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I think one more supplementary would be in order.

Mr. Bounsall: When will the minister consider setting up a plant shutdown relocation compensation fund for workers who are tossed out of their jobs in this way, the funding to be paid for by the industries in this province?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, I think this would be a federal responsibility more than a provincial one.

Mr. Lewis: The government can't allow plants to behave that way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ontario South—I'm sorry, does the member for Scarborough West have further questions?

TORONTO DOWNTOWN HOUSING

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker.

Can I ask the provincial Treasurer, in the absence of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman), whether the Province of Ontario is willing to grant to the city of Toronto the right to purchase the land now held by the developer at Dundas and Sherbourne Sts. which apparently it is the city's wish to do?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I was given to understand, shortly before the House opened, that there was information coming to me from the Ministry of Revenue which might answer that question. If I may, I'll wait until that information arrives here.

COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON GERIATRICS

Mr. Lewis: Thank you. I hope the Speaker will allow the Treasurer to answer at that time.

May I ask a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services? How is it that the minister's advisory committee on geriatrics has nine members, not one of whom is a woman?

An hon. member: Old age.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker, and I for one believe we should have more women in this field. The hon. member knows that we have several women on our board of review and I will certainly look into this matter and try to appoint women to the committee.

COMPOSITION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON REHABILITATION

Mr. Lewis: A further question of the Minister of Community and Social Services: How is it that the minister's advisory committee on rehabilitation has 11 members, not one of whom is a woman?

COMPOSITION OF LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Labour: How is it that the Ontario Labour Relations Board—governing a work force of which, as my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) indicated yesterday, almost 40 per cent comprises women—is a board of 14 members, not one of whom is a woman?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I have already answered a similar question previously, I guess.

Mr. Lewis: That was about arbitration panels.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, that's right, in connection with arbitrators. I've asked my hon. friend to give me a list of women who could possibly—

Mr. Lewis: The minister has it.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, I got it last week.

Mr. MacDonald: Can't the minister find any qualified women in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I would ask the member to give us time so that we can examine their qualifications.

Mr. Lewis: I want to ask by way of a supplementary, what kind of perverse discrimination does the minister practise in his ministry which is supposed to uphold the law in this area?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, the hon. member knows fully well the Minister of Labour is not one to discriminate. Far from it. I'm responsible for the Human Rights Commission.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, the minister should follow it.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Read the Code some time.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: I think we have one of the best women's bureaus in this country.

Mr. Lewis: The minister need not give us this token stuff about a women's bureau. He doesn't even enforce his legislation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: That's right. As soon as one raises this issue in this House all those yapping boys over there go apoplectic. Well, we've had enough of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

COMPOSITION OF RESEARCH FOUNDATION BOARD

Mr. Lewis: It's a very predictable thing that I'm going to persist.

A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Trade and Tourism: How is it that the Ontario Research Foundation Board has 25 members, not one of whom is a woman?

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very fair question and one which I shall look at. There are some vacancies, I believe, coming up on the research board and we will review the possibilities of appointing some ladies to that board.

COMPOSITION OF NIAGARA
PARKS COMMISSION

Mr. Lewis: Right. A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Natural Resources: How is it that the Niagara Parks Commission has 10 members and not one woman is among them?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, in this connection may I point out that the St. Lawrence Parks Commission has three, before he asks me a question on that particular matter. I will look into this and if a vacancy occurs, I will certainly give it every consideration.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary to this minister, how is it that Quetico Park advisory committee and the Algonquin Park advisory committee, with 16 members on each committee, do not have a single woman member?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The Quetico Park committee—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I am going to disallow that question. The matter was brought up during the debate last evening and there was a long list of boards, commissions and so forth given. The numbers of members were given. The member today is simply going over the entire list and I think it's repetitious and does not constitute proper questioning.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it is interesting that questions which are raised in the Throne debate—on which there is no exchange, of course, in this House; they're just raised—you would rule out of order when they are raised specifically the next day. It is also interesting that you choose to rule this particular subject out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked about four questions pertaining to identically the same topic.

Mr. Lewis: I have stopped. I'll wait for other—

Mr. Speaker: He is repetitious, and in fact I—

Mr. Singer: Why can't you be consistent from day to day?

Mr. Lewis: I have no further questions, Mr. Speaker. I'll ask them on Monday.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. member for Downsview at the proper time, but I don't recognize him now.

Mr. Singer: No.

Mr. Speaker: In connection with the questions of the hon. member for Scarborough West, I had doubt that they were of urgent public importance in the first place.

Mr. Lewis: We consider them of urgent public importance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately I am the one who has to make the decision.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, well, it is a decision that is unbecoming to you.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is a valid question. The hon. member for Ontario South.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Natural Resources. I'd like to ask him if the statement that was made yesterday by the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent)—that he personally saw the minister loading medicinal supplies in the form of booze into one of the government's aircraft—is true?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Now that's of urgent public importance.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the member brought that up, because when the question was asked of me yesterday by the member from Owen Sound I missed the first part of it and did not answer—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, as you are aware the matter that the hon. member raised was brought to the attention of the Legislature in the debate on the Speech from the Throne—

Mr. MacDonald: Therefore it is out of order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —and surely you can't allow that kind of a setup exchange when you won't allow the same thing to happen from this side?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I mean, I'd like to hear about the booze that he was loading in his plane, according to the hon. member, but you will understand, sir, that it was raised in the same debate which you would not allow information to be raised from today.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member doesn't want to hear the answer, eh?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He doesn't want to hear the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I might say that my suggestion and my comments on the questions raised by the hon. member for Scarborough West were not simply because they had been brought up in the Throne debate, as suggested by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. The questions today were repetitive. They were almost the identical sort of question directed to individual ministers, and I don't think they were of urgent public importance.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: But you certainly consider this more important than the questions I asked, is that it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I don't know which question the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Lewis: The question that's of compelling urgent public importance—the question about the booze on the minister's plane. You have time for that.

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, to the members, I have to make the decisions. There is no point in debating it. I'll attempt to make the decisions to the best of my ability.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That's right. Let's hear about the booze.

Mr. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order. I may say that I think the minister's character has been questioned, and I think it is of urgent public importance.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. With all of the—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order. I want to draw to your attention—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member—

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute, Mr. Speaker. If they wanted to clarify that point, the minister could have risen on a question of privilege or whatever he wanted and clarified it. He didn't need to have this neat little setup—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It's not very neat.

Mr. MacDonald: —between a backbencher and himself to intrude on the question period.

Mr. Speaker: I must say to the hon. members that I did not clearly hear what the hon. member for Ontario South asked as a question.

Mr. Martel: Is wasn't worthwhile hearing.

Mr. Speaker: There was too much noise going on in the chambers.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order: The hon. Minister of Natural Resources has the answer to a question previously asked.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): It had better be good!

AYR-BLENHEIM LAND PURCHASE

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, the hon. Leader of the Opposition raised a question in connection with my recommendation to the Management Board of Cabinet to approve the expenditure of funds for the purchase of land in the Ayr-Blenheim area.

The question expressed concern for the loss of good agricultural land in the area if the proposal to build a reservoir proceeds.

The Grand River has always posed very severe water management problems and during the 1930s the Grand River commission was established to try to solve some of these problems.

During the latter part of 1970 and the early part of 1971 the management services division of Treasury Board undertook a very comprehensive study of the Grand River watershed in order that a properly co-ordinated programme for flood control, municipal water supply and waste disposal could be designed and implemented.

I'm taking the liberty, Mr. Speaker, of providing the hon. Leader of the Opposition with a copy of that report, which was released in the fall of 1971. The report was provided to all the municipalities on the watershed and has been available from the Grand River Conservation Authority office on request.

This report contains a number of recommendations over a considerable planning period. It recommends a programme of studies, which we hope will eventually provide the information needed in order to answer the problems of providing municipal water supplies for Guelph, Hespeler, Preston, Galt, Waterloo, Kitchener, Brantford and other municipalities in the lower end of the watershed.

Two major options are considered: The possibility of providing adequate water supplies from the river system and associated ground water-well fields, and the possibility of a pipeline from Lake Erie.

In answer to the question of the hon. Leader of the Opposition in connection with the proposed Ayr Reservoir, I would refer to page 68 of that report; and I'd like to quote from it:

Since the Ayr reservoir is an essential component of one of the two main water management options, and since we further feel that additional studies are likely to confirm its superiority, it would be wise to ensure land is available for the dam and for the impoundment if and when required.

We recommend that land for the proposed Ayr reservoir of the Nith River be purchased as it becomes available but that the dam should not be constructed, nor detailed design carried out, until the results of further studies and evaluations confirm it as part of the long-term water supply system for the megalopolis.

With reference to the concern of the hon. Leader of the Opposition for the loss of agricultural land, I refer to page 6 of the report and recommendation No. 8, which states that communities in the Grand River basin should exercise moderation in planned growth.

In this connection the Grand River Conservation Authority have opposed proposed severances of farmland into smaller holdings, and I am advised that they will retain lands acquired in the Ayr-Blenheim area in agricultural use until such time as a final decision is made with respect to construction of the dam and reservoir.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of the objections stated by local residents and formally by resolution of the downtown council? And is he further aware that flood control is not normally put forward as the reason for the dam, but that the main reason is to recharge the water table for the use of some of the municipalities in the area?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are aware of all the matters which the hon.

Leader of the Opposition has raised, and we are very cognizant of their feelings in that area; but we do think that the recommendations of this report are the ones we should be following. We are only assembling land as it becomes available.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: The decision to go forward with the dam, however, has not been finalized, has it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, the decision has not been finalized.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

COMPLAINT ABOUT OMB

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Attorney General. Could he tell us now what action, if any, he is taking as a result of the correspondence sent to him with reference to the Ontario Municipal Board hearings on the West St. James Town matter? I believe he couldn't recall the spelling of one of them the other day, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps that is now clarified.

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Yes, the letter was from a Mr. Weitz; I have obtained it and I have been in touch with the Ontario Municipal Board about that matter. That hearing is still proceeding, and I don't think we should interfere with those matters. I am satisfied that that hearing, as it is proceeding, is fair and impartial, and the people there are being heard. I have had two letters from the gentleman mentioned by the hon. member; I have not seen a transcript of that hearing at the present time—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The minister then has come to a conclusion without the facts.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Now, just a minute. What that particular person wanted to do was to read part of an article that was written; what had to be provided there was evidence, personal opinion in reference to the matter now under consideration. The matter is still under consideration before the OMB, and I presume the hearings will be concluded shortly; I think we are now in the fourth week of hearings.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Attorney General not realize that the request was made that the hearings should not continue until certain people in that area have had the opportunity to obtain counsel? The name specifically is Mrs. Helen Valli, who also wrote to the Attorney General on this matter and asked that he intervene to permit them to have a stay until legal advice could be obtained.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I would think that in four weeks they could get counsel.

Mr. Shulman: How can the minister come to the conclusions before he examines the evidence and before he reads the transcript? Is this the usual way he works?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, it is not up to me at any time to deal with the evidence before the OMB. What I am concerned with is that the people there have a right to make submissions on the matter that's at present under consideration, and that they are treated fairly and equitably in this matter.

It has been stated that they perhaps have not had an opportunity to obtain counsel, or to give evidence. I am not satisfied as to that.

When the hearing has proceeded as it has—it is now in its fourth week—they have heard many witnesses but the conclusions have not been reached. I should never interfere with any decision that is made by that board. They are being heard in a proper and fair manner and I have checked into that.

Mr. Shulman: The Attorney General said himself he hadn't read the transcript.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I should not be reading the transcript until it is completed and I should not interfere with the decision-making process, but the hearing should be conducted in a fair and equitable manner, and it is and I have confidence in that board.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development regarding the investigation by his engineers of lake-shore flooding problems and the successful and unsuccessful methods of dealing with them: Has the provincial secretary any report to make that would be of general application, that might help people if announced at this time?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): From an engineering point of view I think not, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, we received further evidence and a further report on damage along the lower Great Lakes shores. We have seen the work being done by the Canadian Centre for Inland Waters which has had, and has at the moment, a team of experts working on assessing the damage, assessing what protective works are capable of helping.

The problem, as the hon. member may know, is that very often what helps one particular property owner works to the destruction of his neighbours on either side. And, therefore, although I can't get into the debate as to what particular form of structure should be used along the shore, the evidence that has been presented to me and some of my colleagues in the resources field suggests that any scheme should be generally consistent or we shall find, as I said, different property owners essentially making the damage greater insofar as their neighbours are concerned.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Centre for Inland Waters—I guess the greatest pool of expertise on this—is a federally-financed group. I was advised yesterday that their assessment as to damage will be available during the next week or two. But to give some idea of the extraordinary costs involved, Mr. Speaker, merely to do the study of damage on the lower Great Lakes Canadian shorelines, they estimate, may reach the figure of $3 million for the study itself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. A supplementary?

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Yes, has the department looked into the possibilities of using a new German device, which is a 100-ft. plastic-covered polyester tube that is filled with water. It has a 2½-ft diameter and could be easily assembled and inflated with water right on the site as a device for the temporary restraint of flood waters.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I know that such a device, whether it be the German one or a Japanese one, is within the knowledge of the engineers. If we are speaking of flooding I would judge—and I will check—that this is something which can be assessed practically.

If we are dealing with shoreline erosion of the catastrophic type we are looking at these days, my guess is that it would be useless.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: One more supplementary.

Mr. Ruston: Has the minister given any consideration to having funds on a long-term low-interest plan so that people can protect their property themselves? As he is aware, one cannot use local improvement funds for the frontage of a cottage or a permanent home on the lakefront; it can't be done on the local improvement basis. Are there any funds available which could be used for this purpose—I mean which would be assessed to the property owner, perhaps, but still paid for over a period of 10 or 15 years?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I was involved in a discussion earlier this week with a number of persons who had raised the question of a loan fund. I undertook and, indeed, have been able as of this week to bring forward to the government tentative proposals in relation to the development not so much of a loan fund but of a system of guaranteed loans which residents could use for the purpose of repairs and protection of their homes. This is not extended, of course, to the much larger question of shore protection.

On the question of shore protection, Mr. Speaker, if I may mention it, one thing that I think we should all be concerned with is the complications that are involved or could be involved in the question of ownership of the shoreline. As one looks at the shoreline one will find in one place abandoned cars used as a breakwater; one will find half a dozen different other forms of breakwater used.

Yet in many of the areas no one can tell me whether those shores belong to the owners who are dumping the material on to the beaches or whether they belong to the people of Ontario. The issue of how one treats the shoreline is computed by the legal question as to whose is the shoreline that is being protected.

Mr. MacDonald: We settled that one a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

The Minister of Community and Social Services has the answer to a previous question.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE APPLICATION

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The other day the leader of the New Democratic Party asked me a question concerning the refusal of assistance under the General Welfare Assistance Act to an elderly person.

The Supreme Court of Ontario early this week ordered the board of review to reconsider the case of this person who had been refused general assistance under the General Welfare Assistance Act by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. This elderly landed immigrant to this country is claiming assistance under that Act on the ground that she is a person in need because she lacks a principal family provider.

The board of review on July 5, 1972, upheld Commissioner Anderson's ruling that this person was not eligible for assistance because her son had sponsored her entry into Canada under the federal Immigration Act. He had given an undertaking under that Act to support his mother and was, therefore, a principal family provider under the Act.

I would like to mention, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is at present being very actively reviewed by the board of review. I feel that at this time it would not be appropriate on my part to make any additional comments.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

NORTH PICKERING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism: Is the minister still responsible for the North Pickering development? If so, do his plans for proceeding reflect the Minister of Revenue's opinion and policies that the public interest is best served by enabling fast-buck developers to produce the housing?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes, I am still responsible for the project in North Pickering.

Secondly, I am not sure that I have heard the remarks by the Minister of Revenue to indicate the statement referred to by the hon. member for York Centre. I do say to the member that the decision as to how the lands will be developed in the future is one that the cabinet and this government will make and announce in this House.

Mr. Deacon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, yes.

Mr. Deacon: Does the minister agree in principle with selling land to housing developers in such a way that they can gain a profit on the shortage of land and, therefore the higher prices of land; rather than having controlled prices at which they can sell that land and the lot for building purposes?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Pardon?

Mr. Deacon: For housing purposes.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Yes, for housing purposes. Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated very clearly that the decision as to how the lands will be disposed of in North Pickering in the future will be made by this government, and this House will be informed.

We have not arrived at any decision as to exactly how the planning will take place, other than we have retained a firm of consultants to do a master plan for the entire North Pickering community.

But we have made no policy decisions, Mr. Speaker, on exactly how the division of lands will take place; and how they will be developed—whether it be under private ownership or public ownership.

Mr. Deacon: Surely it is profiteering in land.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

INVITATION OF MEMBERS TO MEETING

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I have a question of the provincial Treasurer. Is it the Treasurer's intention to invite members of the Legislature to the meeting this morning with the city of Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't intending to do that, but several of the Conservative members have asked if they could be present, and I said yes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: The Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) had the same problem yesterday.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: We had the same problem yesterday.

Hon. Mr. White: When that happened I wondered about extending an invitation to all of—

An hon. member: Repetitions.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I just had the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith) come over and ask if it would be all right if the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. McNie) and he went to the meeting, and I said yes. Then I had my hon. friend, the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Ewen), ask if it was all right if he came to the meeting, and I said yes. At that time I wondered about extending an invitation to other members from the area—

Mr. Reid: The minister resisted the temptation.

Hon. Mr. White: And I decided against it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: As a supplementary question, just for the record: Is the Minister not inviting other members, other than Conservative members, to the meeting with the city of Hamilton?

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Lewis: Write the Minister of Education!

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I didn't invite anybody—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): The Minister of Agriculture developed that policy.

Hon. Mr. White: They asked if they could come. And because of their intensive interest, I said, "Certainly—help yourself."

An hon. member: Well, there you are!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: Please, sir, may I come too?

Mr. Bullbrook: As long as the member doesn't say anything.

Mr. Lewis: The minister blatantly nods.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He is all heart.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Does the member want to come too?

FOOD AND FUEL COSTS IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Reid: No, I don't want to come.

Mr. Speaker: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, and I think maybe this should be directed also at the Treasurer. In view of the rather superficial study of costs of food and gasoline in northwestern Ontario that was commissioned by the provincial secretary or the Minister of Natural Resources, after the abortive meeting in Dryden and northwestern Ontario, what action is the government going to take to try to even out prices of food and gasoline and fuel oil in northwestern Ontario?

Mr. Martel: Have another study.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter essentially for the Treasurer, but I can't allow the description of the Dryden meeting as being abortive to stand on the record unchallenged. I think anyone who was present—

Mr. Reid: And they were only Tories.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Well, why wasn't the member present?

Mr. Reid: Because I wasn't invited; that's why!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Because the member didn't read the invitation that invited him! That's why he wasn't there.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And the next question?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: If the member would like to come to one of these meetings, please attend.

Mr. Singer: He just has to find out where they're having it and when!

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's non-answer may I redirect the question to the Treasurer?

Mr. Speaker: No! The hon. minister dealt with it.

Mr. Reid: No! Now, wait a minute.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt—

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Supplementary!

Mr. Speaker: All right. The hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Givens: I'd ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development: Has the government made a decision as to which minister will be answering for energy policy in this Legislature? Will it be the Provincial Secretary, or will it be the new parliamentary secretary (Mr. McKeough), who apparently cannot answer questions in the House?

Mr. Reid: Well, neither can he answer questions.

Mr. Givens: Who will be answering on the matter of energy policy for the government from here on in?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to the question will be available to the members in the House—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —in a matter of a few days. I would say to the member for York-Forest Hill that it was announced, if he will recall, that the parliamentary assistant to the Premier would be reporting to the Premier as of the first of this month with his recommendations as to the structure, which will include reporting on energy and responsibility for energy matters in this House. That particular document, according to his undertaking, has been delivered to the Premier. So my answer to the question is, as I said, that in a matter of days the structure and the way of communicating will be available to all of us.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

OMB MEMBERSHIP

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): I have a question of the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. Why is it that the Ontario Municipal Board has 16 members, none of whom are women? Further, what does he intend to do about this kind of blatant sex discrimination within his ministry?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I have thought for a very long time that we haven't done a very good job getting women into senior positions. My suggestion to the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. Winkler) some months ago was that we quantify the number of female employees above a certain level. In fact, he did that shortly afterwards, and there turned out to be something in excess of 700 women who were earning more than $12,000 per year.

Mr. Lewis: The civil service has 63,000 or so.

Hon. Mr. White: I had a discussion with two of my senior staff last night, in which this matter came before us.

Mr. Givens: Both male?

Hon. Mr. White: I asked them to—

Mr. Lewis: Which members of his staff were they, pray tell?

Hon. Mr. White: They were Dr. Terry Russell and Mr. Duncan Allan. It was in my office at 11 o'clock last night. I said to them that I thought the only way we could accomplish the purpose was to quantify the existing situation by finding out exactly how many women we had, not necessarily by salary, because I think that in itself is not test enough—

Mr. Lewis: I would think that's true.

Hon. Mr. White: —but at a certain status within the ministry. If that number is represented by X, we should determine to increase that to 2X 12 months hence and to 4X 24 months hence. This is going to bring about what might be called negative discrimination.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That's reducing it to a formula.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: That's right; when women are given opportunities, then men are discriminated against. Is that it?

Hon. Mr. White: No. If we are going to establish quotas, which I think is the only way of solving the problem, if one has a competition and a young man, let us say, scores 80 while a young woman scores 78, if we are going to meet the quotas, it's my hunch that during the transitional period we are going to have to take some number of women who scored 78, because we are dealing with a culture in which women have not been oriented since birth into these vocational pursuits. It's just a fact of life.

Mr. Bullbrook: What is the Treasurer going to do when he gets something that's complicated if he has to go on ad nauseam over this?

Hon. Mr. White: I'm going to tell the member for Sarnia and his simple-minded next-door neighbour that this problem isn't going to be solved overnight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. White: I said that with a smile.

Mr. Speaker: The time for questions has elapsed.

Mr. Bullbrook: When we get to 4X everything will be alright. I can't believe it.

Hon. Mr. White: If I may make reference to the question asked during the question period—

Mr. Speaker: The time has elapsed.

Interjections by hon. members.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Speaker: A point of privilege, the Minister of Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, since the member—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Now we will find out about it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —for Ontario South brought the matter up during question period and since the opposition did not want to hear the answer, I thought this would be a way to clarify the matter that was brought up by the member for Grey Bruce. I missed the point of his question yesterday, which was reported in today's Globe and Mail, but he accused me—

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. W. Newman: No way!

Some hon. members: Sit down!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: You make up your own point of order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will just permit me the courtesy. In view of all of the noise in the chamber, I couldn't hear a word the hon. minister said. I would ask him to repeat it for my benefit.

Mr. Singer: Which minister?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the member for Ontario South brought the matter up during the question period and the opposition did not want to hear the answer—

Mr. Shulman: Is this a ministerial statement?

Hon. Mr. Bernier:—I think it is right that I bring this matter up as a point of personal privilege. It relates to a question that was asked of me yesterday by the member from Owen Sound, and reported in today's Globe and Mail, in which he accused me of hauling large quantities of booze in government aircraft.

I would point out to him and to other members of this House that this is entirely wrong—it is incorrect. I know I can speak for all the members of the cabinet in saying that they too have not indulged in the transportation of this commodity.

Mr. Reid: That's what they have executive assistants for!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would say to the members of the Liberal Party, and knowing the member from Owen Sound, that if there is anybody hauling booze out of the Island Airport in Toronto, the member from Owen Sound must be looking into a mirror.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Bales presented the fifth annual report of the Ontario Legal Aid plan, for the year ended March 31, 1972.

Mr. Ewen, from the standing procedural affairs committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

City of Peterborough;
Hoblin Homes Ltd.;
City of London (No. 1);
Town of Oakville;
City of London (No. 2);
City of Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

TOWN OF OAKVILLE ACT

Mr. J. R. Smith, in the absence of Mr. Kennedy, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the Town of Oakville.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF LONDON ACT

Mr. Timbrell, in the absence of Mr. Walker, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the City of London.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF OTTAWA ACT

Mr. Villeneuve, in the absence of Mr. Morrow, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the City of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

CITY OF LONDON ACT

Mr. Timbrell, in the absence of Mr. Walker, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the City of London.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. My point of order, sir, is that a member of this House may not make an allegation about another member unless he is prepared to substantiate it.

On Tuesday night—and I refer you to page 478-1 of Hansard—the hon. member for Grey-Bruce was referring to the corrupt mess in government, and he made an allegation in the form of an innuendo that a certain Mr. Moog who built Canada Square, which was referred to here, had helped build the Premier's cottage, or did repairs on it. He made this innuendo, sir, without any substantiation in the House.

I suggest if it had come from any other member he would have been called to order immediately. Surely such an allegation, particularly against the Premier of this province, cannot be allowed to pass unless there is some substantiation.

Mr. Reid: We have come full turn now.

Mr. Ruston: Yes, full turn around.

Mr. Shulman: I have made many allegations and I have substantiated them in each case.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Attorney General agreed with that, I take it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What's that about the pot and the kettle?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I'd ask you to examine Hansard and, after you have done so, to make a ruling and either demand that there be substantiation or withdrawal.

Mr. Speaker: Did I understand the hon. member to say it was on page 478-1 of Hansard?

Mr. Shulman: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether or not I was in the chair at the time. I might have missed it as well. I will be glad to review it and see what action need be taken.

Mr. Drea: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, you might like to read the next line after that. I had some comments to make.

Mr. Lewis: What was the next line?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What about the member for High Park's allegation that the Attorney General was a front man for the Mafia? Have you looked into that?

Mr. MacDonald: If they are embarrassed over there why don't they do something about it?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): I am very pleased this morning, Mr. Speaker, to resume the debate in the atmosphere in which we adjourned last night. The verve and vitality and raucousness of the chamber seems to have continued overnight and I appreciate and enjoy the atmosphere.

Before I proceed with my planned remarks I would like to make a few observations, especially regarding the matters raised yesterday during the Throne debate by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) and the questions raised this morning by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis).

We want to emphasize that in this party we feel very strongly about women's rights. We feel very strongly about the scandalous way in which this government has not taken the initiative to redress the imbalance and increase the opportunities for women in government commissions and within the civil service itself.

We in the New Democratic Party do consider this a matter of urgent public importance. The fact that the injustices have existed for centuries does not mean they should be tolerated one day longer. I must say with deep and profound regret that Mr. Speaker did not consider it a matter of urgent public importance. Even more alarming are the evasions in the replies of the various ministers questioned, especially the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon). Those replies have always emphasized that we in the opposition should supply them with names of capable women.

If I may say so, Mr. Speaker, that admission surely speaks volumes about the attitudes and the lack of capability of the ministries concerned. Surely it is the responsibility of the Minister of Labour, under whom come the Human Rights Code and the women's branch and that kind of legislation, to take the initiative in these areas. The answers that we receive are frankly paternalistic and sexist and we cannot tolerate them. We will not tolerate them and we will continue to hammer away at this during this session.

Last night when we adjourned I was comparing two statements in the Speech from the Throne with regard to professional groups in our province. To pick up the thread of my remarks, if I may quote again from page 14, we have this neutral, objective sentence: "My government will present legislation with respect to negotiations between the teaching profession and school boards." There is no hint of what the legislation will be, no hint of the direction it will take.

Turning to the bottom of page 15, there is another sentence: "Further legislation will be presented to you to strengthen the position and clarify the role of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario." Why this obvious favouring of one profession over the other?

I think the answer to that is obvious. Every member of this Legislature now knows of the letter sent out by Ross DeGeer to every doctor in this province. I would like to quote a few excerpts from that letter.

By the way, I received a copy of the letter from an anonymous doctor within my own riding who obviously felt put upon but didn't feel he could reveal his identity because of the pressure brought to bear upon him by the medical profession in his own community. He, at least, had a sense of fairness and thought that we in the opposition should know what was going on.

Anyway, the letter goes:

Dear Dr.:

Many doctors have expressed the need for greater participation by members of the profession in the political process. We have no way of knowing your personal political affiliation but we do know that a high percentage of your profession are supporters, active or otherwise, of the Progressive Conservative Party provincially.

Most doctors are extremely concerned that their provincial government should provide the public with good medical coverage while giving full consideration to the needs of the profession, and interfering as little as possible with the doctor-patient relationship. They are also concerned that provincial medical services be efficiently and fairly administered.

Here comes the clincher.

When related to other provinces, we believe the record of PC government in Ontario has been as good as the profession can reasonably expect.

"As good as the profession can reasonably expect," Mr. Speaker. No thought about if it's as good as the public can reasonably expect.

That letter, as a column by Mr. O'Hearn in the press gallery pointed out, amounts to blackmail—blackmail of the medical profession. What they are saying is: "Boys, if you want your interests protected, kick in with the dough. Do your part. Send money."

An hon. member: The Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) will.

Mr. Foulds: What kind of objectivity can this government have in dealing with the spiraling medical costs and with the medical profession in this province if they have begged the profession to support them in this abject way?

Now, Mr. Speaker, that attitude towards the medical profession, and the attitude toward the teaching profession is expressed in the Reville report. The Reville committee was appointed by order in council of the provincial government of Ontario on Nov. 5, 1970 to inquire and report upon: (a) the process of negotiation between teachers and school boards; (b) the roles of the various professional and trustee organizations in the bargaining process; (c) the matters to be properly subject to negotiation.

I would like to start this main portion of my remarks on the Reville report by giving two quotations. The first quotation is this:

No recommendation, no suggestion, no argument, however persuasive, can be advanced in the educational forum without first testing its validity and its effects against the principle that our educational system exists for the child, so that he may create, grow and perceive better, the world within which we live.

The second quotation, Mr. Speaker:

The committee believes that the Province of Ontario has designed an educational system which is eminently qualified to satisfy the aspirations of all individuals and that the members of the teaching profession and the school board trustees have played significant and laudable roles in this development. Nothing therefore must be allowed to disturb the efficiency and proper functioning of the educational system, and it is to this end that the committee has directed its efforts.

The first quotation I have given, Mr. Speaker, comes from the foreword to the Minister's Advisory Committee on Teacher Contract Bargaining in the Province of Saskatchewan. The second quotation comes from the Reville report, to give it its proper name, the "Report of the Committee of Inquiry of Professional Consultation and the Determination of Compensation for Ontario Teachers."

What a world of difference there is between the attitudes of those two statements. The first statement in the Saskatchewan report indicates concern with education. It indicates an interest in the creativity of the educational system. It also emphasizes the basic reason we have educational systems in the civilized world—for the development of the child.

Now take a look at that second quotation. It indicates the smugness and complacency that exists regarding the Ontario school system. It emphasizes the mechanistic. It has no mention of the creativity and the development of the child. It doesn't see education as being creative. Note the heavy emphasis on the words "efficiency" and "proper functioning."

I would submit that the reason the teachers of this province are upset about the Reville report is not merely because their rights are being curtailed, but because they can see the very harmful effects implementation of legislation based on the Reville report will have on the creative development of curriculum that has taken place to some extent in Ontario in the last few years.

This creative development of curriculum has taken place, not at the ministry level, not at the board of education level, but at the grassroots level. Teachers all over this province, in the past four to five years especially, have been creating dynamic and innovative courses of study in math, science, theatre arts, English, history and man in society; to name a few with which I am personally familiar. But the conjunction of the present blind and mindless feelings on education spending compounds the teachers' fears and justifiable suspicions in this regard.

The present mindless feelings, by the way, are as faddish and foolish as the mindless spending that took place in education in the 1960s under the then Minister of Education (Mr. Davis).

My own views about the Reville report are well known to most teachers in this province. Let me just summarize them for the benefit of the Legislature.

1. Implementation of the committee's recommendations will effectively eviscerate the various teachers' federations in the same way that the government's legislation last spring left the CSAO powerless.

2. The implementation of the committee's recommendations will not only drastically limit the teacher's role in safeguarding his own rights but will effectively deny him and his professional organization the opportunity to make a meaningful contribution to the development of educational policy.

3. The recommendations deprive him of any effective muscle to ensure that matters other than those with obvious financial implications are negotiable. Working conditions, hours of work, the number of classes a teacher must teach, the pupil-teacher ratio, the extended school year, are all subjects that are excluded from negotiations by the Reville committee report.

4. Recommendations No. 9 through 17 of the report propose a series of advisory committees to deal with matters such as curriculum development, educational policy and so on. These committees will have trustee, teacher and some community participation, but it is important to note that the boards of education will have the right to veto any of the recommendations of these committees.

5. Recommendation No. 5 of the report itself is particularly discriminatory against teachers. It allows the trustees to have the right to have a representative committee of trustees and also to have "such other persons as the trustees shall determine". This gives the trustees additional power in negotiations. For example, the trustees can hire on their own behalf a professional negotiator to carry the brunt in the negotiations. The teachers are denied this right; this is clearly unjust.

To sum up then, at a point in time when the atmosphere and attitudes in education have emphasized the importance of the contribution the teachers can make and must make to the development of educational theory and practice, this report clearly emphasizes that the major area of concern for the teachers' professional organizations should be purely economic.

This is a backward step. The committee has two clear biases. One clearly ignores the commitment of teachers to their work and to their profession. The other is against the collective bargaining processes and trade unionism in particular.

It is obvious that the committee did not approach the inquiry with an open mind. The glossary of terms and jargon coined by the committee betrays its distaste for the collective bargaining process.

I quote from page 64 of the report, appendix A, entitled "A glossary of joint negotiations and joint consultations terminology (with comparisons drawn from labour relations terminology and jargon)". It's very indicative of the sterility of the thinking of this report.

"Arbitrator" becomes a nicer word, "ad-judicator"; "griever" becomes "complainant"; "adversary proceedings" become "consultations"; "union shop" becomes "mandatory professional membership"; "work-to-rule" is "partial withdrawal of services"; "conciliation" and "mediation" become "third-party assistance"; "management rights" are transformed into "trustees' responsibilities", and most important, "bargaining rights" become "negotiation privileges".

The preconceptions of this committee are betrayed by its language, its illustrations and its misrepresentation of the collective bargaining process. For example, the committee states in the body of its report, on page 18: "That industrialists are the most informed of all groups on the real effects of the collective bargaining system."

I would suggest that the employees involved in the collective bargaining system are equally aware of both the limitations and the advantages of the collective bargaining process.

The report further states without documentation that:

Recently two strikes alone, one at International Nickel and the other at the Steel Co. of Canada, cost the Ontario economy half a billion in lost production.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a malicious selection of the facts:—(1) these strikes took place more than three years ago; (2) the most recent result of collective bargaining in the two cases cited resulted in a complete settlement of all issues for a three-year period. The Steel Co. of Canada settled Aug. 1, 1972, with a three-year agreement and no strike action. International Nickel Co. at Sudbury and Port Colborne, settled July 10, 1972 with a three-year agreement and with no strike action.

The committee's report then develops a superficial generalization of the collective bargaining process coming to the completely unfounded conclusion: "Thus the right to strike became a right to seize and close the business."

It is disturbing, to say the least, that the committee felt no responsibility whatsoever to make an effort to document this blatant bias.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the status of the Reville report is unknown. It is in limbo. The minister, up until January, personally phoned me from time to time, on several occasions to let me know quite specifically that nothing was happening with regard to the Reville report; that it was just a report and it was going through the processes of consideration within the ministry; that the Ministry of Education had not yet decided what it was going to do with the monster it had spawned.

However, we did get a statement the other day that there will be legislation coming in this session with regard to teacher-board negotiations. In answer to questioning yesterday, the minister refused to indicate at what point in time that legislation would be brought forward during this session; and he refused to indicate the direction that the legislation might take.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government is playing cat and mouse with the Legislature, with the teaching profession, with the school boards and with the public of this province.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Sounds like a "rebel's" report!

Mr. Foulds: That's right!

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this ministry will, in its usual fashion, bring this legislation in during the last week of this session; try to ram it through before too many people can get upset about its implications.

Let there be no mistake. If this government thought it could get away with introducing legislation based on the reactionary recommendations of the Reville report it would do so. One has only to look at the legislation the present government brought in last spring governing the Civil Service Association of Ontario. That legislation took away from that association its right to bargain in all those areas of interest that every working group should have the right to negotiate; that is working conditions, fringe benefits and so on.

Secondly, I would like to make a commitment, as the present education critic of the New Democratic Party, and on my party's behalf, that we will fight any legislation which is based on the Reville report which denies the teachers the right to negotiate their working conditions. And I want to say here and now that we will fight that kind of reactionary legislation with every legislative means at our disposal.

But having said that, I would like to turn for a few minutes to the teachers themselves and their attitudes to the collective bargaining process and to the teachers' attitudes towards trade unions.

First of all, teachers rightly consider themselves professionals; but unlike doctors, lawyers, architects and so on, they don't have the economic model to set their own fees—nor do I think they should have. Teachers must negotiate salary increases and working conditions with management as represented by boards of education and school boards.

Teachers in Ontario have never come to grips with the fact that, whereas they are professionals, they are also workers. They have never come to grips with the fact that they work collectively as a group, even though they, as individuals, have tremendous freedom with regard to methodology, techniques, and even curriculum within their own classrooms.

In Ontario teachers cling to their threadbare blanket of respectability. They confuse professionalism with being able to set their own fees and with being self-governing. In my view, this is a misguided conception of what professionalism means. To my mind professionalism is merely doing your job with excellence no matter what occupation you are in. It has to do with quality of work, not with what kind of work in which you are involved.

I have seen professional actors and professional stage managers on the amateur stage who did not get paid a cent, but who have devoted themselves to their jobs with every ounce of talent, energy and creativity that they have. I have, in fact, been fortunate enough to see a professional section foreman on the CNR. Here was a man who through his own initiative and his own talent and his own assessment of the job learned and grew and knew more about that job. He performed his job not with abject devotion to the company, but he performed the job because the job itself was worth doing well.

I must say that the trend in terms of self-governing and the trend of setting fees for one's own select group, are in fact going the other way. Doctors, lawyers, architects and so on, are going to have their present-day so-called professionalism curtailed by society. After all, why should doctors arbitrarily set their own fee when it is the public who pay, and when they are providing a service that is essential to our present-day society?

Therefore, it seems to me that teachers must accept their role as professional workers. They must adopt a positive attitude to the collective bargaining process and to their right to strike. Let me say clearly that I think they should have both.

Let me remind you that strike does not mean mass resignations. Strike means to be able to withdraw your services and have the right to return to work after the dispute is settled. Let nobody be fooled by the Reville report's recommendation for "an adjudicative tribunal."

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That's pronounced "Reville."

Mr. Foulds: Sure it is not fudgesicle?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If the member is going to be using his name quite a bit, it is pronounced "Reville."

Mr. Foulds: Reville?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That's it.

Mr. Foulds: Let nobody be fooled by the Reville report's recommendation for an adjudicative tribunal to settle disputes between boards and teachers, because that term is merely a fancy euphemism for compulsory arbitration. The joker in that particular deck is that all appointees to that so-called objective tribunal will be by recommendation of the Minister of Education. Such a tribunal will be much more conscious of the government's wishes than it would be of the needs and merits of the community or of the teacher.

It seems to me the teachers must accept the fact that they are engaged in a collective-bargaining process. Ed Finn, legislative director of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, rightly pointed out in an article in the Toronto Star on Nov. 6, 1972, that there was no golden mean between the extremes of genuine collective bargaining, which is after all an adversary system, and company unionism which involves the master-servant relationship.

Company unionism is tolerable only if the employer is truly and consistently benevolent, and genuinely intent on treating his employees fairly at all times. We all know that description does not fit all school boards in the province. It may not even fit a majority of them. It certainly doesn't describe the ministry, and that is the fundamental flaw in the Reville report.

We must recognize that in any human endeavour there is not going to exist at all times reasonable harmony, so that when teachers and boards sit down to discuss their mutual interests, there will be conflicting views. Although sweetness and light might prevail at times, what recourse do the teachers have when they encounter an intransigent and stubborn board? According to the Reville report, they can only throw themselves on the mercy of an outside arbitrator who might or might not prove sympathetic.

That is not collective bargaining, Mr. Speaker; that is collective begging. I think it is time teachers realized they don't, at the present time, have free collective bargaining. You cannot have free collective bargaining unless you have the right to strike.

A lot of people will be very upset about that. They will say school is an essential service and the education industry in Ontario is an essential industry. I would agree with that; but the timing isn't essential. In an 18-year career of schooling, if a student misses a week or two during the school term because of sickness, no one gets upset. In fact he may learn more outside of the walls of the school building.

Similarly, if a contract has not been settled and the teachers withdraw their services for a period of time, I don't think a great deal of harm is going to be done to the student as a result of being out of school.

There are times when I think a great deal of good might result from their explorations in their own community. Teachers themselves can work out a mechanism, if necessary, for making up that time so that the students don't lose in their overall school year.

If teachers have the right to strike, and if that means that teachers have to embrace the principles and practices of trade unionism, then so be it. I do not think that employing the principles and practices of trade unionism to protect their own interests, and what is more important to protect the interests of the educational system of Ontario is going to be a backward step at all.

In fact, somehow we have to protect the educational system. At the present time it would appear that only teachers could do that; God knows the present minister and the ministry can't. Teachers will not be able to protect their true professionalism unless they come to an honest understanding of what it means to have collective bargaining and to be able to use those processes wisely for the benefit of the educational system in Ontario.

I would like to turn now, Mr. Speaker, if I might, to another topic which, it surprises me, has not been touched upon before in this debate. On page 12, I believe it is, of the Speech from the Throne, the Lieutenant Governor read:

My government will ask you to approve the appointment of an independent commission to redistribute the electoral districts of the province and redefine their boundaries.

I think that is probably a good thing. I am convinced there are some glaring inequalities at the present time to be eliminated, but I think the terms of reference must not be so binding, so inflexible as are the terms of reference for the federal electoral boundary commission, which resulted in a loss of seats for northern Ontario.

There is a fine line which must be trod here but the principle involved in the bill or in the commission—whatever device is used to set up the commission—must achieve the very laudable aim of ending the gerrymandering of seats for the benefit of the government party. That principle must not impinge upon the right to access and proper representation of people in remote areas.

The major problem that any sensitive politician faces over and over again, Mr. Speaker—is it a question I have often pondered myself—is do electoral politics, in fact, work? Are the traditional methods of political action meaningful and valid? Looking around this chamber this morning one sometimes has very grave doubts about it. The attendance and the responsibility that members sometimes show is mind boggling.

Unfortunately, a growing segment of our population feels this is not so—that the traditional methods of political action are not meaningful and valid; that electoral politics and parliamentary democracy are increasingly unresponsive to the aims and aspirations of the ordinary man on the street.

This growing suspicion of politicians and the political processes is reflected in two obvious ways. A survey taken in the United States about a year and a half ago indicated that politicians came 17th on the list of professions in terms of how the public perceived them in trustworthiness.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): That is actually an improvement.

Mr. Foulds: They were one place ahead of used car dealers.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Doctors were first, remember.

Mr. Foulds: What a fall was there for the member for Oshawa to go from first to almost last! From No. 1 to 17!

Mr. McIlveen: At least I have evened off. I am about eighth on the list.

Mr. Foulds: Is he about 8th now?

Mr. McIlveen: Yes, I am about eighth and the member for Port Arthur is away down at the bottom.

Mr. Foulds: This growing suspicion of the political process is also reflected in the turnout for general elections of boards of education across the province.

Mr. Renwick: The member for Oshawa had better get his jabs in now. He won't be here after the next election.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He is a journalist of note now! His writings are quoted.

Mr. Foulds: I suppose that has dropped him another couple of notches, too, with the credibility gap created by those columns in the Oshawa Times.

Mr. McIlveen: I am going to syndicate that.

Mr. H. C. Parrott (Oxford): I don't blame him—that is a good and worthy intention.

Mr. Foulds: He is going to syndicate it? That is an awfully touchy word to use in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I know I must direct my remarks through you and not to the rabble to my left and behind me, which is getting aroused somewhat at the present time. I suppose by 11:30 in the morning the coffee has coursed through the veins and has activated some of the blood cells so that a bit of oxygen is getting to the enlarged nerve ganglia at the base of the spine and they are, basically, coming alive.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): We are being gassed to death.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): The member is going to make me bring up in a minute.

Mr. Foulds: This growing suspicion of the political process, as I said Mr. Speaker, is reflected in the turnout for general elections of boards of education across this province.

For example, when the first election for the reorganized Lakehead board of education took place some years ago, not in conjunction with the municipal or mayoralty election, only about 17 per cent of the electorate turned out. There is no doubt that in North America there is a growing alienation of the populace generally, and especially among young people, from the traditional forms of parliamentary democracy and electoral politics.

In a current phrase, a number of people are opting out. This leads to two possible, unfortunate results. Given enough frustration and enough anger, the present apathy will turn to other forms of political action which, in fact, may be violent.

Certainly a system, no matter how well intentioned and how objective, if it does not meet the needs and desires and aspirations of the people it purports to serve, will only turn people off further and in ever increasing numbers. A growing number of people will treat the present parliamentary democratic process with cynicism, disdain, apathy, contempt, growing suspicion, and finally hostility.

When that hostility reaches a certain peak, these people will seek to destroy the process. The only way to avoid this is to have people feel genuinely that they can participate in government, that they can influence government, that they are heard and that they can contact directly and personally their elected representatives.

Let me relate an anecdote which illustrates the phenomenon observed by every elected representative in this Legislature from northern Ontario, a phenomenon that is often labelled by his colleagues as northern paranoia.

Last Feb. 7 I'd been working in my office here at Queen's Park until sometime after midnight on a brief to the federal electoral boundaries commission. I walked down to my hotel room, picked up a late edition of the Globe and Mail and came across an editorial in that paper of Feb. 8, 1973, entitled: "A Way to Representation by Population." That editorial started this way:

Representation by population is one of the principles which must underlie democratic government or it is not democratic government. As the principle is diluted, so is democracy diminished. This is true, because if one elected representative represents 50,000 people and another only 25,000 people, then the 25,000 speak twice as powerfully as the 50,000 in determining how the country shall be run.

On the surface, that has a certain appealing logic to it. However, in that context, which was a federal context, the Globe went on to argue that the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Prince Edward Island should be set aside as special cases. Aside from that, the rest of Canada would be divided into ridings with as exactly equal population as possible, regardless of the size of the riding, and each riding would elect one member of Parliament.

The Globe went on to argue that the word "geography" made it impossible for a member to personally cover the whole riding. He should be given staff "to go out and meet the electorate and bring its problems to him." The size of the staff would be determined by geographical difficulties—difficulties of transportation and communication. The Globe then goes on to say:

We would then, no matter how large Canada's population grew, or where it grew, have a system which gave all of its citizens equal voting power and equal representation in the Parliament that shapes our country.

The editorial then went on to indicate that such a system works effectively in the United States and to say that each member of the House of Representatives represents 468,972 people. But it works because the United States has allowed, the editorial said, its representatives staff to reach the electorate.

I want to meet that argument head on, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I don't think the present political situation in the United States is one that we should try to emulate. The obvious alienation in urban centres, the growing violence in the United States and the accelerated disdain and distrust of the electoral process that are obvious in the United States must not be re-enacted here in Canada. I would submit it is this very fact that elected members of the House of Representatives in that country have staff meeting the electorate, rather than meeting the electorate themselves, that has largely contributed to that alienation and to that growing sense of distrust of government in the United States.

If it is at all possible in Canada and in this Province of Ontario, we must avoid that. If that means avoiding the strict principle of representation by population, then by all means let's do it.

Secondly, if special consideration is to be given in the Canadian context to Prince Edward Island, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, why not to northern Ontario in the Ontario context?

For example, the present riding of Thunder Bay is substantially larger than Great Britain, and five times as large as Nova Scotia. It is, in fact, as large as the Yukon in area, and it has three times the population of the Yukon. If the democratic process means anything at all, surely it means ongoing involvement and participation by the citizens in the elective process and not just once every four years at election time. In so far as the strict representation by population inhibits that involvement and that participation then the cliché about representation by population can be undemocratic in the true sense.

For us in the north it is important that our voice be heard, because elected members represent not only numbers of people, they represent a special attitude of mind and special areas of interest that are thrust upon us as northerners because of our geographic location and because of the isolation within which we live and operate. If the healthy diversity of this nation and this province is to be maintained, these distinctive attitudes must be forcefully and articulately presented in the councils of the nation and of this province.

It does no good either to the country or the province or the interests of northern Ontario to deprive us of any elected representatives. When we see an argument such as that in the Globe of Feb. 8, is there any wonder there is a kind of gut feeling in the north that we are being discriminated against and that we are being exploited?

The third argument against the attitudes of southern Ontario as expressed in that Globe editorial is that it perceives the elected representative only as a person who votes on legislation which is presented to him on a platter by Toronto-based technocrats, and that is the only way he expresses his region's attitudes. It does not understand the full responsibility of the elected representative, which is to help shape legislation.

If the elected representative is to shape legislation adequately he must be fully in tune with the attitudes of the citizens he represents. He can only be fully in tune with those attitudes if he has had time and opportunity to be among them and to listen to them.

There is another responsibility of the elected representative; he must also act as a leader to his electors. He must keep them fully informed of the attitudes and actions of government, and of the developments that are taking place in other parts of the province. This may not be his major responsibility, but he does have a responsibility to try to explain the province to his local constituents. I must say that I find it very difficult to try to explain to my constituents the attitudes that are often expressed in this chamber.

Sometimes even I, with my capabilities and talents, Mr. Speaker, find it impossible. Certainly no hired staff person could do that.

Those of us who live in the north are only too well aware of the slowness of economic growth and development in our area. We are only too well aware of the lack of facilities and amenities. We are only too well aware of the lack of libraries, museums, art galleries, science centres, and so on—all things which are available to people here in southern Ontario. There is, I submit, a growing sense of frustration because of these economic, social and cultural disparities.

We perceive very clearly that government inaction has failed to develop the area; has failed to help the area keep pace, in growth and development, with the rest of the province. We now also perceive that at the present time we could very well be deprived of whatever political voice we have had in the past.

I would like to summarize quickly and briefly the major arguments I have seen over the last few months on behalf of northern Ontario maintaining, at least maintaining, its present representation.

The elected representative must spend a good deal of time travelling back and forth between Toronto and his riding. In the case of at least two of the present northwestern Ontario ridings, Thunder Bay and Kenora, he must also spend a good deal of time travelling within his riding.

I think that argument has been pretty fully and adequately put, but I would emphasize it is almost impossible to give residents of a riding such as the present Thunder Bay riding the service to which they are entitled. It is only the incredible physical stamina and efforts of the member representing Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) that give them that service at the present time.

A person who lives in Winisk or Kakabeka Falls should have the same accessibility to his elected representative as a person living in Metropolitan Toronto or in a metropolitan Ottawa riding. Accessibility, too, is a democratic ideal for which we must strive. Ideally, of course, politics is a two-way process; the elected representative must not only talk to his electors, the electors must also be able to talk directly to their elected representatives.

It is not good enough to say simply, "We will provide a northern Ontario member with additional staff so that the electors can be serviced." I submit to the House that a politician, by his very nature, by his very position, is unique and his electors feel that uniqueness about him. They feel, rightly, that if they can present their case directly to him, he will have a better understanding of their concerns and needs.

If those concerns and needs are communicated through the hired staff of an elected representative, we will inevitably get a kind of funnelling; a kind of editing taking place. We must try to avoid this as much as possible. As much as possible the interaction must take place directly between the elector and the politician.

In long-range terms, I think that ridings in Ontario should be classified in three ways when the legislation is brought forward: (a) That urban ridings must be considered as such. Perhaps the figure for an optimum number of population in those urban ridings could be pegged, at let's say, 85,000; (b) that there are a number of mixed urban and rural ridings and that the optimum figure for those ridings could be pegged at roughly 65,000; (c) that there should be a special classification for northern Ontario ridings and perhaps the optimum figure of population for such classifications could be about 40,000 or 45,000.

Within those broad classifications, it seems to me, there should be a 25 per cent variable factor—(a) for communities of interest; (b) for natural boundaries; and (c) to take into account traffic patterns.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And the preservation of historic ridings.

Mr. Foulds: I think such a proposal has the benefit of meeting the problem of accessibility, of accountability of the elected representative and of two-way communication.

To sum up, it seems to me there is a general feeling, in northwestern Ontario particularly, that we have suffered because government policies have not encouraged development and, therefore, the population growth has not kept pace with the rest of Ontario. Having suffered economically, culturally and socially, we are very sensitive about being made to suffer politically. We must not lose the representation that we now have.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that there is a growing frustration and anger in northwestern Ontario, especially in view of the fact that, in our terms, in some areas we have grown. The population, for example, around the city of Thunder Bay has increased.

My own provincial riding, in northern terms, is a very compact one. It stretches only 30 miles east of the city of Thunder Bay and 30 miles west. There are approximately 6,000 to 8,000 voters in the rural part of that riding, but those 6,000 to 8,000 voters, frankly, do not receive the service available to the voters in the urban part of the Port Arthur provincial riding. For one thing, all the government offices are centered in the city of Thunder Bay itself and that's inevitable. For another, my own constituency office is more conveniently located in the urban core of the riding.

If that is true of my riding, which is among the most compact in northern Ontario—it is only about 3,000 sq miles—how much more true it must be for a far-flung constituency such as the Thunder Bay riding.

Gentlemen, if the government designs a re-distribution scheme which attempts to diminish the representation in northern Ontario, it does so at its peril. If such a scheme is even a remote possibility, it imperils the democratic process, because constituencies such as Kenora and especially Thunder Bay are already unmanageable. Only the incredible efforts, as I said earlier, of the present member for Thunder Bay have made that riding at all manageable.

The government will discredit the parliamentary process by any attempt to diminish northern Ontario representation. It will encourage apathy and alienation among the electorate by any such attempt.

Coupled with the stupidity of certain ideas emanating from the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) about using northwestern Ontario quite literally as a backwater for the Great Lakes, is it any wonder that talk of northern Ontario separatism is surfacing once again? If you don't watch it, one fine morning there may very well be a defended border at the French River, and I of course would not like to see such a development.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): There goes the empire of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier).

Mr. Foulds: But I certainly would understand it. The years of frustration brought about by the neglect of northern Ontario—so typified in this session's Throne speech—makes such talk and such actions possible and understandable.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you.

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member makes reference to the possibility, and insinuates that a reservoir may be built in northwestern Ontario, as suggested by the chairman of the select committee on drainage. I want to make it very clear—and I want to put it on the record today—that while this may be a suggestion of the chairman of the select committee, it is not a recommendation of that committee.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well Mr. Speaker, surely that is not a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh sit down; let's hear him out.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member has sat down.

But surely, Mr. Speaker, if a member in a speech makes certain suggestions which he puts forward as his opinion and if another hon. member disagrees with him, he can't raise them on a point of order. He can take the opportune moment when his turn comes to enter this debate, or any other debate, to put his position forward.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That's elementary, my dear Watson.

Mr. Singer: The hon. minister disagrees with what the member has been saying; let him speak in the Throne debate instead of rising on a spurious point of order.

Mr. Foulds: To the point of order, Mr. Speaker:

The reference was made in the speech because no minister of government has yet denied that such a scheme is possible.

If the member—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, please.

Mr. Foulds: If you please, Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

If the present minister wishes to make a statement to the effect that the government is not considering such a scheme and will not consider such a scheme in the future, let him do so and the residents of northwestern Ontario will be very happy indeed.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that—

Mr. Speaker: I don't think the minister replies; he has to save it for question period or some other time.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That's exactly right.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The government has no intention of going ahead with the reservoir.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: I have finished my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Just have the hon. member for Lambton get up in his place and deny that he said what he said.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I just want to put the government's position.

Mr. Singer: Or both of the members get into the Throne debate for a change.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We will.

Mr. Lewis: He wants to build that reservoir, and the minister doesn't want him too. He has more influence with the cabinet than the minister does.

Mr. Foulds: The minister said it will not be done.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Is the hon. member for Port Arthur through; or does he want to proceed?

Mr. Foulds: I have finished my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in the Throne debate. I bring to the attention of you and the members of this Legislature some of the problems that concern constituents in my riding, and voters of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I might say that I am not a crowd drawer, but of course I never was. So I am not disappointed at the audience; those who are in their seats this morning. However, I know what I have to say may not be too enlightening either.

However, I wish to extend congratulations to the Speaker, whose task is not an easy one; and I feel he is filling his duties in a very fair and able way. And I wish him well during the rest of his turn in his honourable position.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Did the member say fairly able or fair and able?

Mr. Spence: Fair and able—I hope I did.

Since the last session the Liberal Party has acquired two new members, and I know that their presence will contribute greatly, not only to the Liberal Party, but also to this Legislature as a whole—

Mr. Lewis: We are quite sure about that.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): So are we.

Mr. Spence: —and also, Mr. Speaker, to the debates which take place. Members of the government have attempted to brush aside these two by-election victories, which are the result of the personal reputations of the individual candidates. But it is useless for the Premier (Mr. Davis) and his colleagues to deny that these by-elections were a shock and a disappointment to them.

There is no question that both hon. members—the hon. member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) and the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Riddell) have many fine qualities and I have no doubt that will become more abundantly clear during the months ahead. Let not the government blind itself to the fact that these by-election results indicate a very real concern among the public about the centralization of power at Queen's Park and the rapidly increasing costs of the provincial government, government waste and the high cost of assessment and many more things I could mention.

Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech this year could not be described as an exciting or inspiring document. Judging from the comments of my own constituents the people of the province found the speech vague and unsatisfactory, offering little relief for their difficulties, such as high taxes.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the people have not forgotten that during the election campaign of 1971 this government maintained that it would not increase taxes if a Conservative government was re-elected, and that just a few months later, in 1972, the hon. provincial Treasurer increased taxes on automobile licences, marriage licences, birth certificates, gasoline, tobacco, liquor and many other items. The entry fees to provincial parks and Ontario Place were also increased.

So in just a few short months after the election the people of the province began to ask themselves if they could have faith in the words of this government. They asked one another, "Is this the government's way of footing the bills for all those fine things that were promised to us at election time?" That was just the beginning of the disillusionment of the people of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech we were promised land-use curbs, and certainly some action is needed in this connection. I think almost everyone will agree that something must be done about this. The question is how, when and where, and who is to take the lead? There are so many people involved and so many problems. One of the big difficulties is that, for the most part, land for any purpose can only come from the agricultural sector. In the old days it could be taken from the bush, but not any more, Mr. Speaker.

There are so many needs crying for attention. People need food, which can only come from a thriving agricultural industry. They need places to live, places to work, places for recreation, but we have to get our priorities right. Why is it always the farmer and the agricultural industry which bear the consequences of this modern-day good we call progress?

Land is needed for subdivisions and they take it from the farmland. Land is needed for recreation and they take it from farmland. Land is needed for airports and they take it from the good farmland. How long can this go on?

Obviously strong and effective action must be taken and without delay, Mr. Speaker. A first step would be to establish a government committee of all parties, which would gather opinions and statistics, hold hearings, and then after a thorough and urgent study of the problems involved legislation must be drafted and discussed in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not mention the agricultural industry at this time. The year of 1972 was a very costly and discouraging year for many farmers. On June 11 there was a very heavy frost which caused a tremendous loss of thousands of acres of wheat, corn, beans, potatoes, tobacco, tomatoes and fruit. In most cases the crops were replanted, but the weather became very wet, which meant that the crops did not mature as they should. In fact, many of the crops did not ripen as they should have, which meant a poor harvest. So many farmers had double expense and work in replanting, with poor returns for their labours and their expenditures.

For instance, in many cases the elevator people would not buy some of the farmers' crops because they had not matured properly. I know that pears, plums and other fruits actually fell off the trees and were lost. I know of several fruit farmers who had to seek work in industry because they had such heavy financial losses. Generally, the year for those in agriculture was a costly and disappointing one with the light harvest of grain and beans.

Another great difficulty was the serious shortage of farm labour. Those in the labour force do not wish to work on farms because of the hard work involved, because they feel they can earn higher wages in industry. This means that our farmers have to buy new machines to operate their farms and harvest their crops. These machines come very high in price and many farmers have had to stop farming because they simply cannot afford to buy this very dear equipment. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Agriculture has some plan about the labour problem to put before the Legislature when his estimates come up.

There has been a great deal of publicity lately about the tremendous increase in the price of food. Our womenfolk are protesting and talking of boycotting meat. We read about those organizations such as WASP—Women Against Soaring Prices—and I know that when women become determined about something and start banding together, they are a force to be reckoned with.

It's only natural that they should be concerned about the way prices are skyrocketing. Governments may come and governments may go but women all over the world always have to feed their families. It is obvious to everyone that the situation in the food industry and in the agricultural industry is reaching a point of crisis and all levels of government have to take fast and effective action to improve this.

Mr. Speaker, the light yields of grain and beans this past year, and the consequence of the shortages, has helped to bring about the high prices. It has cost more to feed hogs and cattle and sheep and with the increasing world demand for pork, lamb and beef, something has to be done, and soon. As I say, there is a shortage of experienced farm labour and many of the older farmers are retiring and going out of business. The younger men who might have taken over these veteran farms are discouraged when they look into the prices of acquiring farms, the cost of the necessary machinery, the long hours, and frequent small net returns. Consequently more and more of the farmland of this province could lay idle unless these young farmers are given higher net returns.

Food shortages are going to become worse and the prices, Mr. Speaker, I would say, will be going even higher. Of course, we all realize, Mr. Speaker, that there is a segment of the population which can afford these current high prices for meat. But there is a very large percentage of our population which simply cannot afford these prices. I ask the Minister of Agriculture and the government to look into these increases in prices and the tremendous difference—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister of Agriculture is paying careful attention.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): He should resign.

Mr. Spence:—between the prices paid to the farmer and the prices paid by the consumer. Also, there are many complaints about the poor butchering at the present time, about the poor quality of meat, and the fact that the price of the cheaper cuts of meat have increased much more proportionately than the more expensive cuts.

For years now I have been asking in the House, as have many of my colleagues, for progressive, constructive action to be taken to preserve the agricultural industry in this province. So often the action taken has been too little and too late. I can only hope that now, at last, something really will be done, not only for the sake of the farmers of the province but for the sake of the consumer as well.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but say that I am constantly disappointed in our present provincial government. They seem to be so obsessed with their great and glorious schemes—their regional government plans, their modern office blocks, and other things like the great white elephant on the lakeshore and this new fangled Disneyland transportation system we are hearing about—that they have overlooked the basic necessities of life which are certainly much more important to the average Ontario taxpayer.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, what can be much more basic than the water supply and the sewage systems which many of our towns and villages in the ridings are at present in the process of building? Of course, the Ontario government is giving increased grants for these purposes, which are a great benefit to these municipalities, but they will have to be making payments for over a quarter of a century to carry out these schemes and to control pollution.

To help with these payments, the towns and villages desperately need small industry to be established in these areas. If help cannot be given in this way, the only alternative open to these municipalities would be to increase the tax rate beyond anything the pensioner can afford to pay. Homeowners on fixed incomes will simply not be able to meet the tax bills nor will the widows and the women with families to raise on mothers' allowances. These small towns and villages simply must have small industries. These small municipalities cannot continue to survive unless the government, through government development programmes or by some other means, takes some positive action.

I can only hope that the minister will have an encouraging report when his estimates come before this assembly. The government seems reluctant to help develop a rural community, yet I see that Ontario Hydro is building a new office block, which will cost some $40 million, right here in Toronto, on University Ave. in an area where the transportation facilities are strained to the utmost at rush hours. The overcrowding of our downtown area is already causing tremendous problems. Far from taking action to relieve these urban pressures this provincial government seems to be going out of its way to make matters even worse with projects such as the Hydro building in this location. This is further evidence of the government's obsession with centralization.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of the protests from many sectors of the public, this government has made it clear it intends to continue its plans for regional government which are causing grave concern in many rural areas. In fact, many taxpayers in the province are actually frightened at the reports they have heard of the high cost incurred in areas where a form of regional government is already established.

Every report that I've ever read in newspapers outside of Toronto, Mr. Speaker, is unfavourable to regional government. All reports state that the costs have increased tremendously under these schemes. I have read that most costs will be up this year. In one article I read it said the costs will be $3.5 million higher in 1971 than in 1970 under the old form of county government, in spite of a grant of some $1 million, which actually cuts the regional levy for 1971.

These transitional grants are only for five years, and the taxpayers know that after the five-year period they are going to have to foot the bill for this extra cost of regional government. This government is acting under false pretenses when it tries to sell the principle of regional government to the rural people, without telling them what it will cost. The government knows all too well what the cost of regional government is going to be; and with the cost of education, sewage systems and water supply systems, rural communities will be unable to meet the tax bill.

Mr. Speaker, during the recent by-election campaign in Huron, I had an opportunity to talk to a few citizens of the area. They were very concerned that the government would find some method to force regional government upon the people in the rural areas if the Conservatives won in these two by-elections. I think that to some extent this is the feeling of the people in many areas throughout the province.

On March 30 the London Free Press reported that the Premier had announced that his government had no intention of imposing regional government in all sections of the province, but proposed strong county rule. Perhaps this means that the Premier, in spite of protesting that the results of the by-elections do not reflect public opinion generally, really thinks otherwise and in fact has learned a lesson. If he has learned anything about the feelings of the people, that certainly is very gratifying. But the people have learned something too since 1971; that is, that what this government says and what it does are two different things.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Right.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, last, but not least, I want to say a few words about the report of the Provincial Auditor. This gentleman has always had my great respect; and Mr. Spence certainly bears an honourable name, in my view—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Is that the only nice thing the member can say about him? There is much more.

Mr. Spence: However, in all the years that he has held the position as Provincial Auditor, this is the first time I can recall a report that was so critical of the government. The record of government abuse of taxpayers' money and of wasteful spending is so outrageous as to be almost unbelievable. Of course, this is the last report of Mr. Spence, since he retired at the end of 1972; and perhaps he felt that he would like to leave the house in order before he left it to someone else's tender mercies.

Whatever his reasons for producing this report at this time, and whether or not he was motivated by the disclosure made by the public accounts committee last year, I do know that this report has certainly caused a great deal of consternation among the members of this House and the public in general.

It has always been my understanding that the Provincial Auditor should be impartial, a kind of guardian of the money of the people of this province, a servant of the people—not the government—who will report on government spending of the taxpayers' money and make sure that the money is spent according to the wishes of the people as laid down in the Acts of this province. Yet each year, when the estimates of the Provincial Auditor are before the Legislature, the Auditor sits alongside the government, giving confidential answers to the provincial Treasurer, who then interprets the information to the House as he sees fit.

If the Provincial Auditor is in fact the impartial guardian of the taxpayers' money, and if he is to curb abuses and waste on the part of the government, then surely he should sit at the Clerk's table in that neutral area in the centre of this assembly so that the opposition parties will have the same opportunity of sending questions directly to him rather than receiving their answers through the interpretation of the Treasurer.

I realize that the Provincial Auditor's report is discussed in detail in committee, but if the Provincial Auditor is to be present in this House to supply information to the government, in all fairness the same opportunity should be available to all parties so that the members, press and public alike may know what the Provincial Auditor has to say. His written answers should be read into the records, where appropriate, rather than the predigested answers supplied by the Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other matters I could talk on but when the budget comes down no doubt I will try to have a few words to say then. I thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to take part in this debate. I was all prepared last year to take part in the debate on six different occasions. On those six different occasions, I had my wife with me, and this morning I have my wife with me again.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): She's certainly the better half.

Mr. McIlveen: That's right, the better half, and it shows that once in seven is lucky.

I had a speech all ready last year to congratulate you on your appointment, Mr. Speaker, and I was going to do that again today, but yesterday I heard the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) take you apart because you heard much better out of your right ear than you did with your left ear, with the "ayes" and the "nays". But I was beginning to think that the way the questions were coming up in the question period that you didn't hear the rump at all, and this rump here is by far the loudest section of the whole House. It is by far the best section, too, I must say.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): They are never critical of the government.

Mr. McIlveen: Who aren't?

Mr. Young: The rump.

Mr. McIlveen: Not yet; give us time.

An hon. member: The member for Yorkview hasn't been listening.

Mr. Young: It's the base of the party.

Mr. McIlveen: That's right.

An hon. member: We are the most constructive section on this side of the House.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): It's a great training ground.

Mr. McIlveen: Mr. Speaker, I notice that I was mentioned in dispatches by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) the other day. I was going to have something to say about that but I am going to wait until he does some damned fool thing again and then I will do it in my column.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Don't wait for him to do that. He only comes here to listen to himself.

Mr. McIlveen: I know, but we will have it the next time. I thought in my maiden speech that I should at least deal with problems which are associated with my own riding.

Mr. Young: There aren't any problems there!

Mr. McIlveen: The people have a lot fewer problems now than they did in the last four years.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): That's why the member is here.

Mr. Young: Does the member think this government will listen to a Tory member any more than it listens to an opposition member?

Mr. McIlveen: Oh sure, why shouldn't it?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If the member keeps polishing up the handle, he is going to get over there beside the member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. McIlveen: The Lieutenant Governor mentioned a rapid growth in the Ontario economy with a lower unemployment rate—from 5.2 per cent in 1971 to 4.8 per cent in 1972—and with a record growth of 140,000 new jobs created in Ontario. These figures tally with the unemployment figures in Oshawa. Unemployment in Oshawa in February, 1972, was 4,162 males, 2,872 females. As of February, 1973, the male unemployed were down to 2,749 and the females to 2,290.

General Motors, by far the single largest employer in my community, had 9,712 hourly employees and 4,000 on salary in March, 1972. In March, 1973, the hourly employees had increased to 11,500, with no increase in the salaried employees. Their number remained steady at 4,000. This is the largest total employment in the automotive industry in Oshawa since the introduction of the auto trade pact in 1965.

Because automotive employment is so vital to my community, I would like to review the importance of car manufacturing to the Ontario economy in terms of volume of production of motor vehicles. Motor vehicle manufacturing is the single most important industry in this province. With the addition of motor vehicle parts and accessories, it supplies 70,000 jobs—which represents nine per cent of the total manufacturing employment in this province.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Who is that speaking?

Mr. McIlveen: Pardon?

Mr. Shulman: I can't remember the member's name right now.

Mr. McIlveen: Yes, Charlie what's-his-name.

An hon. member: Don't ever forget it.

Mr. McIlveen: The importance of this industry is truly exemplified by the fact that one in every eight jobs is directly or indirectly related to the automotive industry. The automotive agreement between Canada and the United States, despite recent US complaints, has been beneficial to the manufacturing of both countries. Sales of our vehicles in the two countries have reached record levels, averaging 1.9 million units annually between 1965 and 1969. This was an increase of 26 per cent over the average sales in the preceding five years.

Two-way trade between the two countries increased total employment in the automobile, vehicle and parts industry. The wholesale price differential in the two countries for comparable models decreased from nine per cent of the US price in 1964 to approximately four per cent in 1969. I personally will be satisfied only when the price is price parity with the U.S.A.

Mr. Young: It is up to 10 per cent now.

Mr. McIlveen: No, it isn't.

Mr. Young: Oh yes.

Mr. McIlveen: Not according to last week. Are the member's figures better than GM's?

Mr. Young: They always are.

Mr. Shulman: Is it GM that writes the member's speeches?

Mr. McIlveen: No they don't, as a matter of fact. I wrote this one myself, as the member can tell.

Mr. Shulman: The member is reading it quite badly.

Mr. McIlveen: Well, I always read badly.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, isn't there a ruling about reading speeches?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): The member for High Park would have nothing to say if there were.

Mr. McIlveen: I wouldn't mind, if there were such a rule. I would be pleased to speak according to that rule, if it was also for everyone else. I would like to see a rule covering reading of editorials, because I think last year I listened to the member for High Park read editorials for about six hours.

Mr. Shulman: I gave attribution to my speech; I was hoping the member would do the same for his.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. McIlveen: Well, I'll tell you that next year with the price decrease the member has on Xaviera and The Happy Hooker, he might be able to read that aloud into the record.

Mr. Shulman: I wanted to do that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It would make as much sense as what he usually reads.

Mr. McIlveen: At the same time motor vehicle manufacturing production rose by 92 per cent and parts manufacturing production by 130 per cent. The only point of dissatisfaction with the auto pact on the part of the United States is the turnaround on the balance of trade of motor vehicles and parts from a total of $37 million in favour of the United States in 1965, to a minus of $162 million in 1970. However, it is a fact that the balance is still in favour of the United States by over $2 billion since the signing of the pact in 1965.

While Canada has benefited from the automotive pact as a whole, such cannot be said for all municipalities concerned with automotive manufacturing. Take Oshawa, for instance.

The UAW is an amalgamated union of nine units in Oshawa for General Motors and its suppliers. In 1965, this amalgamated union had 18,300 workers. In 1972 they had 12,000 workers, for a total loss of 6,000 automotive jobs. General Motors employed 15,700 in 1965 compared with 10,100 in 1972, for a total loss of 5,600 employees. Updating to 1973, with an increase General Motors has gone up to 11,500 hourly employees, which will bring the loss to 4,000 jobs since the automotive pact was brought in. At the same time, many of the small parts manufacturing plants, such as Coulters, have been lost to Oshawa and Canada over the past year.

Regarding the safeguards of the automotive pact, to continue the strength of the Canadian and Ontario economy specifically, I would like to suggest the following:

1. That regardless of other changes which may take place in the automotive trade pact between Canada and the United States, existing safeguards which assure that certain levels of production in terms of dollar value must take place in Canada, have to be maintained.

2. The level of production requirements be raised to ensure that, as a minimum, Canadians will have a right to produce in dollar value the amount actually consumed in North American automotive production.

If this had been in effect last year we would have had more jobs in the automotive industry. According to the president of the UAW in Oshawa we built six per cent of North American built cars but we consumed 7.5 per cent. If we were to build the same dollar value as we consumed, we would supply a further 30,000 automotive jobs.

It is my opinion that the Ontario government should make very strong representation to Ottawa in regard to increasing these safeguards. Second, they should request the Canadian government institute a task force to study the importation of foreign-built cars into our country. It is time that we as a province, and we as a country, found out how big a percentage of imports we can afford and still keep our own automotive industry healthy. So much for the car manufacturers.

The Lieutenant Governor made it clear that the most urgent requirements facing all governments today is the preservation of our physical resources, and the most important of these resources is land. To me, this was one of the highlights of his speech. Legislation for the preservation of the Niagara Escarpment and the control over the one million acres that are involved is important. But of more direct importance to my riding is the parkway belt from Dundas in the West to Oshawa in the east that the government has promised.

The Premier (Mr. Davis) aptly described this vast parkway system as urban separators to contain the sprawling growth around Metropolitan Toronto. This imaginative approach will ensure that our children and our children's children do not have the miles of concrete jungle to contend with that are prevalent in large American metropolitan areas today and which are quickly becoming evident in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, may I continue for a moment on the parkway belt? One of the ideal provincial land purchase schemes could be through bigger and better conservation areas. However, I would like to put forth some of the concerns of my municipality regarding the manner in which the conservation authorities are organized.

We recognize the validity of conservation and the necessity of spending substantial funds for conservation. However, those substantial sums should not be levied on it by a body of persons who are not elected, who are not answerable to anyone except the minister for the amount of money they spend, and who, for the most part, have no knowledge of or interest in the effect of their levy on the municipal taxpayer.

For instance, the city of Oshawa has 95,000 people, has 64 per cent of the population of the area covered by our conservation authority, provides 66 per cent of the municipal share of the expenses of the authority, and yet has only three representatives on a 15-man conservation authority.

A small portion of the township of Clark, comprising 210 people, has a member on the authority. A portion of the township of Reach, comprising 211 people, has a member on the authority, and a portion of the township of Pickering, comprising 1,225 people, has a member on the authority. The net result is that the representation from these small areas—containing less than 1.5 per cent of the population of our conservation authority and contributing less than 1.5 per cent of the municipal share of the budget—is exactly the same as the city of Oshawa, with 64 per cent of the population contributing 66 per cent of the municipal share of the authority's budget.

I feel that if the cause of conservation is to receive the support of the urban municipalities, these glaring discrepancies must be remedied, and the Act rewritten accordingly. It is my opinion that a much larger share for conservation land purchases must come from the provincial purse rather than the already overburdened property tax base.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that placed in the parkway belt there will be a special area called the transportation corridor. This will have a limited access, multilane highway, a medium density rapid commuter system, rail beds for CNR and CPR trains, hydro and telephone rights of way, plus space for communications networks that are not yet in the minds of the eventual inventors.

Mr. Speaker, all these plans are magnificent for the future. However, of greater urgency to my rapidly growing municipality is the extension of GO Transit to Oshawa by rail. Our transportation should have the same consideration as that of Metropolitan Toronto, and presently we are not getting it.

Mr. Shulman: Change the government.

Mr. McIlveen: No, I won't go that far.

Mr. Shulman: You will have to if you want better transportation.

Mr. McIlveen: The Lieutenant Governor stated that a strong and reformed local government is in the best position to determine its own priorities and proposes to strengthen local government by transferring more authority and responsibility for the many decisions that relates to local matters. Mr. Speaker, in our area that reform has been going on since 1967.

My municipality, accompanied by its neighbouring municipality, petitioned the Ontario government to join with them in seeking to find the best possible alternatives to the social, physical, economic, governmental, and financial elements. With this in mind, the OPAD study was born, and OPAD stands for the Oshawa area planning and development study.

Specifically, this study included the following closely interrelated components: 1. Economic base; 2. Land use; 3. Transportation; 4. Municipal services, such as water and sewer; 5. Financial capability; 6. Regional government structure and implementation. Consultant teams were hired and each consultant team took one phase of the study and reported their findings to the consultant principal, Mr. Don Patterson.

After two years, the study broke down, due to many factors. But the main factor, however, was the inability of the local elected officials to agree on the various alternatives for our region.

Following the study's termination, the study results were given to the province. The study was continued by the Ministry of Inter-governmental Affairs, and a proposal has been brought forward for the area east of Metro, which was released by the hon. Charles MacNaughton and the member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Irvine) Dec. 18, 1972, at Eastdale Collegiate in Oshawa. Municipalities are now in the throes of reacting to that Dec. 18 proposal.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): They sure are.

Mr. McIlveen: Hopefully, the province will have enough common ground to come forward with a compromise solution satisfactory to all.

I know that in a recent local newspaper survey, the majority of citizens in the area east of Metro decided that they were in favour of regionalization by a large percentage. I personally would like to see the legislation written this session in favour of implementation for Jan. 1, 1974.

Mr. Speaker, I said at the outset that I was going to mention matters from the Throne Speech as they affect Oshawa. The Lieutenant Governor mentioned that it is the Ontario government's proposal to conserve and maintain Ontario's heritage and history, and that the government would propose legislation to make funds available for the restoration and maintenance of selected buildings and structures of a historic significance. There is a structure in Oshawa in need of this new legislation right now.

The late Col. R. S. McLaughlin's family estate, called Parkwood, is in dire need of funds. If we are going to preserve it for posterity it must be preserved now.

Parkwood is unique. It is a part of our Canadian heritage that cannot be replaced, nor will its like ever be seen again. Parkwood is a magnificent structure that would equal or better in tourist attraction most of the medieval castles that are strewn throughout Europe and Britain and which most Canadians travelling through see every summer and on every holiday.

The late Col. R. S. McLaughlin left Parkwood to the Oshawa General Hospital situated directly across the road. The estate now is funded through a McLaughlin Foundation grant, a city of Oshawa grant, and fees charged from sightseeing. At the moment, the northwest corner of the estate is in jeopardy, as the Oshawa General Hospital has received approval from the Ontario Municipal Board to rezone it for the erection of a parking garage, in spite of many, many citizens' protests. The hospital is land-poor and badly needs a parking garage, but if Parkwood is to be preserved, no part of its land should be severed. I hope the legislation mentioned is decisive and quick because this province can ill afford to lose a part of its heritage as valuable as Parkwood.

His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor stated that his government will provide increased assistance and encouragement to our amateur athletes through a special community-wide athletics and recreational programme that will be giving full support to the first Ontario Summer Games, which will be held this year in Oshawa commencing July 1. I would like to take just a few moments to express my delight at Oshawa's being chosen as the city for these games.

Believe me, the government could not have chosen better. I would like to state categorically that we intend to make it a tough act to follow for the city that will be chosen for the 1974 games.

The games committee is under the chairmanship of Mr. T. V. Kelly. Terry is a dynamic, energetic young man who will have every Ontario citizen involved in making our games a success. He suggested to me a torch be carried from Queen's Park to Oshawa, following the ancient Olympic custom.

With this in mind, I wrote to the Premier, suggesting that the legislative members carry the torch in relays to start the games. As Oshawa is approximately 40 miles away, it would mean less than a half a mile for each member. The Premier replied to my request in an off-the-record letter. While I am not accustomed to reading the Premier's off-the-record letters into Hansard, this I thought I would. He said off the record:

Charles, I am highly amused at the prospect of a suggested relay. Before we get fully committed to such an undertaking, I would like to be sure that the games would not be over and forgotten before the flame arrived.

It is quite obvious to me that the Premier does not think too highly of the physical condition of the members of the House.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): He doesn't think too much of the mental condition of some of them either.

Mr. Deacon: He is thinking about his back-benchers.

Mr. Shulman: He is more familiar with the Conservatives than he is with the opposition, so he should know.

Mr. McIlveen: Well, I said that if I could find a really long-burning flame I would like to put the members to the test.

Mr. Shulman: We accept for the NDP.

Mr. McIlveen: The NDP accept?

Mr. Shulman: We accept.

Mr. McIlveen: Well, by George, we are in.

Mr. Shulman: Look at this slim group of members.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): You don't notice anybody chubby over here, Mr. Speaker. They all look chubby over there.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Don't look at me.

Mr. McIlveen: I want to say the fat cats here can outrun those guys, too.

Mr. Martel: We will put them to the test if they want.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): The first time they ever admitted they were fat.

Mr. McIlveen: For the week preceding the games, Terry Kelly has devised a plan which will be known as "Fanfare for Oshawa Week." This will be a build-up for the games starting last week in June. The games themselves will start July 1.

The whole week will be devoted to arts and crafts and cultural exhibits by various organizations throughout the city. We certainly welcome all of the members as visitors to our city at any time, but especially during "Fanfare for Oshawa Week."

On July 1, the Ontario games start and they will speak for themselves. The best athletes from across the province will be competing. Come and see the records fall. Maybe someone from the members' own communities will be in the winners' circle.

Mr. Speaker, in closing let me say that this was an imaginative and a far-reaching Speech from the Throne. Its main theme was improving the quality of life for the citizens of Ontario. I am sure this government will continue to do just that. I have put forward some suggestions that I hope can be adopted by the province.

Mr. Speaker, before I sit down, I wish to thank you for allowing me to participate in this debate.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, before I get into my remarks I would like to add to the sentiments expressed by many other members in this chamber in thanking you for your co-operation in our proceedings and to congratulate you on the way that you have handled the affairs of the House. I have no doubt at all that this kind of relationship will continue.

I would also like to join with others who have spoken in this Throne Speech debate and add my congratulations to the two new members who have joined us as a result of the recent by-elections.

I would like to congratulate anybody on the other side who has been elevated to a ministerial position, particularly the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett), since I'll be watching him very closely over the next few months. I want to say at the outset I wish him well and hope that he will take into consideration some of the suggestions that we from northern Ontario will be making concerning industry and tourism as they affect that part of the province.

I would also like to congratulate those who have been elevated to the status of parliamentary assistant and hope they too will do well and contribute in a significant fashion to the affairs of the province.

Before I get into the main topics I wish to discuss, Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have had the company of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes) who spoke in this debate last night. I wonder what prompted him to be so volatile and so critical of a government that he happens to be a part of. Since he is parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier), I wonder whether he is going to be with them much longer, because in my short tenure in this Legislature I don't think I have heard any government member get up and be so critical of present programmes and of the indifference with which this government has treated all segments of northern Ontario.

He said the road structure was a disgrace. He said there just wasn't anything meaningful being done by this government in northern Ontario—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): But he'll still vote for them.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): He wants to keep his seat. It's the only way he can keep it.

Mr. Stokes: He said there's nothing that bears repeating or that would lead the people in northern Ontario to believe that this government is taking the problems of northern Ontario seriously.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): They just don't understand.

Mr. Stokes: I am really amazed, Mr. Speaker, to witness a parliamentary assistant stand up and be so critical of a government that he is a part of. I wonder if he avails himself of the opportunity to say those things during caucus meetings, if they have any; and if they do have any, whether there are any cabinet ministers around to listen.

If the hon. Premier (Mr. Davis) of this province, who made a great to-do about the future of this province of opportunity being for people, can't convince a parliamentary assistant that he is serious about making the future for people, how is he going to convince the rest of the people in Ontario, particularly those who come from northern Ontario?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He can't convince the hon. member and me.

Mr. Stokes: He certainly hasn't convinced anybody on this side of this House. I am really amazed, Mr. Speaker, to hear a parliamentary assistant stand up and be so critical of a form of government that he is a part of; it seems to me that he has to justify that to his own constituents. It is simply unbelievable and inconceivable that a parliamentary assistant would stand up and be so critical of a system that he is a part of.

Mr. Young: And he should resign.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): It may be strange but we allow free speech. We don't throw people out for having an idea.

Mr. Stokes: I would subscribe to that but I think anybody who stands up in this Legislature and continues to be a part of an organization with which he seems to be so disenchanted, should re-examine his position.

Mr. Drea: Let the member wait until he hears my next speech.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Speaker, a few members in this house have discussed the geography of this province. I've discussed it with you privately, and with my colleague, the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), who was talking about redistribution as it affects federal ridings and the intimation in the Throne Speech that this government was going to look at redistribution as it affects provincial constituencies. To add some emphasis to the geography and the nature of the problem associated with redistribution, I would like to relate a personal experience that I had as recently as last weekend.

I got a letter from one of the Indian reserves in my constituency. I think it is fair to say that my constituency in a geographic way is the largest in the Province of Ontario. The estimates of its total area are anywhere from 103,000 to 110,000 miles depending on whom one listens to.

Mr. Deacon: That's 100,000 square miles. They may think that is acres.

Mr. Stokes: No, it is 110,000 square miles.

Mr. Deacon: Right. They always used to use acres.

Mr. Stokes: Yes. No, it is 110,000 square miles.

I got an invitation to attend a winter carnival at Big Trout Lake which is one of the most northerly Indian communities in Ontario. They asked me if I wouldn't attend last Friday and Saturday; it would be an opportunity for me to meet with my constituents and enjoy myself with a little bit of northern fun.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Sounds great.

Mr. Stokes: I was sitting in the Ontario Legislature here as we all are. It is 747 railway miles from here to my home in Schreiber. It's a further 135 miles to the city of Thunder Bay. It is another 347 miles from Thunder Bay to the most northerly part of the province you can drive to, by automobile, at Pickle Lake. It would have meant that I had to charter an aircraft from Pickle Lake to Big Trout Lake, that's about 170 air miles. I don't know what the cost of the charter would have been. It could have ranged anywhere from $200 to $300 depending on the kind of aircraft that was available.

Mr. Renwick: What about going over land?

Mr. Stokes: Needless to say I had to turn it down. It would have meant that I would have had to absent myself from this Legislature for about four days and I didn't think I could do that at this point in time. I got a map of Canada.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What did the member for Riverdale say?

Mr. Stokes: Using the centre of the circle that has been prescribed as Toronto, I prescribed the circle up to Fort Severn, which is the most northerly part of the province where anybody lives. If you continue with that circle it takes you to the outskirts of Winnipeg on the west; it takes you to Cape Breton Island on the east. This map doesn't go far enough down into the United States but it would be somewhere around Kentucky I think it is.

Mr. Deacon: Right down into Florida?

Mr. Stokes: Maybe even down into Florida if you continued with the circle. When members hear some other members of this Legislature complaining about the logistics of getting around their ridings and saying that they adequately serve their constituents while sitting down in the Ontario Legislature, at some time in the future if the members see me absent myself for a few days from the proceedings down here, I hope they'll appreciate that I, for one, think that the people in the northern part of this province have as much right to equal representation as anyone in one of the Metropolitan Toronto ridings.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that if the Premier, or anyone who is in a decision-making position in this Legislature, starts talking about the problems of individual members—of the logistics of getting around the riding and the need to see that remote members in the province have an opportunity to expose themselves to their constituents—he will take advantage of the opportunity to put in a word for northern members and the constituents whom they represent.

It seems to me that if the future of this province is to be for people, we should be mindful of the needs, the problems and the aspirations of everyone in the Province of Ontario, regardless of where they may live.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the setting up of a new native organization in the Province of Ontario. For the benefit of any member of this House who is unfamiliar with the way that native people have come into their own in an organizational way in the last few years, under the aegis of the Union of Ontario Indians, my colleague, the member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid), is well aware of Grand Council Treaty No. 3 that takes in all of the Indian bands in his constituency and several in the constituency of Kenora.

All the other Indian reserves and Indian bands have seen the wisdom in structuring themselves in this way. Last month they convened a conference at North Bay, where all the Indian bands decided to join together and speak with a united voice for some 15,000 native people living on northern reserves. These stretch all the way from James Bay on the east to the Manitoba border on the west, north of a line just north of the French River.

Since they have thought about this in a very sophisticated way and in a very responsible way, I think that it's incumbent upon me to remind this Legislature that this new structure is in existence and that they mean business. They are not coming cap in hand to either the Provincial government or the federal government asking for handouts or paternalism, as has been the case all too often in the past.

I would like to read into the record, the aims and objectives of this new organization and hope that if any member from any quarter of this House has an opportunity to speak with them that he or she will treat them with utmost seriousness and courtesy. Listen to them; they have something to say. They have a message. I think that we can expect great things from the new organization that is to be called Grand Council Treaty No. 9 under the presidency of Andrew Rickard, who is the former executive director of the Union of Ontario Indians and chief of the Moose band.

I would like to quote, just to let members know exactly what they are about. I quote Mr. Rickard's letter:

I have been elected to represent my people in northern Ontario known as Treaty No. 9. I am honoured by this gesture of confidence. My colleagues and I will utilize every means possible to ensure that our people will some day enjoy a standard of living at par with the rest of Canada.

I do not claim to be God's answer to the so-called native problem of today; however, I do know that it will only be through a collective effort on the part of the Indian leaders that we will begin to resolve the actual problems, rather than working on the symptoms, as has been the practice in the past.

As the president of this new organization, I have promised our chiefs to work constructively with all levels of government. I intend to do this. I also expect the same co-operation from all the government agencies. I must stress, however, that I will not use any form of rotarian communication with any official just for the sake of pleasing some people. I expect all my inquiries to be answered in a constructive and positive manner. Perhaps this expectation is not in line with the normal civil servant's approach. However, this is the line of approach I intend to use.

I have informed my chiefs that this will be my last effort to work within the existing policies of the various levels of government. I will make every effort to work within the framework of these policies. My colleagues and I intend to resist any policies that are not attuned to the needs of our people. In turn, we intend to constructively propose changes and/or alternatives.

I realize that we in Treaty No. 9 represent only a small fraction of the Canadian population. [In fact, it's about 15,000 people.] I see our voices as being a tiny spark in the darkness. But do not forget that a tiny spark can create an explosion that can rock any power structure. I pray to our Great Spirit that no one will ever resort to this alternative. The incident at Wounded Knee is not a laughing matter. The same situation can easily develop in Canada if the federal government will not respond to our legitimate requests. If we come to an impasse, we will be prepared to seek aid from other sources, be it domestic or foreign.

If all these avenues prove fruitless, what means will we resort to? Will we have to resort to civil disobedience before our needs are met? Will we have to take government offices by force if our legitimate requests are not met? I hope we will never be forced to contemplate such measures. In any event, willingness to work with us will be the determining factor.

In order to ensure that Grand Council Treaty No. 9 does work effectively on behalf of our people in Treaty No. 9 area, we ask that the following procedures be adhered to:

(a) We do not want any group to be funded with respect to any study or project within Treaty No. 9 that will affect our communities, without the full knowledge and consultation of the executive council of Treaty No. 9.

(b) We do not want any studies in our native communities that will solely benefit non-native interests.

(c) Before any anthropologists or other similar groups contemplate visiting one or more of our communities for the purpose of studying our people, we ask that the executive council of Treaty No. 9 be consulted prior to the visits.

(d) We do not want the federal nor the provincial government to introduce any new programmes or projects in any native community located within Treaty No. 9, including meetings, without prior consultation with Grand Council Treaty No. 9.

(e) We do not want any group to spearhead any issue that might develop in Treaty No. 9; that is the function of Grand Council Treaty No. 9.

(f) The executive council of Treaty No. 9 will be the sole agent for the presentation of major issues and programmes dealing with Treaty No. 9 and its native people.

(g) All avenues are open to the chiefs of the Treaty No. 9. The chiefs and band councils will be making individual proposals pertaining to their respective communities from time to time. These individual proposals will not be limited to one level of government.

We leave it to each government to ensure that the foregoing will be adhered to by its civil servants. We request the fullest co-operation from all non-governmental bodies, i.e., both public and private institutions. We further request the co-operation of our sister organizations.

The people of Treaty No. 9 are very desirous in achieving some form of socio-economic parity with the rest of this country. In pursuing this objective, human and financial resources will be required. However, we will tell how, when and where individual services will be required.

We must do our own thing, at our own pace of development and under our own terms.

Yours in co-operation,
Andrew Rickard,
President,

Grand Council Treaty No. 9

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I have made all members of this Legislature aware of this new organization. I hope that members from all sides of the House will co-operate fully with them and listen to them. I think that if we do listen and hear properly, this new organization will be the vehicle for bringing all native people in the far reaches of this province into the mainstream of the cultural, economic and social life of this province. I implore each and every member of this Legislature to co-operate fully with them.

Mr. Speaker, I do have several other topics that I would like to get into, and I was wondering if you would permit me to adjourn the debate at this time before I get into another topic?

If so, I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I have been asked by the House leader, who is unfortunately unable to be here today—he is attending a funeral—to announce that the order of business for Monday will be the Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests today in the west gallery are students from Burlington Central High School of Burlington. In both galleries are students from Danforth Gardens Public School of Scarborough.

Statements by the ministry.

ESTIMATES

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I have here a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by his own hand. Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ended March 31, 1974, and recommends them to the legislative assembly. Toronto, April 9, 1973.

ESTIMATES PROCEDURE

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I believe the members will find it helpful to have a brief statement from the government on the procedure which it is proposed to follow this year in connection with the tabling and presentation of estimates. It may also be of interest to you, sir, and to the members to have a short recapitulation of the decision-making process which has preceded the formal tabling of one volume.

It will be evident from copies of the book now being distributed—which is volume 2 and which covers the 1973-1974 estimates for ministries in the Justice policy field—that the government is reinforcing, in a highly visible fashion, the successful reorganization which emerged last year following acceptance of the recommendations of the Cronyn committee, that is the Committee on Government Productivity or COGP.

You will find, Mr. Speaker, that the first vote in this volume pertains to the cabinet's committee on justice policy of which my hon. colleague, the Provincial Secretary (Mr.

Kerr), is the chairman. When the House resolves itself into committee of supply on the basis of the resolution to be passed later today, the Provincial Secretary will, in introducing his own vote, have an opportunity to elaborate on various aspects in the broad field of justice policy.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That will be pleasant.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The opposition parties in turn may wish to comment on general policy issues at that point. This procedure, we believe, will facilitate the progress of debate when we get to the estimates of the individual operating ministries in the Justice field. Some of these estimates, in accordance with the wishes of this House, will be referred to a standing committee, while others will be debated by the committee of supply.

If we can cover the general policy issues in the context of the cabinet committee's vote, it will avoid duplication in various other debates. These later debates, whether in committee of supply or in one of the standing committees, can be more profitably directed to specific matters pertaining to the ministry concerned.

In a week to 10 days the estimates for the ministries in the Social Development policy field and the Resources Development policy field will each be presented in a separate volume similar to the one tabled today. Again, the vote pertaining to the respective cabinet committee secretariat will be the first vote in the book.

The appropriations for non-policy field ministries, as well as for His Honour's office, the office of the Premier (Mr. Davis) and so on, will be contained in a general government volume which will also be tabled next week. That volume will also reflect another departure from former practices, in that certain appropriations pertaining to your office, Mr. Speaker, and to the operation of this assembly, have been separated and are no longer shown as part of a ministry.

In all this it will be apparent that we are departing from the process which was traditional or more appropriate in the days before the government reorganization. The estimates are now being tabled separately and not as a part of the budget presentation. No doubt hon. members are aware that this is the practice in Westminster as well as in Ottawa and probably in other jurisdictions elsewhere.

The government considers it appropriate this year to have the tabling of estimates straddle the presentation of the budget. The timing of the latter was largely dictated by other events, including the timing of the federal budget. Another year may see the complete estimates tabled ahead of the provincial budget, although this sequence may also be reversed.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That certainly leaves all their options open.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Certainly, as I said the other day, we expect in future to table the estimates before the beginning of the fiscal year. And this, I think, is the point that matters.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Why not be like Mr. Diefenbaker and not have a budget at all?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The tabling of the estimates, now in four volumes, is only the final product of a long and careful sequence or process of decisions.

In presenting these facts to you today, Mr. Speaker, I hope you will allow me to digress for just a moment to acknowledge, on behalf of the Management Board and on behalf of the government, the efforts of all the officials in all the ministries and in all the secretariats. Much has had to be done by deputy ministers and their staffs to allow individual ministers and the various committees of ministers to establish the order of priority, to evaluate the alternatives and to make the decisions which are reflected in these estimates.

The process to which I am referring started more than one year ago. It is now in progress for the estimates to be tabled a year from now. It is a co-operative effort involving the ministries, the policy field committees, the Policy and Priorities Board, the Management Board and, of course, cabinet itself.

It used to be said that up to four or five years ago the Management Board, or the Treasury Board as it was then known, decided the estimates during a couple of months in the winter, with a few final decisions being deferred until just about budget time. This is no longer the case.

All last summer the ministers, the ministries and the policy field committees developed and reworked their proposals in the framework of a long-range forecast. These proposals were discussed by the Policy and Priorities Board at several series of meetings during the summer and fall. The cabinet then approved certain policies and established an upper limit for each ministry's expenditures.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Like cutting Medicare by $50 million.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It was within this framework that the Management Board reviewed and recommended the detailed allocations of funds, as tabled in the estimates.

The task of making the limited provincial resources stretch to cover the ever-expanding needs of the province, is difficult and demanding. The demands placed on the competence and ingenuity of government departments are very great. The Management Board, in reviewing the estimates submissions from the various ministries, ensures that they reflect the policy decisions of the cabinet and that the resources allocated are appropriate in terms of efficiency and sound administrative practice.

Mr. Speaker, the estimates which were sent to this House by His Honour today, and those which he will send here next week are the culmination of a co-operative effort; they are the result of many difficult decisions made by the government, and they reflect the determination of ministers and officials alike to maximize the benefits from the resources we have and to provide this province with efficient public administration.

I have intentionally refrained from comment on specific amounts or specific programmes. The Treasurer will deal with the finances of the province on Thursday and each of my colleagues will, at the appropriate time, elaborate on the programmes for which he has primary responsibility as a member of the government.

However, I do want to assure the members and, through them, the people of Ontario, that this new procedure, this new management process which the government has adopted for the review and presentation of its expenditure programme, is designed to maximize the results obtained for every tax dollar. Thank you.

TORONTO DOWNTOWN HOUSING

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to report to the Legislature on the discussions held with Mayor David Crombie, Toronto city and Ontario Housing Corp. officials and myself in regard to a development proposed for Sherbourne and Dundas Sts. Although I was absent from the city since Thursday, I was in almost constant contact by telephone with those involved.

On April 3, I met with Mayor Crombie after which the following joint statement was issued and I quote:

1. The minister stated that acceptance of this development as a public housing project will only be in accordance with the resolution of the city council which said in part, "And whereas in January, 1973, council authorized the engagement of Messrs. Diamond and Meyer to prepare a feasibility study of the economics of developing the site at permitted densities; and whereas such a study was completed on Feb. 15, 1973, and it indicates that an infill lowrise project can be built on the site, retaining the existing buildings, at the same density and at no greater cost than the developer's highrise proposal; . . . now therefore be it resolved that the Ontario Housing Corp. be advised that council considers that negotiations should also be directed toward having a lowrise infill housing development on the site . . ."

2. The minister and the mayor indicated their mutual desire for a meeting with the builder to resolve the matter within a week.

3. The minister and the mayor will be pleased to accept the assurance of the builder that no further demolition will take place on the site pending such meeting.

4. The minister expressed strong interest in having this project go ahead along the lines of the city's wishes as outlined in his recent letter to the mayor, where he sought a practical way in which the project could provide an innovative approach in the field of public housing.

Sir, that's the end of the joint statement issued or agreed to by the mayor and myself at the time.

On April 5, officials of OHC, acting on my behalf, met with the mayor and his city officials and made an alternative proposal which would have provided accommodation for 250 elderly persons on this site as well as accommodation for families, with the prospects of preserving and retaining those houses of historical worth.

I believe this was an attractive alternative solution which would have mixed old with new architecture and families with senior citizens in the downtown core where such accommodation is needed.

What we were doing throughout these negotiations was stepping in to help the city in a situation it found unpalatable.

Our alternate proposal was as follows:

We were prepared to scale down the 29-storey building to 15 storeys and put it at the south end of the site behind the commercial development proposed for Dundas St. This residence would have been exclusively for elderly persons. OHC was prepared to preserve as many as possible of the existing homes, particularly those of historical worth, even though it might be necessary to move them elsewhere on the site.

It was estimated that all those of historical worth would be saved. These homes would have been renovated to house large families and some additional family residences would have been built to infill behind the existing housing.

It was our belief that this alternative solution could have been proceeded with quickly and would have produced upwards of 400 needed dwellings for Metropolitan Toronto.

I would like to emphasize here that, although this site had been offered to OHC by the owner, approved for public housing purposes by the Metropolitan Toronto housing advisory council and the federal government, final provincial approval for the project had not then, and still has not, been given. We had no written contract with the developer and, therefore, no control over his actions.

On the evening of April 5, this alternative was rejected by the city through Mayor Crombie. The mayor offered alternatives which, hopefully, will provide satisfactory development of this block.

After reviewing these alternatives, I offered, based on our agreement of April 3, that housing be developed at the same density and at no greater cost, and to provide the funds for this project on a partnership basis. The city of Toronto had shown its desire to become involved as an active partner in this development by expending $10,000 of its own funds for a planning study on the site.

It is normal for the two parties in a partnership to make financial contributions, and under the partnership arrangement which we are offering, one which is quite innovative, the city of Toronto will provide 7.5 per cent of the capital cost. If both parties agree to the proposal, the province will look to the municipality to undertake the immediate purchase of the land, and carry out the planning and the construction of the development in collaboration with its partner, Ontario Housing Corp.

The province is prepared to accept all the units developed as public housing, or depending upon the final plan lease a major proportion of them under OHC's integrated community housing programme.

I would underscore the importance of proceeding with this project as quickly as possible. In light of the mayor's undertaking to me, there would be no greater costs involved. Each delay is adding about $5,000 a week to the cost of whatever is done on the site, and this of course will be borne by the taxpayers.

The partnership suggestion was agreed to by the mayor and his staff, and he has called a special meeting of city council for 8 p.m. tonight to discuss it. Throughout the negotiations Mayor Crombie has been most co-operative and indicated his desire to facilitate quick approval of the agreement and land purchase, and to be flexible in respect to municipal approval during the planning and construction stage.

As soon as a letter of understanding has been completed by our respective officials and signed by both parties, I will take it to my cabinet colleagues for a decision; and to OHC board of directors, a special meeting of which will be held tomorrow, Tuesday April 10, to discuss the Sherbourne-Dundas proposal.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

ESTIMATES PROCEDURE

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question directed to the Chairman of the Management Board in response to the statement he made, which purports to establish a procedure designed, in his words, "to maximize the results obtained for every tax dollar." Would he not agree that the procedure he described was precisely the one used and designed to cut $50 million off the cost of Medicare, which was approved by the board he heads and never implemented? What is the difference between the procedure that was used in that case and the one which he announced today?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman Management Board of Cabinet): I'm not prepared to respond to that. I will allow the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) to reply in due course.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Wouldn't the Chairman of the Management Board agree that, given the failure of the Minister of Health to respond adequately to previous questions, it is his responsibility to explain this procedure to the House, which is not new at all since it was used in the case of the attempt to constrain the payments from the Medicare fund, which attempt has been shown to be a failure?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I don't think that is the case at all, Mr. Speaker, but I think that this more properly, at this point in time, falls within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Health. I'm sure that the leader of the Liberal Party will not be dissatisfied when he has the final reply.

Interjections by hon. members.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Premier. In order that any misapprehensions may be dispelled, can he now announce that the government does not intend to introduce regional government proposals, or a bill covering regional government, for the Hamilton-Wentworth area during this session?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, I can't make that announcement. Certainly when I was in an area fairly close to the home of the Leader of the Opposition last Thursday I did indicate, so there is no misunderstanding, that the government was not pressing with respect to the Brant county study.

There has been some discussions there, Mr. Speaker, as I understood it, with respect to the commission that is presently working, and I think presentations made to that commission by some of the municipalities asking for an extension of time. Mr. Speaker, I wasn't sure as to what the timing had been or what had been established, but I made it very clear that, from the government's standpoint, if it took longer to finalize the study in Brant county this would not affect whatever ultimate decisions we would be making in Hamilton-Wentworth.

So, Mr. Speaker, I can't give the hon. Leader of the Opposition that position, but I just want to restate what I did say in Brantford, that we are not pressing with respect to the Brant county study and that there would be ample time for that to be completed, as requested, I believe, by some of the municipalities.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Is the Premier not aware that the Treasurer (Mr. White), in a statement made last Friday following his meeting with Mayor Copps, was reported to have indicated that there might very well be a postponement of the Hamilton-Wentworth situation but that he was adamant that Burlington would still stick with the Halton regional government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I read a press report but I haven't had an opportunity to talk to the Treasurer about exactly what was said. If the Treasurer indicated that the government was flexible—which we always are—related to all of the proposals we presently have before the municipalities—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): As Streetsville.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —of course he would be reflecting government policy. I really can't assure—because this is what the Leader of the Opposition has asked me to do, Mr. Speaker—that there will not be a bill with respect to Hamilton-Wentworth, but if I could restate what I believe the Treasurer said, that is that the proposals are there, the submissions are returning, we are assessing them, and, of course, we will be as flexible as possible—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): And listen, of course.

Hon. Mr. Davis: At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we assume the responsibility, as we must as a government, to resolve some of the issues facing the general public in this province.

I have to remind the leaders of the opposition that really this is the responsibility of government and we can't postponed indefinitely those things that are difficult just because they are difficult.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A further supplementary on the same matter: Since it was reliably reported that the government had decided not to go ahead with the Cobourg-Port Hope inclusion with Oshawa-Whitby, can he confirm or deny that a decision along those lines has been part of this rethinking of the regional government position of the government following the by-election setbacks?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the process started before those two events took place—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier didn't make it public; if he had the Conservatives mightn't have lost so badly.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wonder just what impact any alteration in policy east of Metro might have had in Metro or in Huron; I think that is a very debatable point.

Mrs. Campbell: He might have come and stayed with us.

Mr. Singer: He is universally listened to.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I would say this, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no decision east or west of Metro. The ministry is in the process of assembling this information; there has been no consideration at cabinet, and I think it would be premature, and I say this very objectively, to suggest to the Leader of the Opposition what might occur at this point.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the Premier not aware that the Treasurer left the distinct impression with the delegation from Hamilton that they were not going to proceed? Those weren't his words, but the impression was clearly there—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He's such a flexible chap too.

Mr. Deans: —that they were not going to proceed. Surely a statement at this time from the Premier along that line would clear the matter up once and for all and allow the people to settle down to trying to find some other solution?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I find this a trait of human nature, and a very understandable trait, that people will read into what people say or what they read in the press, that which they want to from time to time; it's a very human reaction.

Mr. Deans: Oh, no, no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I cannot—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What do we read at the moment? Is the government flexible or inflexible?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for York South asked by way of an interjected supplementary whether we are flexible or inflexible, and the answer to that is we are always flexible.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Just like a reed in the wind.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are always flexible.

An hon. member: A correct answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: At the same time—

Mr. MacDonald: Except the bill is coming in—that's what I read into the Premier's comments.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: At the same time, we do the job that we have been elected to do.

However, to get back to the member for Wentworth and his question as it related to what impression the Treasurer may have left. Not being at the meeting, I can't really give the same sort of reaction. I'll be delighted to speak to the Treasurer about it. I would only say this—

Mr. Deans: I was there.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): This is what's killing the government politically. It is forever playing games.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member for Scarborough West, this government doesn't play games. We are trying to find—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are trying to find—

Mr. Lewis: The Premier knows they have reached a decision to suspend Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are trying to find some answers to some pretty difficult situations, and there has been no determination by the government exactly what will result east of Metro or west of Metro at this point.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier knows that is not so.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, it is so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition?

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR ENERGY POLICY

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, a further question of the Premier for clarification:

To whom are we expected to look for statements of energy policy in the House? Are we to assume that since the Premier now has an assistant to advise him on energy policy (Mr. McKeough), he is taking back this whole area from the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence). Or in fact are we supposed to wait until his special assistant for energy matters is elevated to a position where he can actually speak in the question period and answer questions from his side of the House?

Mr. Lewis: Actually, it is nice the way it is now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that one member opposite finds things pleasant as they are now.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition, as they relate to those matters that are traditionally in the energy field, the questions should be directed to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

As they relate to the present development of the policy of this province with respect to the energy situation vis-à-vis our sister province of Alberta, the discussions that have been going on with the federal government, and that aspect of energy, I would think, Mr. Speaker, that the questions would be appropriately directed to myself or, in my absence, to the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Singer: We can't do that, according to the rules.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I'm not sure about the interpretation of the rules—

Mr. Singer: Well, the Speaker has made himself quite clear on that point.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well then, I will be delighted to answer the members opposite if they have some questions dealing basically with that area that they wish to pose to me. I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that in order to help the House, I might find it worthwhile to consult with my very able parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier doesn't have to tell us his assistant is able.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I am delighted to hear that as well. But I would say that if I could divide it in those areas, those would be the appropriate routes for asking the questions.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary, with your permission: Is the Premier saying then that if the question pertains to Hydro, we should not ask the vice-chairman of Hydro who sits behind him, but the policy minister who comes from Ottawa; and that if it has to do with a relationship with the government of Canada, we might ask the Speaker if we could direct our question to his parliamentary assistant—

Mr. Singer: Which he won't let us do.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: —which is out of order? Is that the answer?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if you have indicated that the parliamentary assistant is not to answer questions—and I am not sure we shouldn't review this, with respect, Mr. Speaker—then I would suggest the questions should be directed to myself.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Leader of the Opposition have further questions?

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: All right, we will permit one further supplementary.

Mr. Reid: In view of the Premier's statement, can he indicate if his counterpart in Alberta was as flexible as the Premier wishes he himself was in reviewing the energy policy regarding the export of gas to the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows the answer to the question, but in case he doesn't I shall try to indicate to him what I think he already knows; that is, the Premier of Alberta has made it reasonably clear, I think—

Mr. MacDonald: Abundantly clear!

Mr. Reid: Abundantly.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, if it is so abundantly clear, why ask the question?

Mr. MacDonald: I did not ask the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the Premier of Alberta has made it reasonably clear that that province wants an increase in gas revenues, and I think that position has not altered over the past two or three weeks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Not on a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: I think there were no more questions from this side. Does the hon. member for Scarborough West want a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Well, it is in a related field, but I will ask it as a new question. I will ask it in the absence of the assistant in the energy field.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He is not absent.

Mr. Lewis: Well, he can't speak for the first time in his political career, which is extremely difficult and is reflected by the look of anguish on his face.

Mr. Singer: He can only interject.

DEVELOPMENT OF LIGNITE DEPOSITS

Mr. Lewis: I will put it to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Would the Provincial Secretary consider, as part of the discussion of the lignite fields in north-eastern Ontario, paying adequate compensation to the Manatta Coal Co. by way of their exploratory rights and developing that deposit as a Crown corporation?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that all of these things are capable of being considered. Different ways in which the government might or might not deal with Manalta have not come before us.

Mr. MacDonald: There is that flexibility again!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: There is no contract, I might point out to the hon. member, other than that related to the feasibility study. We have no continuing attachment to them in any legal way; therefore our options are all open.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, does it make sense to the minister involved, given the emphasis on resource development and energy resources now, that a private company based in another province should take out something in excess of $100 million profit over 30 years from a natural resource in northeastern Ontario, which part of the province can obviously use the benefits of such profit? Does it make sense to him that the government enter into that kind of contract?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: I can't establish, nor can the hon. member establish, the accuracy of those figures—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I can.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —which are entirely speculative at the moment.

Mr. Lewis: No, not at all.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that it's a question of costing it out and seeing what capacities are there. As I said in response to the earlier question, all of our options are open at this time and will remain so until the question of feasibility is assessed.

HOSPITAL APPEAL BOARD MEETINGS

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: How is it that the hospital appeal board meets only 2½ days a month? Is that a matter of policy, a matter of choice, or will the minister direct it to alter that procedure?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, the hospital appeal board was to meet whenever necessary. I'll check it and find out for the member. There certainly is no policy that it meet every two or 2½ days a month.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Actually I don't know whether this is a supplementary to the question from the leader of the NDP or not. Having to do with the hospital appeal board, is the minister considering an amendment to the statute that inaugurated that appeal board so that, in fact, it can hear appeals from doctors who have never gained a hospital admitting staff status?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would be glad to see that.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A further supplementary: Will it be that that amendment may very well be introduced in the near future, so that the status could be improved, or at least the doubt on the status of that appeal board can be removed?

Hon. Mr. Potter: Mr. Speaker, that was the intention of the appeal board in the first place. It's been brought to our attention that perhaps it didn't cover enough. If that's the case, we will bring in an amendment and have it done as soon as possible.

SCARBOROUGH GENERAL HOSPITAL FUND-RAISING APPEAL

Mr. Lewis: A question, again of the Minister of Health: Did the Scarborough General Hospital, I guess it was, appeal to the minister for financial support to build the additional chronic convalescent care unit, which it is now going to public subscription to build?

Hon. Mr. Potter: No, they didn't, Mr. Speaker. They asked for permission to proceed. They said they had the funds and were able to raise the necessary funds. They didn't ask for any financial support from the ministry at all. They wanted to go ahead on their own.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

McMICHAEL CANADIAN COLLECTION

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Premier, if I could just briefly: When the Premier announced on Friday his appointment of seven trustees to administer the McMichael Canadian Collection, how is it that he was able to appoint only one woman of the seven to administer that collection?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I realize the leader of the New Democratic Party is very interested in this general subject area, not just the McMichael. I would just state to him what is the growing direction as far as the government is concerned, and that is to seek ways and means of having more women on government boards and agencies. In fact, I mentioned this to certain members of the press on Friday.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, it does not reflect a lack of desire. I would hope that in future appointments we would progressively have more women on government boards and commissions. I would say this applies to the government service generally and at the senior levels. But it is one thing to say this and another thing—not for boards and commissions as such, but within the government service, because of experience and because of what has been a policy not just confined to government—to have women move into these positions.

Mr. Speaker, as far as I'm concerned personally I'm very much in favour of it. I think you will find that appointments progressively will show the direction that we're attempting to go.

Mr. MacDonald: We can take it for now.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary then, does the Premier see, in giving his assertive statement today, a certain inconsistency with his announcement on Friday, that it might have been deemed possible in the appointment of trustees in the McMichael Collection not to load it so disproportionately?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't see an inconsistency as much as I see a desire to have more women on such boards, including the McMichael Collection. As I say, Mr. Speaker, this is the direction we're going.

ONTARIO COUNCIL OF REGENTS

Mr. Lewis: I see. By way of a question then of the Minister of Education, along the same lines, and I will then have asked my last question for the day, is the minister prepared to alter the situation where there are 15 members of the Ontario Council of Regents governing the entire community college system, only one of whom is a woman; the Ontario Educational Communications Authority, 13 members, only one of whom is a woman; the board of governors of OISE, 34 members, only three of whom are women; the board of governors of Ryerson, 11 members, only one of whom is a woman. In the educational system, where surely it would not be too much to ask for parity, when will the minister alter his policy in the appointments to commissions and boards?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Of course, Mr. Speaker, it's always been my feeling, and I have practised it since I have come into this ministry, to assure that women are appointed where they are available and where they are qualified. Indeed, I would like to point out that at the first opportunity, when we had a vacancy on the Teachers' Superannuation Commission, I suggested and, in fact, made sure that a woman was appointed to fill that vacancy, Miss Sylvia McPhee.

I might also point out to my hon. friend that I have responsibility for only one of the groups of commissions that he pointed out. As far as the OISE board is concerned, certainly it is our policy to appoint women to that board, and indeed the hon. member has indicated there are three there already. I should point out to him, however, that we have—

Mr. Lewis: That's out of 34.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Wait a minute now. I should point out—

Mr. Lewis: What does the minister mean, "already"?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I should point out to him that we have responsibility over the appointment of very few members of that board; they are appointed by various groups and bodies. So therefore the member would probably find that the ones who are there are appointments; if they aren't, we'll certainly give very good consideration to this.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have further questions?

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS

Mr. Singer: I have a question of the Premier. Could the Premier advise us if, in all his consultations with the Premier of Alberta, the subject of the constitutionality of the two-price system for natural gas has ever been discussed? And has the Premier received advice from the law officers of the Crown of Ontario as to whether the proposed actions by the Premier of Alberta come within the constitution and particularly are not ultra vires of section 127, I think it is, of the British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to state that in my conversations with the Premier of Alberta we have not dwelt on the constitutional position. I would hope that it was fairly clear in the remarks that I made in Calgary last Tuesday evening that I was endeavouring to see if some solution could be found to the problem without resorting to the question of legal interpretation or constitutional provisions, and quite frankly, if possible, without having it resolved in front of the National Energy Board.

It is my hope—and I express it as a hope, Mr. Speaker, because I can't go any further than that—that we can find some way of resolving this without it getting down to a discussion in front of the NEB, although of course, Mr. Speaker, that option is perhaps one of those that might be open to us. But to be very frank about it, Mr. Speaker, to the member for Downsview, the Premier of Alberta's discussions and mine have not really related to what Ontario might be able to do by way of legal recourse if the problem isn't resolved, or partially resolved, in some other fashion.

I think it's also fair to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I gather—and I haven't seen these reports as yet—there are certain views with respect to the constitutional position. Of course, if it becomes necessary to move in that direction, we will be more than pleased to inform the hon. member for Downsview.

I would just like to add this, that it would be unfortunate, in my view, if we had to resort to a constitutional legal definition to solve this problem. But I am quite prepared to say to the member for Downsview that certain legal opinions related to that particular subject are in the process of being obtained, or have been obtained.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, wouldn't the Premier believe it would be in the best interests of the people of Ontario, who are going to suffer if there is this new price structure created, that the Ontario government at least be armed with foreknowledge of its proper constitutional position as it can be advised by its own law officers? Wouldn't that be preferable to the pseudo-declaration of war enunciated by the speechless parliamentary assistant from Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough).

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will not interpret the speech from the member for Chatham-Kent in Sarnia, which was a very well-documented presentation, I might observe, and which I didn't interpret—and I don't think the people in Alberta interpreted it so—as a declaration of war.

Mr. Singer: That's the way the paper reported it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can only give you—Mr. Speaker, through you—my own impression of the speech which I didn't sense as being a declaration of war.

Mr. Singer: We were waiting for the mobilization order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The reaction from the government of Alberta didn't appear to be toward a declaration of war. But the member for Downsview is quite right—we will be, if necessary, armed with whatever legal resources we may have at the appropriate time.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Did the member read the speech?

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for York South a supplementary?

Mr. MacDonald: Would it be accurate to interpret from the Prime Minister's comments that among those legal actions that could be taken would be court action for breach of existing contracts, action taken with the inspiration of the government of Ontario by TransCanada Pipe Lines or eastern Canadian utilities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what legal remedies TransCanada may or may not have. This is something on which I think that, once again, if we are faced with a situation where some form of legal definition will have to be found, it will be found.

I would point out also, in a further reply to the member for Downsview—and the member for York South is very interested in this—one of the areas which gives us some difficulty in really questioning the constitutionality of what Alberta is proposing is that at this moment in time we don't know what form the suggested rebate will take. I think the member for York South and perhaps the member for Downsview have some interest in this. Until we know just what form the rebate will take, it will affect the legal opinions we might get.

Mr. Singer: Even if they do it by way of subterfuge, surely the constitutional remedy would still lie?

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the final supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Can the Premier tell us the timetable involved here? Is he aware of when the new price system will take effect? Obviously it will take effect before there can be a provincial-federal conference on rationalization of energy needs in Canada. If so, when does he, as Premier, launch any legal proceedings? What timetable has he worked out with his assistant since I know he submitted something by April 1?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the timetable really is not completely in our hands. I think it is fair to state that the Premier of Alberta has made it clear that he would like some solution to—I don't want to be misunderstood on this; I was going to use the term "the short-term problem." Shall I say, he would like to see some resolution to the present stated position of the Province of Alberta; that is that they would like to see an increase in gas prices.

In spite of some of the reactions I have read with respect to the Premier of Alberta's reactions to the proposal I made in Calgary as to the desirability of a federal-provincial conference related to energy needs totally—which I think is a much broader subject than this—I think it is fair to state that the Premier of Alberta indicated his support of that. In the interim, he would still like to see this other matter brought to some form of conclusion.

I can only say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member that there are still discussions to be held. I will inform the House when we reach the point when either some determination is made or Ontario will have to seek whatever remedies it may have. As I say, Mr. Speaker, we have been dealing with it—and I will be very frank about it—on the basis of seeing if there isn't some solution, acknowledging that there is some justification for the Province of Alberta to increase its price somewhat.

I want to make it very clear, that our debate is partially on the timing, partially the extent of it and, of course, includes the concern we have not just for the householder who utilizes this source of energy but the sector of our industrial community which is dependent for a good portion of its production costs related to the use of this energy. Mr. Speaker, as soon as we have some further information as to timing or other developments, we shall inform the House as rapidly as we can.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Yorkview.

SALE OF LAND IN NOTTAWASAGA

Mr. F. Young: (Yorkview): A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Is European Garden Enterprises, which seems to be a part of Pellegrini Enterprises of 3019A Dufferin St. in North York, still selling lots in the township of Nottawasaga to unsuspecting buyers, lots which are not part of a registered plan and which cannot now and may never be granted building permits?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that there are no salesmen registered under the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act selling property in the part of North York described by my hon. friend. I am advised that any attempts to sell property there are being completed by employees of the owner. Under the present legislation, it is not necessary for a person to be registered under the Act to sell his own real estate either directly or through an employee.

Mr. Young: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. First of all a correction that Nottawasaga township is near Collingwood and Stayner, not North York, although the company mentioned is situated in North York.

Is the minister aware that, prior to the recent legislation, this land was checkerboarded and that while the company itself may not be selling lots, certainly—as I think he may have indicated—employees and people connected with the corporation are selling lots to unsuspecting buyers.

Hon. Mr. Clement: Yes, I was aware of it because during the last session, Mr. Speaker, my friend was kind enough to draw the matter to my attention. I am sorry—it was in Nottawasaga and the company is located in North York, but the situation is still the same. I am sure that this House is aware of the decision rendered by the Ontario Court of Appeal some weeks ago with reference to the checkerboarding technique which, unfortunately, was employed in different parts of this province over the past year or two.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Essex-Kent.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Would the minister consider declaring the Province of Ontario a major disaster area because of the recent flooding so that the federal government would join in any national formula for aid? In fact, just today we have word that the flooding is the worst that it ever has been.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is another storm in progress on the lakes and that there is further damage accruing to lakeshores and properties along the lakeshores. I can't answer this immediately. I hope that within a matter of days the Canadian Centre for Inland Waters will be able to come up with its first general estimate of damage, and against that estimate we will have to apply our judgment.

As I say, except for the amounts and the limitations in the federal formula, the answer of course is yes—any co-operative disaster programme that we can develop with the federal government we will. At the moment, without hard figures in front of us, I can't respond.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question, please.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth has a supplementary.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. Would the minister consider making available to the hardest-hit areas the people who are presently employed within the Ministry of Transportation and Communications on highways in order that sandbags, gravel, whatever is necessary, be put along those areas that are hardest hit today and are going to be hit again tomorrow, so they can get some protection—particularly, I might say, in the area of my own riding where the township has refused to act?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, one of the prime purposes in setting up a task force was to co-ordinate this kind of activity. Rather than deal directly with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, people are requested to deal through Mr. Walter Giles, of the Ministry of Natural Resources.

I have encouraged anyone who has called me or written to deal through him. To the extent of our capacities we are using whatever we have to help people affected in that way, limited only, of course, by the statement of policy which I made some 10 days ago, in relation to the spheres in which provincial participation will take place.

Mr. Reid: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville was up for a supplementary.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): I have no questions.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry; then the hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary of the provincial secretary: In view of the reports of the evacuations taking place at this moment in what appear to be unprecedented winds, would the minister get in touch with the militia in Windsor, at least with the officials in the Windsor area, to see whether they need the militia who were standing by last time with their high-wheeled vehicles and were not called?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I understand that when a situation as serious as the one that may be occurring this afternoon and tomorrow arises, it does bring into play the role of the local officer of the Emergency Measures Organization. What I will do after the question period is check with the Emergency Measures Organization and see if the level of activity provided under the law of Canada has been reached, or the level of concern or disaster has been reached, that would trigger his powers.

Mr. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think in order to clarify it, I'll explain that the original question was asked by the hon. member for Essex-Kent. I've allowed two supplementaries. I think there have been sufficient supplementaries. It is now the turn of the hon. member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question in four parts of the Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

There has been dissatisfaction expressed by certain members of the Liberal Party. I must point out to them, with respect, the hon. member for Essex-Kent asked the original question; it was their turn. Now we've allowed some supplementaries. There are certain members of the Liberal Party who would like to ask original questions and I'll come to them.

Mr. Reid: All to the NDPs.

Mrs. Campbell: All to the NDPs.

Mr. Speaker: It is now the turn in proper order of the member for High Park.

BRAMPTON COURT HOUSE

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Minister of Government Services, Mr. Speaker: 1. Can the minister explain why no tenders were called for the construction of the new court house in Brampton? 2. In view of the fact that $1.8 million is being paid for a 20-year leasehold on this building, a building worth somewhat less than $500,000, can the minister explain that discrepancy? 3. Why did the Rice Construction Co., which is building the building, make no charge for supplying headquarters for the Progressive Conservatives in the last election? 4. How much did the Rice Construction Co. donate to the Conservative Party in return for this contract?

Mr. J. P. MacBeth (York West): Put that on the order paper.

An hon. member: Order paper.

Mr. Reid: That's of public concern?

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I recall this is not a contract, it is a lease arrangement.

Mr. Shulman: Exactly. I know.

Hon. Mr. Snow: There were no tenders called for someone to construct a building; it is a building which I believe has been owned by the Rice Construction Co. for a number of years. The officials of my ministry, in reviewing accommodation that was available in the town of Brampton, felt that this building when converted as proposed by the owners would supply satisfactory accommodation for the courts and this was verified by the Attorney General (Mr. Bales).

Now to the third and fourth questions, I do not know the answers.

Mr. Shulman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that there were at least 12 other vacant buildings in which 12 other owners were prepared to supply equivalent space, why did the minister not ask for tenders?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I do not have that detail, Mr. Speaker, but although it is our policy now to advertise for tenders for the leasing of space if at all possible, that was not carried out at that time.

Mr. Shulman: At that time—last month?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Forest Hill is next.

COMMUTER TRAIN SERVICE

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications indicate what measure of success, if any, he had in his approach to the federal government last Friday with regard to the running of a commuter train from Richmond Hill to Union Station in order to avoid the terrible congestion on the Yonge St. subway?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, I had a very encouraging meeting with the federal Minister of Transport, but he advised me it would be some time before he could give me his answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

SUNDAY OPENING OF RETAIL STORES

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): A question of the Attorney General, Mr. Speaker. When does the minister intend to bring in legislation to the House regarding Sunday retail selling, as based upon the recommendations of the Ontario Law Reform Commission?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under consideration and a statement will be made when the policy is determined and finalized.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Could the Attorney General tell the House what action he is going to take for those retailers who are at present breaking the law by being open for business on Sunday? Does he intend to ignore those breaches of the present statute until the new policy is formulated?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, when a notice comes to me in reference to prosecution it is dealt with and in most instances it is signed and consent is granted for prosecution. There have been a very substantial number that have been consented to for Sunday prosecution in reference to stores being opened and also in reference to trucks being on the highway.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary: Does the Attorney General not feel that he has a responsibility where chains of large stores in certain communities appear to be staying open, not so much to tempt somebody to lay a charge against them, but simply to test the law to see if, in fact, they cannot spread the Sunday opening procedures uniformly?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, in most instances where the police have laid a charge and it has been proceeded with, a conviction has been obtained. There is a real question as to whether the fines are satisfactory—

Mr. MacDonald: What else is new?

Hon. Mr. Bales: —but the prosecutions have been proceeded with and convictions have been obtained.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

WINDSOR INQUIRY CENTRE

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet. In light of the fact that there are numerous requests by citizens for information from various governmental agencies in the city of Windsor— and a lot of these requests are from American citizens—will the minister set up a central inquiry agency in the city to expedite these requests and alleviate the pressure on other governmental agencies?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Will the hon. member tell me what type of requests he is referring to?

Mr. B. Newman: Every type of request the minister could possibly think of. They ask questions concerning the Ministry of Community and Social Services; of the local master of the Supreme Court. They ask every agency in the city every type of request that one could possibly think of; and the number of requests is so great that one of these agencies has asked for a central inquiry centre in the community.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question, I might say the government is carefully reviewing the matter of dealing with requests from Ontario citizens. They will come first, and we will deal with them first. After that we will concern ourselves with other requests.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary?

Mr. B. Newman: Am I correct in my assumption that the minister's department intends to introduce legislation, or intends to open such agencies in all the major cities in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, I didn't say that, Mr. Speaker. First, it will not be under the administration of my department; it will be under the administration of another department. Nevertheless, I simply stated we were reviewing the policy and, in due course when it is available, it will be announced to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENT OF INDIAN LANDS

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. Has the minister investigated the legality of municipalities that have Indian reserves within their boundaries, or on the edge of their boundaries, of assessing business that are wholly on Indian lands? If the minister hasn't assessed the legality of such action by municipalities, will he look into it to assure the native people that they do, indeed, control those lands and possibly have the power to assess? If it is legal for municipalities to assess Indian lands, will he look into the possibility that they be forced to provide services commensurate with their ability to assess?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that matter, and all of the associated matters which the hon. member has mentioned, are under active consideration at the present time and there will probably be a policy statement forthcoming shortly.

Mr. Stokes: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that some municipalities have been taxing in this way; and is it legal or isn't it legal for them to do so?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am aware that this has been going on and the question of the legality will be dealt with when the policy decision is announced.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

HOUSE CONSTRUCTION WARRANTY

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A question of the Minister of Revenue, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister insist on an adequate construction warranty on all housing built under the HOME programme so that buyers can be assured of full repair of faulty construction, including leaking basements?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, of course anyone who tenders for the building of homes on these lots is expected to carry out the requirements of the standards set out by the Ontario Housing Corp. and by the local building bylaws. If there is any evidence that this is not being done, they're taken to task for it. Indeed, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville raised the question along these lines, I think, a week or so ago. We pointed out that in one of those instances we were withholding an advance—I think it was about $345,000 or $350,000—until the corporation was satisfied that everything was in order.

Mr. Deacon: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has now expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that tomorrow this House will resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

NOISE RESEARCH BUREAU ACT

Mrs. Scrivener moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Noise Research Bureau.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mrs. M. Scrivener (St. David): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a bureau which will co-ordinate studies and research on noise measurement and control.

VICTIMS OF CRIME ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, this bill amends the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971, by specifically granting the board discretion to refuse to make a compensation award, where it is satisfied the applicant has refused reasonable co-operation with the law enforcement agency or has not reported the offence to that agency with reasonable promptness.

This is based on the policy, that in general before compensation is paid out of public funds to an individual in these circumstances, it rests upon that individual to satisfy his public responsibilities to co-operate with the law enforcement authorities.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize the public nature of the payment, the bill provides an amendment to insulate the payment, at least until it reaches the applicant, from attachment, garnishment or assignment. This provision is similar in principle to those in other jurisdictions and is designed to ensure the public funds paid out in compensation indeed benefit the intended recipient.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the bill brings this statute in to line with Acts such as the Workmen's Compensation Act, by providing that compensation awards in favour of infants or persons of unsound mind may be paid to and administered to by the Public Trustee or other responsible person. In this way, we are assured that those funds, as soon and as directly as possible, are paid over to those responsible, so that they may be applied to the benefit of the individual concerned.

ARBOUR DAY ACT

Mr. Wardle moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to proclaim Arbour Day.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. T. A. Wardle (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, the bill creates Arbour Day and sets out the objects of its observation. The objects are: The last Friday in April of each year shall be observed under the name of Arbour Day for the purpose of encouraging, (a) the beautification of Ontario by the use of trees, (b) the landscaping, painting and cleaning of industrial plants, public institutions and private homes, (c) the appreciation of the beauty and use of trees, (d) the stimulation of interest in knowledge of trees, and (e) the planting, preservation and conservation of trees.

CITY OF PETERBOROUGH ACT

Mr. Wiseman, in the absence of Mr. Turner, moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the City of Peterborough.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

HOGAN HOMES LTD. ACT

Mr. Handleman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting Hogan Homes Ltd.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned on Friday, I had occasion to call the attention of the House to the fact that a new native organization had been set up to deal with native problems north of the French River.

Another matter, Mr. Speaker, that is of wide concern and a general interest in northern Ontario resulted from the high water levels on the lower Great Lakes, which prompted the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson), who is the chairman of the land drainage committee, to make a statement—or to think out loud I think would be more accurate—that maybe one of the ways of relieving the high water levels on the lower Great Lakes was to build a huge reservoir some place in northern Ontario; and he chose some place in the vicinity of Lake Nipigon, which is in the heart of the riding of Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): It is the only way they will be able to defeat the hon. member.

Mr. Stokes: Now there was a good many people in northwestern Ontario, particularly in the riding of Thunder Bay, who reacted most vehemently to such a suggestion that this would be a reasonable alternative. I took the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to write a somewhat detailed letter to the Premier (Mr. Davis) as a result of this suggestion by the member for Lambton, and I sent a copy of it to the member. I haven't had the benefit of his reply. The Premier did reply stating that he would pass the letter along to those ministries that were responsible.

I think it would be useful, Mr. Speaker, just to put things in their proper perspective, if I quoted from the letter to indicate the devastation that has already taken place as a result of water diversions dating back over the past 30 years, as well as the ecological imbalance and resulting problems that have been created.

It is as a result of an exchange of letters that I have had with the Premier that this letter came about, Mr. Speaker. I would like to quote from my letter to the Premier:

You state that concern over the environmental and ecological impact due to the siltation and bank erosion is of recent vintage and that there is no evidence that the Ogoki diversion or the manipulation of water levels has had any adverse effect on Lake Nipigon.

During a recent meeting on strategic land-use planning in Sioux Lookout, considerable time was spent on planning for use of recreational land in the Lac Seul-Ear Falls area. It was brought to our attention that water levels vary as much as nine ft per year on Lac Seul, which makes it virtually impossible for effective planning to be carried out in a meaningful way on recreational land.

I am advised that Ontario Hydro uses Lake St. Joseph as a reservoir. This means that they can manipulate the water levels on Lac Seul by effecting a southwest flow of water from Lake St. Joseph, Lac Seul, the English River and the Winnipeg River, thus providing ample supplies of water at Ear Falls, Manitou Falls and Whitedog Falls generating stations.

There is no control of water levels by a local authority; control is vested in the Lake of the Woods Control Board, whose chairman resides in Ottawa, with representation from the United States through the International Joint Commission.

Because of critical fluctuations and manipulation of water levels, a freeze has been placed on hundreds of miles of shoreline and no land disposition is permitted. Areas such as Lac Seul have been declared deferred development zones because of the adverse effect of manipulation of water levels. When water levels are at their maximum on the Lac Seul-English River system, water is diverted eastward from the Lake St. Joseph watershed into the Albany River. A flying trip over Lac Seul, Lake St. Joseph and the Ogoki Reservoir is all the evidence one needs to be convinced that manipulation of water levels has a profound effect on ecology and the environment.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): One can see the stumps in the water.

Mr. Stokes: That's right—thousands of acres of nothing but utter desolation and devastation. My letter continues:

Thousands of acres of productive forest land were flooded without even harvesting the timber. Extreme fluctuations have removed the possibility of this shoreline ever being restored to its original aesthetic beauty. This land will never be used for cottage or commercial development as long as it is subject to the ravages of extreme high and low water levels.

In spite of a difference of opinion among marine biologists, there is sufficient evidence to conclude that manipulation of water levels does indeed have a deleterious effect on aquatic life. Fish spawn has been found high and dry by commercial fishermen and hundreds of acres of spawning beds have been covered by siltation from diversions of muddy rivers. Entire bays that were once clear now resemble a bowl of pea soup.

Tourist operators and sportsmen complain of poor catches of prime species such as pickerel, lake trout and speckled trout, and some have had difficulty in launching their boats during periods of low water.

Indian bands who depended on commercial fishing for a good portion of their income have had to look elsewhere for employment. Those who have been unsuccessful have had to rely on welfare benefits to sustain their families. Indian guiding is almost a lost art since the decline of the sport fishery in many northern lakes.

MPP Lorne Henderson, chairman of the select committee on drainage, has suggested a 14,000 square mile reservoir in the Lake Nipigon area of northwestern Ontario to control high water levels in the lower Great Lakes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That was to drain Lake Superior, was it?

Mr. Stokes: Yes! My letter continues:

He has intimated that this is only one of the recommendations or alternatives that will be presented to the Legislature for consideration.

Believe me, Mr. Premier, if you want to precipitate mass insurrection among residents of this area, just mention reservoir. In fact, if Mr. Henderson and his committee ever journey to this area to have a look I fear for their safety. A solution to the cyclical water problems of the lower Great Lakes will not be found in inundating thousands of square miles of resource-rich and scenically beautiful northwestern Ontario.

Many years ago Ontario Hydro was given the right to use the water forces of northern Ontario to generate electric energy. Hundreds of thousands of Ontario residents have enjoyed the benefits of this activity at rates that compare favourably with any in the world. In addition to these benefits to the people of Ontario, Hydro has paid hundreds of millions of dollars into the provincial Treasury by way of water rentals.

The following is a summary of water rentals paid to the Province of Ontario by Ontario Hydro in 1971 for various generating stations: Ear Falls, $40,000; Manitou Falls, $143,000; Whitedog Falls, $115,000; Caribou Falls, $172,000; Silver Falls, $85,000; Lac Seul storage, $20,000; Cameron Falls, $180,000; Alexander station, $149,000; Pine Portage, $292,000; and Aguasabon, $94,000.

This amounts to a total of $1.3 million in annual water rentals for northwestern Ontario. The water rentals on the Lake Nipigon watershed alone amount to $622,000 annually. The value of energy generated on the Nipigon River in 1971 alone amounted to $17 million. Can you imagine the reaction of the provincial Treasury if this source of revenue was cut off by Mr. Henderson's reservoir?

The total value of energy generated by hydro power in northwestern Ontario is in the $40 million range. The cost of building a thermal plant to replace this lost energy could be as high as $75 million. Can you imagine Ontario Hydro's reaction to the loss of $17 million in energy revenue? Can you imagine the thousands of miles of untapped timber and mineral wealth that would be unavailable for harvesting? A good portion of the water rental revenue is earmarked to sustain the Niagara Parks Commission, while not one penny is directed back to the northern Ontario from whence it came to rehabilitate areas that have felt the adverse effect of water diversions.

Rather than look for ways to wreak further havoc on the northwestern Ontario environment and compounding our problems of slow growth and out-migration of our job-seeking youth, the province should be making substantial amounts of these funds available for the construction of fish hatcheries in the Lake Nipigon area to replenish the dwindling population of prime species as a result of past water diversions.

The removal of tens of thousands of cords of sunken pulp wood and bark from the lake bottom and mouths of rivers would help to rehabilitate spawning beds and restore the world-famous Lake Nipigon fishery to its once viable condition.

The province should also direct some of these funds to be spent on the extension of transmission lines to communities such as Armstrong, the Upsala area and along Highway 11 where people are still seeking a reliable source of electric energy at reasonable rates.

Some of these funds should be directed in the form of assistance to tourist operators and Indian bands to upgrade facilities, which will enable them to provide services to an ever-increasing flow of tourists into the Lake Nipigon area. Breakwaters should be constructed at Gull Bay and Macdiamiid to protect against bank erosion and damage to boats and dock facilities.

There is much that can be done to enhance and ensure the future growth of northwestern Ontario. It will not be accomplished by constructing huge reservoirs, or by compounding the problem in one area to satisfy the short-term needs of another.

Remember, Mr. Premier, the entire economy of the north depends on our ability to manage and to husband our resources wisely and well. Those same resources contribute well in excess of $2 billion annually in new wealth for the benefit of all residents in this province of opportunity.

We have been entrusted with the responsibility of stewardship over one of the greatest treasure houses ever bestowed by benevolent providence. Let us use, but not abuse. Let us manage our resources in such a way that our children, or our children's children will thank us for a job well done.

So I think that, basically, Mr. Speaker, is the true reflection of the sentiments of the people of northwestern Ontario to any idea that we should be impounding water in the north to look after the short-range problems of people down in the south.

I am still awaiting a reply from the Premier and the various ministers responsible for this. I thought it would be useful to put that on the record just to give you some idea how strongly we feel about building huge reservoirs in the north and inundating literally thousands of sq miles of productive forest land and scenically beautiful areas that people down in the south will want to journey to from time to time, just to get away from the asphalt jungle.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex-South): They want to get away from the water up there!

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): They are sending their water down to us.

Mr. Stokes: Well, I can remember not too long ago when there were low lake levels down here. The people in the south were crying for water, and we were quite happy to give it to you.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): They are never happy down here.

Mr. Stokes: They can't have it both ways.

Mr. Ruston: Not like the people in the north can.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Like the US Army Corps of Engineers! Remember that?

Mr. Stokes: Yes. The US Army Corps of Engineers was in here taking a look and making an assessment of our water quantities and water qualities. It was a good many months before this government even knew they were up there.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I guess they decided they didn't want it.

Mr. Foulds: It shows how much in touch they are.

Mr. Stokes: As a matter of fact, until I produced a series of letters from the US Army Corps of Engineers addressed to a constituent of mine, the ministry over there wouldn't even believe they were there. I had equal difficulty convincing their counterparts down in Ottawa that we in fact, did have residents of northwestern Ontario who were on the payroll of the US Army Corps of Engineers.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They were chasing butterflies or something.

Mr. Stokes: They weren't chasing butterflies. They were looking quite avariciously at our water; and I am not convinced yet that they aren't doing just that.

Mr. Foulds: It is that frivolous attitude on the government's part that is going to bring it down.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Bring down what? The high lake levels? I hope the member is right.

Mr. Stokes: When you start talking about continental energy policies, and this has been a popular topic of discussion across the border for a good many years, don't think for one minute they're turning their backs on the huge supplies of fresh and clean water that we do have in northern Ontario. We hope this government will take advantage of every opportunity to tell the Americans that our water just isn't for sale.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get into another area, as a result of the lead editorial in The Northern Miner on April 5, 1973. I want to quote from it to show just how ludicrous some of the editorial comment is today, particularly from a paper like this. I don't know whether they consider themselves to be a mouthpiece for the present government, or whether they consider themselves to be a mouthpiece for the mining industry.

Mr. Foulds: Or the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier).

Mr. Stokes: I just want to show you how ridiculous they can be. To quote from the editorial,

CONSERVATION AS APPLIED TO ONTARIO IRON

We suppose the announcement that Caland Ore Co., a subsidiary of Inland Steel of Chicago [in my friend's riding of Rainy River] is going to terminate its mining operations at Steep Rock Lake in the next few years, will be greeted with jubilation by the NDP benches in the Ontario Legislature—

Mr. Foulds: What nonsense!

Mr. Stokes: To continue:

—since that party professes to be greatly disturbed by the sale of our resources to foreign corporations. Caland, which leased the C zone of Steep Rock Iron Mines and which is currently Inland's largest source of ore, says that the reserves which can be extracted economically will be exhausted by 1978. Steep Rock expects to have the mine handed back to it by 1976, and perhaps will be able to extract some additional ore from it. But no new jobs will be created since this will only replace Steep Rock's own present production and 200 or 300 Caland workers will have to look elsewhere for their livelihood.

It is significant that Inland Steel has decided to rely on a domestic ore source rather than to participate in other Ontario iron developments. This is the second US steel company that has washed itself of Ontario iron ore since the Ontario government prohibited the export of ore except by special approval of the minister.

Mr. Foulds: They grant them all anyway.

Mr. Stokes: Now here is a paper that is suggesting members of this Legislature would be pleased to hear that jobs were being lost to any workers in the Province of Ontario; they suggest that we, as a party, would be happy to hear that Inland Steel had decided to close down.

To be fair, this government had nothing at all to do with the decision made by Inland Steel to cease operating in the Steep Rock Lake area. The ore body will cease to be viable and economically feasible sometime in 1976, and the company will be relinquishing its option to Steep Rock. But for a paper like this to suggest that any group in this Legislature would be happy to hear that jobs were being lost is just nothing short of irresponsibility. I think that it shouldn't go unrecorded that The Northern Miner is using this kind of tactic to smear members of this Legislature.

If there is any responsibility for the dilemma in which the mining fraternity finds itself at the present time, the present government must accept that responsibility because it has, as the article says, "since the Ontario government prohibited the export of ore except by special approval of the minister."

Now, we happen to have agreed with that. In fact, we would have hoped that the government would have gone a little bit farther; but to suggest that either the Ontario government or anybody in this Legislature was responsible for the decision made by Inland Steel to cease operations at the Steep Rock site is nothing short of being absolutely ludicrous. I think that this paper and its editorial should be shown for what it really is.

I think that any member of this House is continually looking for ways and means to provide additional job opportunities for the labour force in every section of this province. For a supposedly reputable paper to be suggesting that anyone in this Legislature would try to eliminate jobs at the expense of the work force of this province, I think should be shown up for what it really is.

Mr. Speaker, another area I wanted to discuss is the announcement in the Throne Speech that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications was going to involve itself with providing more airstrips for remote communities in the north accessible only by air. We did get an indication that three new airstrips would be developed: one at Fort Hope, one at Round Lake and one at Pikangikum.

For a government that spends between $5 billion and $6 billion dollars a year and has allocated somewhat less than $1 million a year—and as low as $500,000 a year—for an airstrip development programme in remote areas, it seems to me to fall much short of the mark.

One of the air carriers in the province sent me a copy of the Canadian Aircraft Operator, which is the publication for all aircraft carriers. There is an article dated Winnipeg and it outlines what the Province of Manitoba has done concerning airstrip development over the past five years. It says:

By the end of last year, expenditures by the Manitoba government had reached $5 million on a major air transportation development plan involving regional airports, airstrips and landing strips in the north.

Reporting recently on the progress of the provincial government's policy to provide landing facilities, usable the year around in all isolated northern communities of 100 people or more, [They don't have any road access.] Premier Edward Schreyer made these points: Twenty six airports and landing strips have been built or are currently being completed under the programme.

Freezeups and breakups no longer shut off isolated communities that were served by float and ski-equipped planes and tractor trains.

The programme will greatly enhance the recently announced ambulance programme for the north by enabling fast wheel-equipped aircraft to be used.

Considerable local labour and local equipment has been used and has given a number of local residents on-the-job training in rock drilling and blasting at airstrip sites, enabling them to move on to permanent jobs in mines nearby.

Indian bands and councils may operate and maintain the buildings and runways giving added local employment.

Air transportation costs in many instances will be reduced by making it feasible for airlines to establish several scheduled services.

There is an indication, Mr. Speaker, that a province which is much less affluent than ours has, in a meaningful way, come to grips with the problems of isolation in many northern communities.

While we have made a start in establishing airstrips at Sandy Lake, Big Trout Lake and at Fort Albany, and with the announcement that we are getting three more at Pikangikum, Round Lake and Fort Hope, I would urge the Ministry of Transportation and Communications to step up this programme so that many native communities will be brought into the mainstream of things, by providing airstrips that will enable cargo planes as big as a DC-3 to get in and bring in provisions on a regular basis, thus lowering the cost of essential supplies and services to them so that they indeed will share in the good things that the members and I take for granted down here. I do hope the Ministry of Transportation and Communications will look elsewhere to see what is being accomplished and try to accelerate its programme to make it more meaningful and more readily available to people in the north.

Mr. Paterson: How about the remote areas in the south—the islands?

Mr. Stokes: I don't know of any remote area of southern Ontario which aren't accessible either by road or—

Mr. Paterson: Sure they are.

Mr. Stokes: I don't know. The member will have to speak to that. I don't know about the physical characteristic of Pelee Island.

Mr. Foulds: The member for Thunder Bay looks after his end of the province. Let the member for Essex South look after his.

Mr. Stokes: I am sure he can do that quite adequately.

Mr. Paterson: Right!

Mr. Stokes: Another area I want to get into very briefly, Mr. Speaker, is the recent ceilings that have been imposed by the Ministry of Education and how those ceiling impositions have affected many northern boards.

We discussed last year in the Legislature how, due to the weighting factors, a good many boards had to curtail their expenses in essential services such as special education and tutoring for children; such as library technicians; and a good many vital areas where they found it necessary to curtail expenses to get under the ceilings imposed by the Ministry of Education.

I would like to draw to the attention of the House and in particular to the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) the fact that, as a result of the ceilings and because of the unrealistic weighting factors, we are having to close schools in northern Ontario at the present time. It means we will have to bus children who are going to kindergarten and grades 1 and 2. One hearkens back to some time in March, 1968, when the former Premier, the hon. John Robarts, made a statement in southwestern Ontario that the government was going to consolidate school boards across the Province of Ontario and that the reorganization and consolidation would mean there was going to be greater equality of educational opportunity.

A week ago on Monday, Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the hon. member for Port Arthur and I attended a meeting at the little hamlet of Hurkett which is about 45 miles east of the city of Thunder Bay. We were invited to a meeting at which the Nipigon-Red Rock board of education was trying to answer questions from about 100 people in the audience. They were congregated there to find out why it was necessary to close a school in northern Ontario, when indeed the former Premier had indicated there was going to be an improvement in educational opportunity rather than a curtailment or a greater dislocation.

We have found out, Mr. Speaker, that because of the unrealistic ceilings imposed by the present Ministry of Education we are having to close down schools. We are forced to bus children at tender ages in greater numbers for even greater distances than was ever conceived before the consolidation of school areas.

My colleague, the member for Port Arthur, did seek to find the solution in discussing this matter with the audience and the representatives of the local board. We found that the board has been placed in such an unreasonable position, because of the unrealistic ceilings, that they find it necessary to curtail services in essential areas—even, as I say, to the extent of closing a school.

Mr. Foulds: They don't want to close it; the parents don't want to close it.

Mr. Stokes: That's quite right. The board can sympathize with the parents and say: "We wish there was an alternative, and if you know of any alternative please don't hesitate to tell us about it." I assured them, Mr. Speaker, that I thought the only alternative was to raise it in the Ontario Legislature.

Unfortunately, the Minister of Education isn't here, but I hope that he does hear my words; and I hope that before the Nipigon-Red Rock board finds it necessary to get under the ceilings by the closing of schools, that the Minister of Education and his ministry will intervene and sit down in a realistic way with the local board and say: "All right, maybe the weighting factors aren't sufficient to allow you to operate in an effective and efficient manner"; and readjust those ceilings and the weighting factors to allow them to keep operating this school and to satisfy all concerned.

I am going to discuss it personally with the minister whenever he is available to speak to me, Mr. Speaker, but I do hope by bringing it up in this debate, that perhaps he will be more sympathetic to it, and hopefully we will be able to resolve it in a way that will be acceptable to all concerned.

Mr. Foulds: He has been too busy in Florida.

Mr. Stokes: Another area I would like to get into, Mr. Speaker, is services to unorganized communities.

As a result of representations that have been made to me over the past year and a half, I have raised with the Premier and various ministers of government how vitally important it is for all ministries of this government that have responsibilities in special areas to be aware of and to respond to the needs of people in unorganized communities for essential services.

It's well known that we have conditional and unconditional grants to assist organized municipalities in education, in providing water and sewage, in assisting them with their police force; in all of the services that people have come to expect today we have in large measure set up programmes that deal specifically with those needs for people living in organized communities.

Unfortunately, we have never devised any programme that will allow people in unorganized communities—and we have literally hundreds across the north—to avail themselves of any governmental assistance.

This is felt particularly in the north, where on many occasions they do pay taxes at a higher rate than you and me, particularly in the sales tax field, where the sales tax is based on the retail price of a given commodity.

Mr. Foulds: Right!

Mr. Stokes: If an article is selling for 30 cents down here in Toronto, it's quite conceivable that it would be selling for twice that up in Armstrong. So, at a rate of five per cent for sales tax, one can readily understand they are actually paying twice and getting nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I'm dealing specifically with the community of Armstrong, where there is a danger of an epidemic if some ministry of this government doesn't involve itself in coming to grips with the water problem.

Most of the wells in that community are contaminated—you might have heard me ask a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) a few days ago. The threat is still there and yet I received a letter from the Premier today that he was going to try and effect some kind of co-ordination in order to see if something can't be done to assist these unorganized communities.

Another area where they need assistance in these communities is in providing fire protection. In organized municipalities where you have a taxing structure they can budget for fire prevention, and of course there is a vehicle whereby you can assess the people on a residential basis for the essential services. Unfortunately, in unorganized communities you have no taxing authority and you have no overall vehicle for provision of these services.

We have brought the matter up with the fire marshal—I see the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) in the House and I've got a letter in the works for him now about how important it is that somebody, whether it be the Solicitor General himself or his fire marshal's office, look into the possibility of entering into some kind of an arrangement where the government could pick up a portion of the cost of providing fire protection and fire prevention facilities to people living in unorganized communities.

Mr. Foulds: Good point!

Mr. Stokes: There is a particular need in Armstrong, Mr. Speaker, where we have a community of some 700 people and it's impossible for them, because they are unorganized, to tax people on the basis of ability to pay, to provide a core of seed money to even get started.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, Armstrong's fire fighting facility today is an old truck. They have an old herbicide sprayer mounted on the back of the truck and they've got an old handmade trailer behind it which they use to haul their hoses and axes and things like that. This is their fire protection at the present time.

I'm sure the minister isn't aware of just what the need is in these communities. But if he pays heed to the letter which should be on his desk sometime this afternoon I hope he will be sympathetic to it, discuss it with his officials, and hopefully we can come up with some kind of an answer to the problem. It's a particular problem in Armstrong, but it's a problem that also applies to most northern communities which are unorganized and find it impossible, without some form of outside assistance, to provide these essential services.

I see I have had the ear of the Solicitor General and hopefully he will be sympathetic and co-operative in trying to provide for that need.

Mr. Foulds: He's a good fellow.

Mr. Stokes: Another problem, Mr. Speaker, is the problem of subdivision control where a good many people, in order to find it possible to purchase accommodation, have found it necessary to resort to mobile homes. Many communities don't want to get into mobile home parks because of all of the constraints that have been put on by various ministries of this government—whether it be the Ministry of the Environment or the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs—in the kind of official plan that organized communities must develop before they can get the co-operation of those ministries.

And of course the bureaucracy one has to wade through in order to establish a mobile home park just boggles the imagination. We have a good many entrepreneurs who are willing to set up mobile home parks in unorganized territory, and the bureaucracy that they had to wade through just boggles the mind.

It's just insurmountable for any one person to try and wade through it. I have had people in two specific areas who have done everything possible to try to persuade the Ontario government that a mobile home park is a viable alternative to the expensive housing that most people are confronted with in organized communities. This seems to be a very viable alternative, and yet we don't seem to be able to convince the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs that it is indeed an alternative and one that should be encouraged and to which assistance should be provided in order to make it possible for this kind of accommodation.

So that I hope, Mr. Speaker, that in light of the few remarks I have made on those problems facing people—along with the establishment of health clinics in areas that either have no services at all or are underserved—that possibly some action can be taken.

One final topic I would like to discuss has to do with pricing. Last year I had the opportunity to introduce a private member's bill that called for a tribunal to review the high cost of living in northern Ontario, not only of consumer goods but the high cost of housing, the high cost of education and the high cost of transportation.

That private member's bill got complete endorsement from everybody on all sides of the House. The Premier said he was aware of it, he would take it under advisement and perhaps something meaningful would develop. Since that time I got signatures from about 3,000 people who endorsed the concept of such a review procedure in order to come to grips with the high cost of living and the stabilization of the price of essential services in the north.

Nothing has happened. There has been no indication since, either by way of the Throne Speech or any other pronouncements by this government, that it was even serious about coming to grips with it. They did embark on a transportation study in Kenora and the Rainy River area, where they have supposedly established some priorities, but nothing has happened with regard to making representations to Ottawa for amendments to the freight rate schedules or anything that would give a little bit of relief for the excessively high cost of living and transportation costs in the north.

Mr. Foulds: They didn't even send anyone to the prairie conference on transportation costs.

Mr. Stokes: That's right.

Mr. Foulds: They have the same problem.

Mr. Stokes: As a result of the hearings and the activities of a committee that was set up over in Ottawa to deal with the high cost of food, I thought it would be useful, Mr. Speaker, just to quote from some information that was provided to me by one of our retail outlets in northern Ontario.

Quite often the farmer is called the culprit in this whole piece; quite often the person from whom you are purchasing, the retailer, is made the culprit. In the view of many, many people who represent rural Ontario the farmer is not the culprit; and I'm inclined to agree with them. But when I talk to small businessmen, particularly in my riding, and when they give me the information as they get it right on their invoices, I'm going to agree with them too.

So if there is any responsibility, it's somewhere in between the farmer and the retailer, and not necessarily either one of them.

Mr. Foulds: You'd better believe it.

Mr. Stokes: These are actual invoices that were sent from Burns meats to one of the retailers in our riding. I want to quote the price of pork loins.

On Oct. 31, 1972, pork loins were selling wholesale—that is, the price to the retailer—at 78.5 cents a pound. That was on Oct. 31, 1972.

Mr. Paterson: Was that delivered?

Mr. Stokes: No, that's not delivered. There are freight charges on top of that. On Dec. 27, 1972, pork loins were 83 cents a pound; on Jan. 2, 1973, pork loins were 87 cents a pound; on Jan. 8, 1973, they had gone up to 92 cents a pound; on Jan. 31 they were 99 cents a pound; and on Feb. 26 they had jumped to $1.06 a pound. That's a jump from 78 cents on Oct. 31 to $1.06 on Feb. 26.

Mr. Speaker, the retailer is being scolded and admonished every time a housewife comes in to buy meat and finds that he has tacked on another three or four cents a pound. I just wanted to put those figures on the record to indicate that those are the prices that are being charged to him; so if anybody thinks the average small retailer across the province is gouging the customer, I would just like to put in a word for the retailer, come to his defence and say that if there is a culprit in the whole piece, let's look somewhere between the farmer and the retailer. Let's get down to the nitty-gritty and place the responsibility exactly and squarely where it should be.

I realize we are pressed for time, since this Throne Speech debate has to be wound up by tomorrow evening, and lest I cut anybody out of the Throne Speech debate—

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Who's getting that?

Mr. Foulds: Don't let that inconvenience you!

Mr. Stokes: —by unduly stretching the time, I am going to refrain from expanding on anything I have already said and I am not going to introduce any new topics; I'll take advantage of another opportunity to do so, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It is certainly nice to stand up and deliver a speech to a packed House. I think we should let the record show that there is actually one cabinet minister in the House but very few others of that party.

Mr. Speaker, I want to dwell on that very fact for a moment, because I feel personally that in the last two or three weeks the House has degenerated into what I can only describe as a zoo. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this is the result of two matters. One—I say this most respectfully sir, and I trust you will pass it on to the Speaker, if he is not listening—is that I feel you are not handling the House in the proper manner. I know it's the custom to stand in one's place and tell the Speaker what a great chap he is, and so on. But personally I have become very frustrated since this session began in trying to catch the Speaker's eye, in trying to follow the Speaker's ruling and in trying to figure out how the Speaker is trying to run this House, particularly during the question period.

You have been inconsistent, sir. It's hard to follow your rulings—particularly, if I may say so, in regard to supplementary questions. We had a matter here which was of urgent public importance, to my mind, sir, in regard to the flooding and the strong winds on the Great Lakes, which are affecting many ridings of members of this House. For some reason, known only to yourself—and your rulings are not debatable—you chose to cut off the supplementaries on what I consider the most important matter we had before us this afternoon.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Quit crying.

Mr. Reid: However, sir, I stood in my place—and, believe me, I stood. I felt like a kangaroo for one week solidly trying to catch your eye; you saw it, but you ignored me. You have done that to other members; and I think it is grossly unfair.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): It's easier with the hon. member, though!

Mr. Reid: Obviously the House has degenerated because of your particular rulings; and I would suggest, sir, that you call a meeting of the three party whips and yourself to see if, between you, you can arrive at some kind of rational approach to the question period and to the matter of supplementary questions.

The other reason, sir, why I think the House has degenerated is because of the attitude of the government and the Premier (Mr. Davis) in particular. We have tried since we returned here to get answers out of the government on various questions and we have had relatively little success; again a result of two things:

(1) Very seldom do the cabinet ministers or the Premier bother showing up in the House at all. I would draw to your attention, sir, that last Friday there were nine ministers in the House—nine. Under the gallery on the government side, sprawling and spilling—and spilling is a good word to use—were the executive assistants and other assorted flunkies of the government. Sixteen of them on Friday—nine cabinet ministers; 16 civil servants. There was more of the province's money sitting under the press gallery than there was on the government benches.

If we are charitable and look at them as $15,000 apiece—and you could break that down into dollars per hour I am sure—let us say charitably that is $25 an hour—there was something like $240,000 of the taxpayers' money sitting under the gallery. That is roughly $400 an hour of the taxpayers' money to my mind being wasted while their ministers are God knows where; somewhere one would think, but where one doesn't know.

Today, sir, we had another example. In the House today there were 12 ministers; no more than 12 ministers at one time. Today, Monday, all the flunkies were back from their long weekend obviously; there were 28 under the press gallery. Again, if you figure that out on a per hour basis there seems to me to be an inordinate amount of the public's money going to waste.

But surely there is no reason why the cabinet ministers cannot find time to come in here for an hour for the question period, which should be—and if it was run properly—the most important hour perhaps in the day's business; at least when the only other business we are doing is Throne speeches.

To my mind there is no reason why only nine ministers could show up on Friday and only 12 showed up today. Surely their first responsibility is to this Legislature? But they all have that attitude toward the House—the Premier has it himself—and it has led to the complete degeneration and the downgrading of this Legislature.

Now I want to say a few words about that, Mr. Speaker; particularly in regard to the question period. I have asked a number of questions and got no answers at all. When I say no answers, I don't mean just the usual oral perambulations of the Premier and some of his ministers. There have been no answers to questions that have been asked; answers the people of Ontario are entitled to have.

I don't want to dwell unduly, Mr. Speaker, on the questions arising from the Provincial Auditor's report, but let's just discuss one topic and then move on to something else. That particular topic has to do with cabinet ministers, their families and others using government aircraft of the Province of Ontario in and outside of the Province of Ontario.

The member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), myself and others have tried to elicit information from the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence), from the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier), and from the Premier himself—and we have got no answers either (a) as to the policy of the government in regard to the use of these aircraft; and (b) as to why these aircraft were used and who was using them and for what purpose.

These are public funds we are spending and the public is entitled to these answers. We have asked for the log books of the various aircraft of the Ministry of Natural Resources. The Minister of Natural Resources has replied that they have some 40 some aircraft and they can't table all those logbooks.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no reason why the log books of the aircraft that are based at Centre Island in Toronto cannot be tabled in this Legislature. That would only involve two or three or four aircraft at the most, and would not be a great burden on the government. I'm sure there are enough executive assistants running around here that they could go down and get them themselves.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): They can make copies and table them.

Mr. Reid: Surely we and the public are entitled to that kind of information? From the denial of that information to us in this Legislature, one can only conclude that the government has something to hide—that the cabinet ministers have been misusing their privilege to use those government aircraft—that they have been taking their friends and relatives and in-laws on trips completely unrelated to any kind of government business.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, there's no other reason why the minister would refuse to provide that information to the Legislature. How the government and the Premier expect us to do our job when we're not given the information that's required, is beyond me. But this is part of the Premier's approach to the Legislature, to downgrade it and to ignore it if possible.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say something about the Provincial Auditor's report. I was going to dwell at length on and quote at length from the auditor's report, and I think maybe I should, because it's obvious from my questions to the Minister of Natural Resources, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Snow), that they haven't even read the report.

Mr. Speaker, we've spent an inordinate amount of time, in view of its importance, on the book called The Happy Hooker, which supposedly the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) considers obscene. I would say that this Provincial Auditor's report, Mr. Speaker, is obscene. If one reads it carefully, as we have on this side—but apparently the government side hasn't seen fit to do so—it reeks of corruption, of misfeasance, of malfeasance in the government service, to say nothing of incompetence.

Mr. Speaker, because I'm sure you yourself have read it I don't want to go into all the details because I trust that most of them will be coming up during the estimates or during the public accounts committee. But one can only dwell on the fact that, for instance, we've lost $55 million through incompetency in the Ministry of Health.

Mr. F. S. Miller (Muskoka): Come here now.

Mr. Reid: One can only wonder about that statement which says that overtime bonuses have been paid to employees of the Ministry of Education without any checking or approval or anything but their word taken, without any kind of timesheet being kept.

What kind of an approach is it to a public trust of these public funds for these kind of things to go on? The auditor's report itself speaks of misfeasance in the use of public money.

What happened to the $45,000 that went uncollected from the sale of fishing and hunting licences? Why was a cheque for $1 million approved by Ontario Hydro for a construction project that hadn't been completed? Why were goods and services signed for as received when they weren't received for months after the receipt was signed? Either that's incompetence or somebody's being paid off for something.

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe): Shame. Shame.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Shame. Shame.

Mr. Reid: Well, there's somebody over there—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Are there any answers? Why don't the members opposite give them?

Mr. Reid: The Tory bullfrog chorus is still alive and well.

Mr. Miller: The member doesn't believe that? We have a lot of faith.

Mr. Reid: Well, I do believe that. The auditor's report probably indicates the corruption of the government, Mr. Speaker, more than anything else.

Now, for those of my hon. friends across the way who don't understand what the word corruption means, perhaps I should read the definition into the record.

Corruption: Impairment of integrity, virtue or moral principle . . . decay or decomposition . . . inducement to wrong by bribery or other unlawful or improper means . . . a departure from what is pure or correct—

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the auditor's report indicates these things on a broad scale, and we will continue to ask questions of the ministers, although we continue to get no answers from them, in these regards.

You know, Mr. Speaker, last week I attended a meeting in one of the rooms adjacent to the cabinet concerning liquor agency stores in northern Ontario. As usual I was the first one there. I was sitting in the office outside the Premier's office and I happened to look down and there was a piece of paper on the floor. I picked it up and it said, "Premier Davis, confidential memorandum to himself." The subtitle was "rating of the cabinet—0-10." I gathered from that that the Premier in his wisdom had decided he would rate his own cabinet ministers; he started from 0, being an absolute loss, to 10, being the highest rating, the best cabinet minister. One couldn't get any higher than 10.

Well, seeing as how it seems to be the thing to do to read confidential documents—we've all learned that from the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman)—I thought it wouldn't hurt at least to have a glance at it before I returned it to the Premier.

I'd like to inform the House how the ratings really went of the various cabinet ministers. I'm sorry that the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) is the only one present for two reasons, because we'll start with him and work our way up. As I told you, Mr. Speaker, the ratings ran from 0 to 10, 10 being the best. The Solicitor General had a minus-10 rating.

Mr. Cassidy: That's far too generous.

Mr. Reid: The Attorney General (Mr. Bales) had a rating of five, not competent or incompetent, just average. The Provincial Secretary for Justice had a rating of two. There are little comments with each one of these on the Premier's statement. He had a rating of two and it said "good-looking." I guess that's what the two points were for. The Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) had a rating of six. The Premier would agree with us, I suppose, that he is one of the more competent members. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld) had a rating of five because although he doesn't know anything about his ministry he doesn't get into too much trouble. The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) had a rating of six because he's been able to keep the agricultural people, the farmers, happy even though the agricultural economy of the province is going down.

The Provincial Secretary for Resources Development had a rating of minus two, and there's a little notice saying, "Send him back to Cuba." I don't know what that means. The Chairman of the Management Board (Mr. Winkler) had a rating of four. The Premier even rated himself; for some reason he has 10 plus plus beside his name. The Treasurer (Mr. White) had a rating of six.

If only the Premier could have seen the Treasurer's performance in this House last Friday and heard the inane, asinine remarks he made in regard to the questions about women on different advisory boards! It was beyond belief, Mr. Speaker, it really was. If one takes 2x and 4x and divides it by four, one will find a formula for having the right number of women on these boards. It was an incredible performance.

The Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mr. Welch) had a rating of two. He used to be one of the bright young men of the cabinet at one time but he lost a very important election, unfortunately, and all his competence and intelligence seems to have gone when he lost that. The Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) had a rating of two also.

Then we come to the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter); the rating beside his name was a funny thing. He was rated eight and then that number was crossed out and he was rated six. Then that number was crossed out; he was rated four. That number was crossed out. I won't go through it all but now he has a rating of minus nine. He's almost catching up to the Solicitor General.

Of course, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Snow) had a rating of one out of 10; that's not very good.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Lot of confidence!

Mr. Reid: The others, Mr. Speaker, fall into that same general category, but I can tell you that out of a possible 230 points this cabinet scored something like 48, which is perhaps a measure of the competence that we have sitting on the Treasury benches at the moment.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be parochial, if I may, for a little while. I would like first of all to mention something that I hope will be passed on to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development—something that I trust will perhaps stave off another crisis we are facing in the province today because of the problems on the Great Lakes and the related land that they are eroding, and the houses and cottages that are being ruined.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that the government has done nothing to alleviate this problem. They were aware of what was going to happen with the high water levels and the high winds and yet they did nothing.

When the government doesn't act and private industry won't, Mr. Speaker, obviously the individual is left with no recourse, when matters such as this are beyond his control. The people who own property along the beaches or waterfront that are now being hard pressed by these winds and waters are going to be complete losers, mainly because neither the government nor the private insurance companies will give them any kind of protection in regard to their property.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government sets up an insurance fund to provide insurance for those people owning property along the waterfront that can be affected by these waters. What I would suggest very simply is this, that the government arranges an insurance plan in which the individual cottage owner or waterfront property owner would pay into an insurance plan based on a 20-year cycle.

As we know, the water levels usually go in a 20-year cycle. The government could set up an insurance fund and ask each cottage owner or waterfront property owner to contribute to that fund based on that cottage owner's assessment of what his property, both land and buildings, was worth. He would then pay into that fund on a basis of at least 20 years and would be recompensed out of that insurance fund in regard to the amount that he had his property assessed at.

I think this would provide some kind of return to those people who now cannot get private insurance to protect their property. It would also provide the government with some initiative to set up such a fund to protect this kind of property. Obviously this would require the land owner to take all due consideration and care in the protection of his property from the waters and winds, but at least it would provide some kind of monetary protection from the loss that he is going to suffer because of these high winds and high waters.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak about three or four matters that primarily affect my riding and northern Ontario. The first thing I want to bring to your attention is something the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) touched on, the high prices that we suffer in northwestern Ontario—although I wouldn't completely agree with my hon. friend that the retailers are always innocent of not taking advantage of the people that they are serving.

Mr. Speaker, on Feb. 19, 1973, the northern affairs branch of the Ministry of Natural Resources delivered to the Minister of Natural Resources a compendium of prices of different articles, food and gasoline, in northwestern Ontario. It is entitled, as a matter of fact: "Costs Survey, Northern and Northwestern Ontario."

As requested, the officers in northwestern region have conducted a survey of various commodity costs in selected communities. The results are attached for your information.

Mr. Speaker, I want to quote from this report of the Ministry of Natural Resources to the minister. I also want to quote from some research I did personally on gasoline prices, and I want to quote from a report that some ladies in Atikokan drew up last fall in regard to prices in their community. I would just like to mention briefly that these ladies did a comparison between food prices in Atikokan and food prices in Thunder Bay. For hundreds of groceries there was a difference of some $35 between Atikokan and Thunder Bay.

I would like to read into the record if I might, Mr. Speaker, the difference in cost among Toronto, Thunder Bay and Atikokan in some selected commodities.

The cost of a quart of milk in Toronto was 35 cents; in Thunder Bay it was 37 cents, and in Atikokan 43 cents. For a quart of milk the price in Atikokan is eight cents above that in Toronto and six cents above that in Thunder Bay. Milk by the tin in Toronto was 19 cents; in Thunder Bay, 21 cents; and in Atikokan, 24 cents—a difference there of five cents between Toronto and Atikokan.

A 24-oz loaf of bread in Toronto was 28 cents; in Thunder Bay, 31 cents; and in Atikokan, 35 cents—a difference of seven cents between Toronto and Atikokan. Sugar was 14½ cents a pound in Toronto; 18 cents in Thunder Bay; and 23 cents in Atikokan—a difference of almost nine cents a pound for sugar between Toronto and Atikokan.

Coffee per pound was 83 cents in Toronto; 95 cents in Thunder Bay; and $1.19 in Atikokan. Just between Thunder Bay and Toronto there is a difference of some 24 cents a pound for coffee. Tea per pound in Toronto was $1.18; in Thunder Bay, $1.29; and in Atikokan, $1.59—again a difference there of 41 cents.

Fuel oil in Toronto is 21 cents a gallon; in Atikokan it's 26.3 cents a gallon—5.3 cents higher than in Toronto. Regular gasoline in Toronto is 49 cents; in Thunder Bay, 54 cents; and Atikokan 57.9 cents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why there should be that kind of differential among prices in Toronto, Thunder Bay and Atikokan. Other areas within my riding also differ. They are even higher in Ignace and in Rainy River than they are in Atikokan.

It particularly bothers me that the prices of gasoline are from four to five cents higher in my riding, and six and seven cents higher in Ignace than they are in the rest of my riding, when most of our gasoline and fuel oil comes from Winnipeg. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but I am informed that most of the gasoline that we use in northwestern Ontario comes out of the same storage tanks in Winnipeg. It is all the same gasoline, but if it's pumped into a Husky truck, or an Esso truck, or a Shell truck, then it becomes that brand of gasoline for that particular company and the price varies one or two or three cents.

I raised this matter, particularly the gasoline, Mr. Speaker, with the provincial Treasurer, when he was the Minister of Industry and Tourism, I believe, at that time. I asked him to look into the prices of gasoline in northwestern Ontario because we are being exploited, we are being rooked and we are being overcharged. I find it somewhat ironic that people in the city should be complaining about the inflationary prices of goods and services they have been enjoying, while we in northern Ontario have been exploited by the transportation companies, by the gasoline companies and others, and have been paying ridiculously high prices for years.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government might see fit, under one of its many boards and commissions, to have a look at price differentials between northern and southern Ontario with a view to giving us in the north an even break on this matter. If we cannot bring the pressure of the Ontario government to bear on the gasoline companies and on the retailers, particularly of food items, then we are not going to be able to bring these costs down.

Already the costs of everything are higher in the north because of transportation costs and so on. But why we should be paying these inordinately high prices is beyond me. The people of my riding are concerned about this. They are being exploited; they are trying to keep prices down as much as possible. But it has got to the point where they cannot raise their families when they have to pay $20, $30, $40 and $50 more a month than they would pay for the same package of groceries in Toronto.

There are two or three other matters I'd like to refer to in regard to northwestern Ontario and my riding. One, very briefly, is the need for a road between Atikokan and Ignace; I won't go into great detail about this at this time, sir, except to say that I was most disappointed with the Kenora-Rainy River transportation study, which to my mind was dictated by the hon. Minister of Natural Resources.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): My friend doesn't like Fort Frances to Dryden?

Mr. Reid: Fort Frances to Dryden is fine. I don't mind that road at all; it is an easily built road. As a matter of fact, it is already half built. But what I didn't like about the report was the fact that there was a road given higher priority in an area where no people live at the moment and which would benefit no one. The report in itself says that. It says, "There is no development in this area at all—there may be some in the future—but we recommend this road."

But where we have people living in the communities of Atikokan and Ignace, where the road would be a great direct social benefit, the report says, "The road is not economically feasible." Well, I say to this House, Mr. Speaker, that if we are in the business of doing only what is economical in this province, the government would have very little work to do indeed.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the officials of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications will thoroughly review the matters that are put before them in regard to the need for this road. It could mean the life of one community and would certainly add to the lifeblood of another one. The representatives of those two communities, Ignace and Atikokan, will be coming down to see the minister; and I trust he will not be as intractable as some of the other cabinet ministers when these people come to present their arguments to him.

I must say that I was most disappointed in the recommendations that came out of that report in regard to those two particular roads. One is a resource road that should come under the aegis of the Minister of Natural Resources, and should not have been recommended as a highway by that study at all. We must place our priorities on people in this province; and surely there is an obvious need for a road between Atikokan and Ignace.

I want to say one more word, if I may, Mr. Speaker, about the white paper—if that's what it is—of the Minister of Natural Resources in regard to the zoning of Crown land and the necessity of having a licence to use that Crown land for recreation purposes.

The Minister of Natural Resources himself long has been well aware of the problems of camper trailers, particularly foreign camper trailers, using Crown land in northern Ontario. We allow non-residents to come into this province to camp anywhere they please as long as there is a road there; they can camp up to three weeks with no charge at all. Usually they buy a fishing or hunting licence, but they're given the use of the land and the water for free.

Now the minister comes out with this white paper, which states that we have to do something about this situation because it causes a litter problem.

Mr. Speaker, I would have to argue immediately that the minister is heading in the right direction for the wrong reason. In this province we have allowed non-residents to come and use our land and water, and not charged them anything. There is nowhere in the United States that I know of where a person from Ontario can take his camper trailer, drive up to a lake, throw his boat in the water, fish, hunt or whatever, for no charge at all. If there are though, Mr. Speaker, there are very few isolated spots indeed left in the United States for those purposes.

Obviously, our hunting and our fishing is much better up here than in most places in the United States. But we have literally been giving our province away to these people who pay no taxes here and they have come up and enjoyed our bounty and we have sat mum and collected their garbage—and we can't blame just the Americans for the garbage problem.

Really, Mr. Speaker, what I'm getting at is that I applaud the first hesitant move of the minister, but I have to quarrel with his reason for doing so. The idea behind tourism is to part the tourist from as many dollars as possible. You don't bring a tourist to your country and give him everything free and say: "Thanks for coming. We enjoyed your company. We'll see you next year." I can tell you the Americans are great ones for—

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Tourist traps!

Mr. Reid: Well, I don't call them tourist traps—but they're certainly great at parting a tourist in their country from as many dollars as possible.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): They've got speed traps over there.

Mr. Reid: And for as long as I can remember in this province, we've been allowing these people to use our great outdoors with no charge at all. We've been literally giving away our resources; and Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford that any more, for two reasons: First, obviously our resources are not unlimited. We are running out of good fishing and hunting areas, even in northern Ontario.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we can't afford it from the point of view of economics.

All the studies that have been done on northern Ontario indicate that one of the primary industries for employment has to be the tourist industry. If we continue to allow people to come up to our area to camp gratis on Crown land, where they pay no fee and are under no regulation, well that is just abysmally stupid. That's like allowing somebody to walk into a supermarket, handing him a trolley, and saying: "Just help yourself. Thank you very much for coming. Help yourself to the meat, vegetables, whatever you have, and come back and see us again next year when you have that urge to fish and hunt again."

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I applaud the first hesitant step of the Minister of Natural Resources to grapple with this problem; but surely he's doing the right thing for the wrong reason. I think if he would change his thinking perhaps he could come up with a very concrete policy of forcing these camper trailers into provincial parks, or into licensed tourist camps, or licensed trailer parks. Make them pay a fee and part them from a few of those tourist dollars that we need in northern Ontario.

I say at the same time, Mr. Speaker, that if he would adopt that kind of attitude there would be no reason at all to charge the residents of the Province of Ontario a fee for using their own land, their own water and their own air.

Surely, we pay taxes in this province. We have to live with the tourists. We appreciate having the tourists here, but surely we should not be forced into the same category as tourists? We should be able to use what is ours because of our heritage and not have to pay for it. We are not tourists in our own province in those areas in which we live. We shouldn't be treated like tourists, nor should we have to pay like them.

Mr. Speaker, I have a few other matters that I would like to go into, but I know there are others who are anxious to speak. I would hope that my words—I can't say they've fallen on deaf ears; there aren't very many ears of any kind for them to fall on. But I would hope that the minister would take some cognizance of the fact that we, in northern Ontario, having been paying inflationary prices for some years for our groceries, for our gasoline, our heating fuel—that we're being exploited, particularly by the oil companies, for no reason at all.

I have a letter here from a constituent who used to be in the oil and gas business and he indicates the way in which the oil companies used him, or took advantage of him. I would hope that the government would take some cognizance of this and would set up some kind of machinery to look into these problems, so that we in northern Ontario can enjoy the same standard of living at the same cost as we do in southern Ontario.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. W. Ewen (Wentworth North): Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure for me to take part in this Throne Speech debate today. The contents of the address read by the Lieutenant Governor on March 20 again forcefully demonstrates this government's willingness to meet head-on and overcome the large problems which face society today.

It is my intention to single out for special attention in the time allotted a subject of great concern to me and about which I have conducted considerable research in the past year—the problem of solid waste management. I was extremely gratified to note the reference in the Throne Speech to our government's intention to provide an early solution to this problem.

The problem is truly imposing in scale and there appears to be little doubt that it will become even more so. At the moment, we are coping with more than 20 million tons of solid waste annually and it is estimated that this may grow to 37 million tons annually by 1980.

As you know, garbage disposal has become a topic of public, and in most cases highly emotional, controversy. There are many reasons for this. It poses threats to health and public safety and the possibilities of increased air and water pollution. In addition, there are factors such as noise, unpleasant odours, increased traffic and possibly reductions of property values resulting from waste disposal operations.

In discussing the problem with you now, I want to outline for you the dimensions of these problems and give you some insight into what is being done about garbage disposal in Ontario. I also will review briefly some developments in other jurisdictions and then put forward my own ideas of what can be done to solve the problem both now and in the future.

In my view, there are two major reasons for the increased concern which is evident not only in Ontario, but throughout the urban areas of North America. The first is the rapid growth of our cities and towns. In early days, the refuse from the city would be hauled out to the country and dumped and burned in sparsely populated areas.

Now, as we all know, urbanization extends well into the former rural areas and efficient land use planning has become an urgent priority in its own right. It is no longer possible or reasonable to dump and burn refuse in the countryside. Waste management legislation in Ontario does not permit this form of disposal except in small communities in remote areas and even this is subject to controls.

The second reason for the growing awareness of the need for better waste management is the increase in the disposable packaging for convenient merchandising which has been developed to meet our changing life styles. This was inevitable in an age in which women comprise a third of our labour force and use such convenient items to accommodate their dual role as worker and homemaker.

Solid waste disposal falls roughly into four problem areas. First, municipal and industrial waste, such as household refuse and scraps from a large variety of commercial and industrial operations. This type of waste is generally composed of about 50 per cent paper or paper products, 15 to 20 per cent organic material, such as vegetable scraps, and about 10 to 20 per cent almost equally divided between glass and metal. The remainder is ashes and miscellaneous materials which can be almost anything under the sun. Secondly, there is agricultural waste which consists largely of animal droppings, soiled straw or other bedding materials. Thirdly, there are abandoned automobiles and, finally, the litter we see on our streets, in our parks and other recreational areas.

All of these present some special disposal problems but the biggest problem is the enormous bulk entailed. At the moment in Ontario we are faced with a mountain of eight million tons of municipal and industrial waste, and it is estimated that this will increase to 12 million tons by 1980. In addition, we are presently challenged to dispose of 10 million tons of agricultural waste and sewage sludge each year. It is estimated that this amount will increase to 25 million tons a year by 1980.

There is not a great deal to be said about the litter; with the exception of broken glass, it generally does not create a health hazard, but aesthetically it is offensive. The antilitter campaign undertaken by the Ministry of the Environment has, I think, had a salutary effect. By and large, the people of Ontario are aware of the invitation, "Ontario, keep it beautiful," but even if picnickers, campers and motorists disposed of their waste in on-site trash cans, it would still have to be collected for final disposal.

To a certain extent, the same can be said of abandoned automobiles. They do not present a health or pollution hazard but they, too, are offensive to the eye. Again, the ministry's extensive thrust in this area is well known and going on.

Let me describe some of the problems posed by the disposal of solid waste. The overriding concerns, of course, are human health and safety, the preservation of reasonable standards of air and water purity and the quality of life. The basic approach to these goals is to collect the garbage and dispose of it in a safe and satisfactory manner.

However, as members are well aware, this is more easily said than done. The collection of disposable solid waste in our cities and towns has become a gigantic task employing thousands of workers and costing millions of dollars. At present, the cost of collection is three or four times the cost of disposal and this ratio is unlikely to change unless much better ways of collecting and disposing of waste are developed.

It is estimated that the average annual cost of collection and disposal of municipal and industrial waste in Ontario at the present is between $8 and $10 per capita, or $40 for a family of four. If no changes are introduced in the present methods of collection and disposal, it is estimated that by 1980, these costs would be at least $25 per capita and possibly could be even higher.

At the moment agricultural waste is in a class by itself because it does not come under the regulations of our Ministry of the Environment. Officials of the ministry and others are becoming increasingly concerned about the potential health and pollution problems resulting from the production of vast quantities of manure from feed lots, piggeries and poultry operations. These are not farming operations in the traditional sense.

We can cope with the manure of our family farms by returning it to the earth as fertilizer. As members know, this is the practice which has been followed for centuries, but the operations I have mentioned are not farms, they are factories for the mass production of food. There is no doubt that they perform a useful function in our society. Indeed, we would not eat so well without them, but they are factories and as such, in my view, they should be treated like other industry and be made subject to pollution control laws and regulations of the province.

I want to give you now some information on what is being done about these various problems in Ontario. Waste management in the province is a shared responsibility of the province and the municipalities. At the moment, municipal and industrial solid wastes are collected and disposed of by municipal governments. The provincial government, through the Ministry of the Environment, has concentrated largely on air and water pollution to date and this, of course, has involved it extensively in sewage disposal, and to a lesser extent, in solid waste management.

Any such comprehensive solid waste management programme can't restrict itself to collection and disposal. One of the principal considerations must be the generation of waste, and the starting point might properly be here. We must reduce the quantity of waste by controls of unnecessary packaging and encourage re-use of materials to avoid entry into the disposal systems.

However, I think we can profitably spend a few more minutes on how we can actually handle municipal and industrial solid waste in Ontario. At the present, about 50 per cent, or 4.5 million tons, is disposed of by landfill. About another 3.5 million tons has been disposed of by dumping and about one million tons is incinerated. Little or none is reclaimed, with the exception of some newspaper recycling projects and, of course, scrap metal.

Generally speaking, each municipality owns and operates a disposal site or sites, and many of these until recently were located haphazardly wherever cheap land could be acquired. There was no collection in many rural areas, little if any co-operation existed between municipalities and there was a large number of small, unacceptable sites.

The dumps are the most primitive form of disposal and generally this method involves the open burning of refuse. Many of them have been located without thought to the possible pollution problems, and in some areas they constitute a hazard to wells if soluble organic materials, salts and alkalis leach into the water table.

All of the dumps, including those that involve burning, provide breeding grounds for rodents, flies and other disease carriers. They are invariably malodorous and in some areas they constitute a highway traffic hazard. A number of serious accidents have been recorded because of loss of visibility caused by smoke from dumps blowing across the highway. Of course, the picture is improving. As I indicated earlier, dumping is now banned by law in Ontario with the exception of very small communities in remote areas.

The landfill operations under way at the present are much better than dumping, but here too there are difficulties. Anyone who has followed the efforts of Metro Toronto and the Canadian Pacific Railway to find an acceptable site outside Metro for the disposal by rail haul of municipal and industrial waste, will be aware of some of the problems.

The government of Metro Toronto is not alone in facing these difficulties. Up until September of last year, despite the considerable research to prove its value, the transport of refuse by rail had not become operational anywhere in North America. If there have been some recent applications of this method they have not come to my attention. There are many reasons for the non-use of rail haul, ranging from legislation in some areas to prevent shipment of refuse across state lines; the opposition of environmentalists in some areas; and the undesirable reluctance of rural areas to accept the big city problem.

The major problem for Toronto has been difficulty in finding a suitable site and, of course, assessing this method of disposal against the merits of other systems which are in the process of development or in use in other municipalities. However, despite these difficulties, I believe that rail haul, combined with the compacting of refuse, is one of the most promising avenues of escape from our solid waste dilemma. I will return to this subject and discuss it in some detail later.

Before doing so, however, I want to discuss briefly some other systems of handling solid waste. Most of them are at a trial or development stage but there is sufficient activity and evidence to indicate that some major breakthroughs may be possible in the future. However, most of them are not practical now and, in addition, the social and economic problems involved in the application of some of the new systems are formidable.

For example, collection, which is the costliest phase of our present system of garbage collection, needs a major overhaul and the adoption of more sophisticated equipment such as automatic collection vehicles.

These one-man collectors are in use in some US municipalities but widespread adoption of this method, in my opinion, will be slow because of the initial capital cost and because the form of automation may mean loss of jobs.

In the future, we may use ducts and slurry pipelines. These already have been developed for use—the slurry pipeline is not exactly a new invention—but these, too, will be slow coming into use for handling garbage because of the social and economic factors I mentioned in connection with automatic vehicles. When they do come into use, ducts and pipelines will require that the garbage be fragmented and this process sometimes is known as comminution. It is used in some areas.

Fragmentation is also necessary for sorting operations and these, too, are being used in some localities in the United States and in Europe. The big problem at the moment is what to do with the fragments when one gets them. The most practical use is for landfill until better sorting and reclamation systems are developed.

We also have to consider incineration, but there are a number of drawbacks including the high cost of construction, addition of pollution controls and maintenance. So far, efforts to recover some or all of these costs by utilizing waste heat for energy production in central heating operations have not lived up to the expectations of the theorists. To my knowledge, although it is talked about by people—most of whom, I suspect, either sell or have just been sold incinerators—there is not a single economic installation in operation in the world selling steam to private industry.

Composting is another area that appears to be attractive until it is examined closely. It can be used as a soil conditioner but generally fertilizer must be added. In some cases, compost can be used to make wall board and other compressed products but so far most of the 20-odd composting plants started in the United States in recent years have had to shut down because of the lack of markets and technical difficulties.

There is little doubt that in the long run reclamation and recycling has to be the correct answer to our massive garbage disposal problem. And progress has been made in some areas of the industrial field, but the efforts to reclaim household and many industrial wastes have been stymied so far by the lack of economic sorting and cleaning processes.

Sorting appears to be feasible only for small operations, but if we are to achieve economies of scale in our garbage disposal, then the small operations are not of the right answer. Until such time as recycling becomes economically feasible in private industry, it simply won't happen. That day appears to be years in the future for most areas.

But we cannot settle for our present system because our garbage problem is becoming more serious with every passing year. Think back to the tonnage statistics I cited. I believe that we must act now to take advantage of three types of technology that are available and which will provide substantial relief in the years ahead, while other processes leading eventually to successful reclamation and recycling are completely developed. I am advocating a combination of sorting, compaction, rail or truck haulage and reclamation of abandoned quarries and strip mines.

Let me deal first with compaction. One of the most difficult problems associated with garbage, as we have noted, is its vast bulk and unpredictable content. This ranges from paper scraps and potato peelings to discarded stoves and refrigerators. This bulk is troublesome, even when we use the most practicable disposal method available at present, sanitary landfill.

This is particularly true of the area where the landfill is located. The dump trucks shed loose paper, dirt and dust as they travel to the site and, although the refuse is covered with clean earth at intervals, the landfills tend to be somewhat malodorous until they are completed. The rats and other pests also continue to find homes in the refuse until the fill is completed—and this is a process that can take years, if it is a large operation.

Moreover, even when a sanitary landfill project is completed that often is not the end of the trouble story. There may be danger of seeping methane gas and possible fire and explosion and also the problem of pollution of the water supply through leaching. Moreover, this use of available land is wasteful and inefficient. In my view, compaction combined with rail or truck haul and topographical engineering can overcome these problems and give us substantial relief from our garbage disposal problems for many years to come.

Compaction, after extracting any economically useful material, takes the garbage in giant hydraulic presses and squeezes it at great pressure into large high density blocks. Presses currently in commercial operation in some American cities such as Cambridge, Mass., compress garbage into 4 ft cubes weighing approximately five tons. Under the tremendous force exerted by the presses, virtually all of the liquids are squeezed out of the garbage and the resulting bales are dry, neat and free from odours.

This means that the problems associated with sanitary landfill are eliminated. There will be no blowing paper and other debris to mar the landscape and no rats or other disease carriers. There will be no odours and the possibility of methane gas seepage and leaching also will be eliminated. But perhaps most important, the bulk of the garbage will have been reduced by a ratio of 25 to one and, in bales, it can be handled with relative ease by heavy duty machinery, better than the best results obtainable by a modern incinerator. In a landfill operation, the bales can be placed tightly together and covered with clean fill, which in turn can be compacted by heavy equipment.

You may be thinking at this point that the incineration also reduces the bulk of refuse. But in my view we must keep in mind that compaction operations now in use in the United States involve capital costs of about one-tenth of the cost of incineration, and operating costs that are between one-third and one-half lower. These are very important considerations when we think about the growing amount of garbage in the years ahead.

If this system was put into operation in any of our large urban areas or by any of our regional governments, it would be necessary to build a compaction and transfer facility in a central location. An area like Metro Toronto might require two or three. This facility would include a refuse receiving area, the compaction presses, and bale storage and loading area. Ideally, it also would be served by a railway spur line, because rail transportation offers significant advantages in moving the bales to the landfill site.

I can hear you asking: What landfill sites? Those are the hangups at the moment. The rural areas do not want big-city garbage. I agree, but there are other locations we must examine, some of them in more remote areas or those that are functioning as industrial mining sites at present.

In Ontario there are more than 5,000 abandoned quarries and a number of open-pit mining operations that can be numbered among the largest man-made excavations in the world. The scars which currently disgrace the Niagara Escarpment could be covered and rehabilitated. The essential advantage of this system is to reclaim land, our most irreplaceable commodity, and to turn ugly wasteland into good usable space.

What I am saying, in essence, is that there is no shortage of places to put our garbage if we can negotiate suitable purchases or leases and overcome some of the complications. Many of these would be eliminated by the compaction process. This would assist in overcoming neighbourhood objections to conventional landfill and at the same time reclaim useless land for the general public benefit.

Mr. Speaker, I started by outlining the massive problem of solid waste disposal that now confronts us: 20 million tons annually now, with a possibility that this may nearly double by 1980. I also outlined some of the ongoing research and development work that promises to help us solve the problem in the long run. It is clear that the best solutions are reclamation and recycling; this is imperative if we face a resources shortage, as the pessimists claim.

The achievement of these objectives on a large scale is a long way down the road, and in my view it is also clear that we have to move quickly with the best technology that is available now. I maintain this is a combination of compaction, rail and truck hauling, and disposal in open-pit mines or large quarries. I say action is needed quickly, because it will take time to organize this system and to build the facilities—and time is running out on us. With a possible increase of 17 million tons of solid waste a year confronting us in less than 10 years, there is no time to spare. We must act now. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could have a motion to adjourn the debate by the next speaker.

Mr. Cassidy moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR:

NOTICE OF MOTION No. 3

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 3, by Mr. Givens.

Resolution: That the provincial government, in co-operation with the municipal and federal levels of government, should set up a permanent secretariat to discuss, study and explore matters of common interest with the purpose of assisting municipalities with their problems, in light of the fact that a tri-level conference was held in Toronto last year, at which time it was felt that representatives of the three levels of government should meet on a regular and continuing basis.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, I move resolution No. 3.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York-Forest Hill moves resolution No. 3.

Mr. Givens: I'd like to explain the purpose of the resolution. As every schoolboy knows, Mr. Speaker, which includes the vast majority of the hon. members of this House, under the British North America Act, which is our Canadian constitution, municipalities and urban areas of this province come under provincial jurisdiction under section 92 of the Act:

This constitution, as we know it, was drawn over 100 years ago when the responsibilities of the municipalities were limited. They were confined to services with respect to property and to services such as police and fire protection, garbage collection, the paving of kerbs and the filling of potholes, and so on. But this is no longer so. Since that time, municipalities have got into a myriad of very sophisticated services which are not attributable to property alone and which cannot adequately be paid for by property taxes alone. These include such sophisticated services as welfare, housing, transportation, pollution, post-secondary school education, unemployment and many other services which can in no way, by any stretch of the imagination, be attributed to taxation on the basis of the fixed asset of real estate taxes.

We haven't been solving the problems of our cities, Mr. Speaker, and there are many urban problems that we haven't been dealing with adequately; with respect to the urban poor, drug addiction, alienation, crime, housing and transportation. I was very much amused when listening to and watching television on Saturday night to hear the hon. member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) when he made this profound statement, which turned out to be the biggest laugh of the weekend. He said—I paraphrase him; I don't quote him because I don't remember the exact words: The day of the motor car for the transport of people is finished.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): That's right.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Oh yes, that certainly is right!

Mr. Givens: We have only got through selling over a million cars in the Province of Ontario alone last year. The Wall Street Journal and The Financial Post in Canada have indicated that last year was the biggest year in automobile sales on the North American continent. And my hon. friend from Scarborough Centre says "the day of the motor car is over." So we have solved that problem.

Mr. Drea: No, get it right.

Mr. Givens: Oh, all right!

Mr. Drea: The day of the automobile in mass transit is over.

Mr. Singer: He didn't say that.

Mr. Givens: He is equivocating. We haven't solved the problem of pollution, although the Dow Co. is in the courts. Members heard the answer from the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) today, that he went up to Ottawa last Friday to speak to the Minister of Transport, specifically for Richmond Hill and the Union Station, and that he came back with a big goose egg—with nothing! He said it would be some time until he heard from the Minister of Transport in Ottawa as to whether he will help.

The federal government, amidst its debates and its concerns with respect to wet wheat and fish and national unity up in Ottawa, refights the battle of the Plains of Abraham up there just about every week. They hardly have time for other things with which they should be concerned, such as urban matters. The politicians and the civil servants up there have been dragged, kicking and screaming, into the realization that they have to do something about the concept of urban planning and urban problems on a national basis right across this country.

I remember in 1968 when I first went there I was told unmistakably by the Prime Minister, and by other people, that the federal government has no place in the urban affairs of the nation, that this was unconstitutional, that it couldn't have a ministry of housing and it couldn't have a ministry of urban affairs because it was unconstitutional and the government wasn't going to face up to it. Since that time, because of public pressure, it has decided to get into the field.

I would like to give members a few examples of federal involvement. The federal government may say that it has no constitutional responsibility and we may say to it "thou shalt stay out," but the fact of the matter is that it is involved.

Let me give members some contemporary examples. This past Saturday, there was this banner headline in the Toronto Star: "Andras Says 190,000 Immigrants May Still Be Hiding." If there are 190,000 immigrants still hiding, I suggest to members they are hiding in the cities of this country and there are probably closer to a quarter of a million or 300,000 of them. They are not hiding on farms and they're not hiding in villages; they are hiding in the big centres of this country.

Who was responsible for that? Windsor? Toronto? Waterloo? Are any of the cities across the country responsible for something that the federal government has brought about?

With respect to transportation, we all know about the heroic action taken by our government here in abandoning the Spadina expressway and the Spadina subway. Hurrah.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): The member sounds like a broken record.

Mr. Singer: The member is going to hear it for many years until it is built.

Mr. Givens: The members are going to hear it for many years, Mr. Speaker, because there has been no alternative to what the government has abandoned.

Mr. Singer: That's right!

Mr. Givens: Now there will be, years from now, the Toonerville Trolley, like the Third Ave. "El" they used to have in Manhattan. It will come about in another 10 years; and it's going to be on concrete stanchions instead of the iron they used to have in New York.

We're going to have the dial-a-bus system in about three or four years. But in the meantime, all we've got is the extension of the Yonge St. subway, which we planned 10 years ago. Two lousy stations have been completed in 10 years. It was started in 1963 and that subway is overloaded now.

The point of the thing, Mr. Speaker, is that we have to have federal help now in order to twin the Yonge St. subway, to prevent it from becoming paralysed within the next few months. It would have been much easier to bring this about if there had been this kind of tri-level, permanent secretariat that would be working on this right now, instead of the minister going to see the Minister of Transport, who is from Montreal.

Probably when our minister walked in and said: "Let's have the commuter arrive from Richmond Hill," the federal minister said "Richmond who?" So now they're going to study it. It will probably take them about six months to study it but the pressure is on now because by the time the extension goes up to Finch, the Yonge St. subway will be totally paralysed.

It will be incapable of handling the traffic that it is going to attract. When the dial-a-bus system goes into effect three years from now it will disgorge an extra two million passengers into the Yonge St. subway.

The Yonge St. subway system was designed with this in mind—that it would be relieved in due course by the Spadina subway system. What has happened to the Spadina subway system? It is before the Ontario Municipal Board today; it will be there for the next three or four weeks. The board will reserve decision. It will take six months to make that decision.

It will then be appealed to the cabinet, so it will take another year before we can acquire the land and draw up the plans for the Spadina subway, which members are all in favour of and which the government ruined together with the expressway two years ago.

The government should have gone ahead with that. It had the opportunity to do it at that time. That is why I say if we had the secretariat we would have been in much better shape.

Mr. D. R. Timbrell (Don Mills): No way!

Mr. Givens: With respect to the airports, we messed up the Malton airport — the Toronto International Airport — situation because of lack of co-ordination and co-operation among the three levels of government. This is why we now need a second airport, and the second airport has been messed up—

Mr. W. Newman: Who said we needed the second airport?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): The government did.

Mr. Givens: The second airport has been messed up; the whole concept of it has been messed up because there has not been tri-level—

An hon. member: The member sounds like a broken record.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): The member for York-Forest Hill was in Ottawa at the time.

Mr. Givens: What did the member say?

An hon. member: He didn't say anything.

Mr. Givens: If he has anything to contribute, let him say it.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): And if he hasn't got anything to say, don't let him say it.

Mr. Givens: The trouble there is we didn't have three-level co-operation and consultation with respect to the proposed airport at Pickering or the government wouldn't be in the mess it is in now.

An hon. member: Darn right!

Mr. Givens: There are other examples — in the education field; the welfare field; the field of crime and so on. Last year we had a tri-level conference which was hosted by the former minister, the one with the mailed fist in the mailed glove. He called it but when it was held a new minister had taken over. He was the man of the iron fist in the silken glove. He's gone now. So the first minister was so successful that now the government is backing away from his regional policy, as we heard from the new minister the other day.

The other minister has been such a great success that he was responsible for losing the safest Conservative seat in the Province of Ontario, a seat that's been Conservative for 40 years. And now the new minister — he's the one with the pudgy palm in the paper mitt — has indicated that he's going to retire and not run in the next election; presumably after he has enshrined the women in his ministry, as he stated so valiantly.

You girls should apply to the Ministry for Intergovernmental Affairs. You could become deputy ministers. It's in to be a woman now!

Mr. Singer: If you multiply 3x by 4x, yes!

Mrs. Campbell: If you can make the quota.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Givens: Anyway, the only result —

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Givens: I'm sure she's not going away mad. She's just going away.

An hon. member: To make an application.

Mr. Drea: She's scared.

Mr. Givens: The only result of last year's tri-level conference was that they merely decided they would meet again this year. They must have been scared out of their wits, because our Treasurer of that period, Mr. MacNaughton, was reported in the papers as having almost scuttled that tri-level conference. The news item that appeared in the newspaper said that it was practically a disaster until at the last minute there was some compromise made and they agreed to meet again this year, probably in November.

I think we can all agree in the light of what has happened over the past three or four years, that the British North America Act substantially, virtually, for all intents and purposes, is unamendable. I don't think anybody wants to challenge that opinion. It's unamendable because, with all the provinces across this country — even the have-not provinces — they don't even want to have to give up the right of not having anything and consequently they will not agree to an amendment of the Constitution, so that if there are any adjustments or adaptations to be made with respect to the Constitution it has to be done by consultation and co-operation and not by amendment.

I remember, when the Prime Minister used to say, "Well, amend the Constitution." You know, that's absurd and it's ridiculous. He knows it and we all know it here. Everything has to be done politically by negotiation and consultation, because somewhere the buck has got to stop.

When a city goes to Ottawa for help they say: "Well, we agree with you but it's the province that has the jurisdiction." When I used to come hat in hand like a mendicant and a beggar up here they used to say: "Well, why don't you go to see your friends up in Ottawa because we haven't got the money for it?"

Well, somewhere among these three levels of government the buck has to stop, because somewhere among these three levels of government all the total jurisdiction and power and money exist to solve the problems of the day. Surely, we can agree on that, somewhere among these three levels.

Mr. S. B. Handleman (Carleton): The member knows how hard it is to get along with Ottawa.

Mr. W. Newman: He's been to all three levels to try to find the money.

Mr. Givens: That is why we have to have—

Mr. Handleman: He cannot get along with them up there.

Mr. Givens: That is why, having served at the three levels, I realize and I understand that the three levels have to get together for consultation and co-operation, because otherwise there's no end to it.

Now, let me get on with why we need this permanent secretariat. First of all, I feel that it has to be a small full-time permanent secretariat responsible to the chairmen of the three levels of government. It would have an analytical role. It would work on research and planning.

Another function it would have would be to co-ordinate and communicate. It would have a communicative role, so that we don't have what we've had before, where the province comes in with provincial facts, and the federal government comes in with federal facts, and the municipal governments come in with municipal facts. A fact is a fact is a fact, as Gertrude Stein would say. We shouldn't need three different categories of facts, and if you had a communicative secretariat that could work these things out there would be one set of facts that we could all understand.

Furthermore, the function of the secretariat would be to set up and conduct tri-level committees and conferences on comprehensive problems in specific metropolitan areas, of which there are about 20 across this nation, that have national problems. When I talk about comprehensive problems I mean comprehensive as opposed to sectorial problems. You cannot deal with urban transportation, for instance, by itself. No way! Urban transportation is interdependent with housing, and with planning and with zoning and with pollution and with other matters of that kind. You cannot deal with these problems alone. There has to be cross-fertilization and cross-pollination between departments and between civil services and between the departments and the civil services of the three levels of government. So they have to be dealt with on a comprehensive basis.

Then there has to be the job that the secretariat can do with respect to planning and designing of policies on matters on which the three levels of government are involved. What's the point of saying, for instance, that education is strictly within the purview of the provincial government when over half a billion dollars is funnelled off from the federal government to the provincial government for post-secondary school education?

Now, the government is in education with the federal government—is in education with both feet and we might as well recognize that. There are other examples of that kind—with respect to housing. The federal government, whatever the party in power may be—I'm not talking partisan politics now—whatever the party in power, 90 per cent of the funds for housing will be coming from the federal government.

Then another function of the permanent secretariat will be to legitimize the concept of the federal role in urban affairs and the urban role, which will be plugged into the decision-making process.

What is the use of having these conferences, of inviting municipal representatives? You will have a municipal representative from Toronto who represents over two million people, and he will sit up in the 10th row of the gallery as an adviser. Whereas, the Premier of Prince Edward Island who represents 150,000 people on a budget of about the size of a suburb in Ottawa, or something, is a first minister who has a direct line of communication to the Prime Minister of Canada.

I suggest that it is wrong and I suggest that it is high time today that the urban areas of this country were plugged into the decision-making process which affects their daily lives.

And finally, I feel the secretariat would be able to give direction and evolve policies and administer the implementation thereof on a continuing basis.

Again, what is the use of having a conference every year when you don't have an ongoing secretariat of experts — a small ongoing secretariat of experts who take advantage of whatever decisions are made at these particular meetings and conferences and build for the future? It's a complete waste of time unless you do that.

Now I think such a secretariat has to have three substantial elements. First of all, it must be representative of the three levels of government as co-partners, if not equal partners. There is no point in merely saying: "You federal people, you mind your own business and just send us the money and we will finish the job."

No federal government of any political stripe is simply going to send a cheque every time you send them a bill. That's absurd. Because urban business is the people's business and no one level of government has a monopoly on the people's business in this nation today.

And I think that this secretariat must deal with problems on a comprehensive basis rather than a sectorial basis, as I explained. And I think that such a secretariat must begin to distinguish between the large municipalities—like Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver, Winnipeg and the smaller municipalities, because their problems are essentially different. I don't believe that you can compare them.

I think one of the main difficulties of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities is that they try to lump all the municipalities — small and big; rural and urban—into the same basket; and you cannot do that.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that eventually all this will come to pass as cities grow in importance and as more people flock to them. I think the trend is irreversible. If we read the demographic figures it would indicate that in the next few years over 80 per cent of the population of Canada will be living in the large cities of this country.

I think this trend is totally irreversible. Furthermore, as more city politicians gravitate towards the cabinets of the provinces and of the federal government, they will begin to have an understanding they don't have now. The trouble I had in Ottawa was that there wasn't a member of the cabinet who had been a mayor of a city — of any city in Canada. Consequently, how could you expect anybody on the cabinet to have an understanding of what the urban problems are in any city in this country?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): But the member keeps on hoping; is that right?

Mr. Givens: I think there was one who had served as an alderman for a few years on the Montreal council, and I think there was one member of the cabinet who was an alderman in the city of Hamilton for one or two years. But as John Kenneth Galbraith said — and you must know, because I'm sure you fellows read that sort of thing. John Kenneth Galbraith said —

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Those members who can read.

Mr. Givens: —"No man can make a contribution to the life of the American republic without having served as the mayor of a large city." I think there is a lot of truth to what he says; particularly since I agree with what he said.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): A lot of middle class elitist nonsense.

Mr. Givens: So Mr. Speaker, I say to you that I think there is a lot of truth to what he says, particularly since I agree with what he says.

Mr. Foulds: What a conceited comparison.

Mr. Givens: So, Mr. Speaker, I say to you that—

Mr. Cassidy: That means the member for York-Forest Hill must be the Messiah.

Mr. Givens: —we must formulate this permanent secretariat. Certainly when my party comes into power, we will address ourselves to this matter right away, and we'll initiate such a permanent secretariat. I hope it won't be too late by the time we get around to it, because I think it is needed right now, and for the reasons that I have indicated to you. These are the reasons why I feel that we need a tri-level permanent secretariat now to deal with all the massive and complicated problems that I have indicated to you that the urban areas of this country are confronted with today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine.

Mr. T. A. Wardle (Beaches-Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from York-Forest Hill could well have made the same speech in the House of Commons back in 1967.

Mr. Foulds: He probably did.

Mr. Singer: He did.

Mr. Wardle: I did not have the opportunity to read Hansard from Ottawa at that time, but the words that I recall reading in the newspapers then sound familiar.

The hon. member went to Ottawa as a former mayor of Canada's largest city — largest city today, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Stokes: Second largest.

Mrs. Campbell: Largest organized.

Mr. Givens: Largest, largest.

Mr. Wardle: —and he put forward the same ideas to the government of that day. But I think he was a voice crying in the wilderness because the government would not listen and the Prime Minister of that day would not listen. So I do give credit to the hon. member, that these ideas that he promoted some six years ago are bearing some fruit today, and for this he is to be commended.

The fact that he was not listened to in Ottawa, I know brought great frustration to him, but now he is in a place, Mr. Speaker, where he is probably a happier man and he speaks to a government that is willing to listen.

Mr. Cassidy: Only one applauded there.

Mr. Givens: We are all listening.

Mr. Wardle: When the hon. member has good ideas, and he has had a couple of good ideas the government has already accepted—

Mr. Timbrell: One was leaving the House of Commons.

Mr. Handleman: There is another good idea.

Mr. Wardle: —I would suggest to him that he keep up the good work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this government has been well aware of this problem for some time. I recall on Nov. 27, 1967, during the Confederation of Tomorrow conference, the then Premier of Ontario, John P. Robarts, had this to say:—

Mr. Cassidy: Is the member sure he remembers it explicitly?

Mr. Wardle: Quoting:

The core of any federal system lies in the distribution of powers between the levels of government. Let me emphasize that any redistribution of powers is a two-way process and that powers can be transferred both ways.

In our discussion on this subject, we must aim for efficiency in the provision of services. We must maintain close communication between the government and the public in areas where this is essential. There must be respect for differing preferences among groups of people in various regions of the country.

We must ensure that the central government has sufficient powers to maintain a single market within the country to promote effective economic growth and stability, to narrow disparities among the regions in the country, to defend us and to represent us adequately in international affairs. The distribution of powers must also be sufficiently flexible that we can adapt to change.

Mr. Cassidy: That is a remarkable memory the member has.

Mr. Wardle: Since that time there has been a number of federal-provincial conferences and meetings. The tri-level conference in Toronto last year was another step along the road to closer co-operation among the three levels of government.

Mr. Speaker, the mover of this motion ranged far afield today, but I am going to confine myself only to the motion that was presented by the hon. member. We, on this side of the House, would not favour this motion, Mr. Speaker, because it does not take into account the nature of tri-level consultation in Canada today and where this process should concentrate its efforts.

First of all, I would like to point out to the hon. member for York-Forest Hill that at the provincial-municipal conference in 1970 we established a provincial-municipal liaison committee. This committee meets on a monthly basis and is co-chaired by the Treasurer (Mr. White) and Mayor Des Newman of Whitby.

The group of municipal representatives headed by Mayor Newman is called the municipal liaison committee, and it is composed of the presidents and members of the executives of the three main municipal associations in Ontario—the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, the Association of Counties and Regions of Ontario, and the Ontario Association of Rural Municipalities.

The provincial-municipal liaison committee meets monthly to discuss provincial policies and programmes of concern to Ontario municipalities. At recent meetings such items as construction safety inspection, provincial-municipal finance and solid waste disposal have been discussed. In addition, the committee has pre-screened pending legislation which would directly affect municipalities, such as amendments to the Municipal Act and the Planning Act.

To ensure the continued development of the provincial-municipal liaison committee as a main forum for provincial-municipal dialogue, the Treasurer announced on April 3 that the government would provide the municipal side of the committee with an annual grant over the next four years.

Thus, in Ontario there is a body which meets regularly, which has as its very purpose liaison and consultation, and which could well serve as the focus for the development of a tri-level structure for this province.

At the national level, the situation is less clear. During their constitutional review, the federal and provincial governments established a secretariat to the constitutional conference. It served both levels of government equally well and achieved a large degree of acceptance by all participants in the constitutional review process. In November 1971, at the first meeting of first ministers after the constitutional conference had reached a road-block in June 1971—

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Why doesn't the member give us his thoughts?

Mr. Wardle: —the Premier of Ontario (Mr. Davis) suggested that the secretariat to the constitutional conference should be retained as an intergovernmental secretariat to serve the meetings of first ministers. He suggested that gradually its role could be extended to serve meetings of the finance ministers and the other ministerial meetings which are a regular feature of Canadian federalism today.

Mr. Givens: What about municipal representatives on that?

Mr. Wardle: However, this suggestion was not accepted by the government of Canada—

Mr. Givens: Who prepared this for the hon. member? What are his own thoughts?

Mr. Wardle —and the constitutional conference secretariat was largely dismantled. At Ontario's instigation, however, it was revised to serve the tri-level conference last November, to which the hon. member refers in his resolution. The framework for an intergovernmental secretariat exists, but I question whether it should be considered solely in the context of national tri-level meetings or whether it might be more usefully seen in the context of intergovernmental ministerial meetings in general.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think that we would be remiss in not noting the important variations in provincial-municipal relationships across Canada. Regional differences in approaches to problems and in setting priorities are among the reasons that Canada is a federal state. Urban problems in Ontario and urban problems in Newfoundland or Saskatchewan are of a different order and magnitude. These differences probably make it next to impossible for those at the federal level to take anything but an extremely broad view. Such generalizations which will result might be comfortable; in some cases might even be informative. But will they accomplish a great deal?

The Ontario government has taken the position that there is a far greater opportunity to achieve concrete and useful results by concentrating tri-level efforts at the regional level. In November, this province invited the federal government to participate in an Ontario tri-level conference. This offer was accepted by the federal minister, the Hon. Ron Basford. I expect that this matter is now being pursued among the three levels of government.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the resolution by the hon. member for York-Forest Hill put the emphasis in the wrong place. National tri-level meetings, representing the federal government, the 10 provinces and the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities might prove to be interesting forums for discussion. However, if we are to achieve solutions to the problems facing Ontario municipalities, the focus must be on Ontario. A forum for provincial-municipal dialogue, the provincial-municipal liaison committee, has already been established, and an Ontario tri-level meeting is being explored. The basic elements for resolving our problems are already in existence and are being developed and strengthened by this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: On my right in the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, I've had the hon. member for York-Forest Hill demonstrating his Messianic zeal for the tri-level formula. On my left, I have had the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine trying to express in a rather sourpuss or sour pickle manner his feeling that this wouldn't work, and that because it comes from the Liberal Party, therefore, on behalf of the government he ought to oppose it.

There is an attitude among the government which, as a member of the opposition, I've become rather familiar with. It is that somehow it's been done for the best of all possible worlds here in the Province of Ontario. Nobody does it better. Nobody can do it better. The existing institutions are quite adequate, thank you very much, for God's sake, let's not try anything new or anything innovative.

Mr. Handleman: The member never spoke truer words.

Mr. Cassidy: Let me deal with the hon. member for York-Forest Hill first. He said, and I quote his words: "Somewhere the power has got to be." He said that if you get the three levels of government together, between one or the other of them, they've got to be able to solve it and somehow the answers will be found. While we support the concept of the tri-level consultation and feel that the Ontario government, in particular, has been very laggard in warming up to this approach and using it for the benefit of local autonomy and for the benefit of a better urban policy in this province, I think that it's also fair to recognize that there are some pretty substantial problems, and that the government of which the hon. member for York-Forest Hill used to be a member is one of the major reasons for those problems. If you will, he should have been taking his speech and peddling it elsewhere and not in this particular House alone.

The resolution says that this permanent secretariat should discuss, study and explore matters of common interest. It's a weak resolution in that sense, Mr. Speaker. It's very nice. We discuss, study and explore things of common interest in the private members' hour. People know just what concrete result that has. We never vote on them, and ultimately the government can simply ignore what happens in the private members' hour. A permanent secretariat that didn't do more than that would be pretty darn useless.

The problem is that it takes three to tango. The municipalities are perfectly willing to get involved in the kind of tri-level consultation that ought to be taking place nationally, provincially and on a regional basis—that is, the Toronto region, the Ottawa region and the other major urban regions of this or other provinces. They're very ready. As for the provinces, well, their attitude depends. If you go to Manitoba or if you go to the Maritime provinces, you find that those provincial governments are perfectly willing also to get involved and to treat the municipalities as partners. Here in Ontario, on the other hand, the attitude is a bit different. As the hon. member for York-Forest Hill noted, the former hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) and the then Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs was dragged kicking and screaming into the consensus that emerged from the tri-level conference held at the new hotel downtown last November. It was a very ticklish business to get Ontario to recognize that on any basis whatsoever the municipalities should have the right to sit down at a common table with the federal government as well as with the provincial government.

The hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine, I think, put it rather well. He suggested that, as far as the government was concerned, the provincial-municipal liaison committee was a satisfactory means, and that the province already had a number of existing means by which it could talk with the federal government.

As far as this government is concerned, the compromise at the tri-level conference notwithstanding, its basic attitude is that the provincial government—the Treasury and Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs—will serve as the intermediary and never shall municipal governments talk directly with the federal government, even though they might want to and be willing to, and even though the federal government might want to, and even though there are some pretty positive constitutional and political reasons why that should be the case.

The province wants to keep the municipalities under its thumb. The province does not believe in local autonomy. It does not really believe in seeking every possible means to decentralize authority, to give the autonomy that the municipalities ought to have.

The province, and rightly in this case, keeps worrying about the fiscal squeeze at its level and at the municipal level, and about the fiscal powers that are held in Ottawa. It is unwilling to recognize the fact that we may have to wait a long time before fiscal powers are decentralized from Ottawa even though they ought to be. The federal government, for political reasons of its own, is going to try to keep some dollars flowing into the municipalities, into urban areas, if only because of the votes.

Therefore, it is shortsighted of the province to try to cut out the kind of direct consultations and discussions that ought to take place between the municipalities—which are seeking and anxious for and need that aid—and the federal government, which is willing to dole it out but is unwilling to transfer income tax points or make other unconditional transfers which would allow the degree of autonomy that the municipalities ought to have.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, both the provincial government and the federal government are at fault in this. Perhaps if one turned to the provincial government one could see more explicitly just how meaningful its kind of consultation really is. In one of the documents which was presented before the tri-level conference, Mr. MacNaughton boasted of the two established means of consultation which existed. One was the provincial-municipal liaison committee.

Now, granted, that committee meets every month. Not every municipality, by a long shot, is represented on it, and not one breath of one word of what occurs in that committee comes out to the public, Mr. Speaker, because of the government's insistence that it will interpret what happens in that committee and that its proceedings will take place in camera, in private. It is consultative or advisory.

There is no means, however, by which the municipalities can engage public support for the case that they may bring before that liaison committee, in order to let the public know how the province is reacting; whether the province is being co-operative or obstructive in the things that are being discussed with the municipalities.

The other bodies cited by Mr. MacNaughton are the provincial-municipal-regional advisory committees for the five economic regions of Ontario. These were first announced last June. They were meant to be set up by the end of the year. They are not yet set up.

Once again, the province has shown that it is not willing to involve the municipalities in a very important aspect of their future growth and development — that is the regional planning that has gone on and will continue to go on. In fact, whether it's the Toronto-centred region plan or the Design for Development, Phase I, for eastern Ontario or for other regions of the province, the province has created plans in private. It has laid them on to the municipalities; it has them presented as faits accomplis.

There has never been the proper kind of debate, whether in this chamber or with the municipalities or with the public, about these plans. The province, in other words, is planning pretty much in isolation. It's clear to me, Mr. Speaker, that the kind of self-satisfied praise which the member for Beaches-Woodbine brings to the present system is simply not justified. The province, in creating out of the blue transit systems which substantially affect the future growth and development of municipalities, is acting just as arbitrarily as the federal government has acted, say, in creating waterfront parks here in Metro Toronto.

Both senior levels of government are responsible for the kind of breakdown that exists, and both of them need the will and, if one will, the discipline of proper tri-level consultations on a permanent, rather than a temporary basis. We would support that. I would caution the member for York-Forest Hill (Mr. Givens) on the other hand, not to expect the millenium overnight.

The senior governments, this one certainly included, are not particularly amenable to this process. They do not co-operate particularly well. They tend to make political decisions arbitrarily and in isolation. So far, they have shown no willingness to give to the municipalities the kind of partnership and the kind of autonomy that they ought to enjoy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution.

I have been interested in what has been said thus far. Perhaps my thrust is somewhat different. I have listened to government speakers tell us of their great flexibility and of their willingness to listen. Yet it has been my experience both as a municipal politician and as one not in politics over a period of time, that the reverse is true. I regret that the hon. member for Beaches-Woodbine, who was himself involved at the municipal level, should be of the opinion that this resolution is not one which is relevant, apparently, at this time.

Several people in the course of debate since I have been here have wondered why such matters as regional government should have been in any part of the campaign, or the concern of voters in the riding of St. George. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if for no other reason, this government should welcome this sort of secretariat so that it could become less remote from people and understand a little better what the feelings are of people, particularly in the urban areas.

This government is talking about local autonomy. Let us examine such a matter as the field of education. With great self-righteousness one of the ministers has spoken about the need for holding a ceiling, but he hasn't explained that as far as this government is concerned, it has imposed programmes on the boards of education — programmes which have cost money; programmes which have required staff. This is local autonomy, but are they prepared to permit to those local school boards the cutting back in these programmes as part of their cuts to accommodate the government? Surely this whole field of education is something which has to be discussed at all three levels because, of course, all three levels, as has been so properly stated, are involved in education.

Then this government has decided in its wisdom to cut back on the terms of office of municipal governments such as Metropolitan Toronto, and then it talks about their autonomy to plan. To plan what, and in what terms? If there were such a secretariat, Mr. Speaker, this government could more readily understand, if it wishes to, what the problems of planning are at an urban level such as that in which we are meeting today.

I mentioned in my speech earlier that the metropolitan government could not resolve the problem of garbage disposal in a two-year term. Yet this is a problem which should be engaging all levels of government because it is related to matters of rights of municipalities; it is related to matters of pollution; it is related to matters which cannot be solved by a municipality alone nor can it, with respect, be resolved by the provincial governments alone.

There are ongoing problems which require ongoing consideration, Mr. Speaker, and these one-shot, once-a-year sort of gatherings together are not going to resolve those problems. It strikes me, too, that rather than crying about what the federal government's role is, if the provincial government invites the federal government in, it has at least taken away one of its excuses for not being involved—that is, that they have to await the invitation of the province before they can intrude themselves in urban matters.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that we are in this province in an era of assessment planning. Yet no one has stopped to look at the effect on the planning of a municipality by the formula assessment policy of this government.

But when you see, the change in the assessment is the transfer from commerce and industry—including, my understanding is, the highrise developments—over to the residential home owner and the residential farmer, then there has to be some kind of co-operation so that people will be able to understand; either to stop this formula planning or to be able to sit down and understand what their future is.

We pass up this opportunity if we allow the provincial government to impose its Disneyland-kind of rail system on Toronto as a solution, or a possible solution to problems. Surely we have to recognize that we have to plan beyond even Metropolitan Toronto in the transportation system. It can only be done effectively when you have the co-operation and consultation of urban governments across the province.

This is one of the things that is causing so much dismay right across Ontario in the whole area of regional government.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge this government to show leadership in this area, to prove to people what they have been saying—and that is that they do believe in local autonomy—to give them an opportunity to be heard.

Because quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, as I go across the province in the limited areas in which I have been able to be, people do not believe this government is concerned with local autonomy. They believe that government is imposing upon people that which they want to impose. And believe me, with what we have seen in the failures of policies I would think that you need all the wisdom you can get. And accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I am supporting this resolution as it stands. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Drea: Well, Mr. Speaker, since I usually bring out the beast, let's get it over with in the first 30 seconds.

What I said on the Provincial Affairs programme the other night was simply this—and I defy anybody in what is left in the Liberal caucus over there to disagree with me.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): There are more Liberals than there are Tories.

Mr. Drea: And what I said, and it is an exact quote, is: "The age of the automobile in mass rapid transit is gone forever." Now, I defy anybody to argue with that.

Having got that one out of the way—because I use things like that on television for only one reason—I like to explode things in York-Forest Hill. But I will probably explode a few more things in York-Forest Hill this afternoon because I support—and without any qualification, and without any of this third reading nitpicking and fooling around—I support entirely the motion put forward by the hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. Reid: We must be wrong.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Drea: The members opposite are cutting into my time.

The reason that I support the motion—and again I say without any qualification—is the time has come to tell the truth; which I realize to an awful lot of people, although not necessarily in this chamber, is a rather painful experience.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): It's unparliamentary.

Mr. Drea: That's right. For almost 100 years we in Canada have relied upon this little textbook maxim — and I'm sure it goes back to the old common readers — that the municipalities, even when they were townships, cow paths, crossroad towns, were the creatures and the creation of a rather benevolent if somewhat remote province.

We carried on that charade until the provinces lost their fiscal authority, when in a moment of bewildered stratagem, I suppose it was, they turned over the collection of income tax to the federal government, and as such they wound up losing their treasuries. At that point the federal government again took great consolation and great relief in that maxim, that somehow the municipalities were the creatures of the province and somehow the federal government would arrange, either by keeping taxes down or leaving more to be raised by the provinces, or by raising taxes and funnelling them back in cost-shared programmes, that the municipalities would be taken care of.

The progress of government in this country for the last century, regardless that it was slow at the beginning, that little was done in the Depression or that it was temporarily interrupted by the wars, has meant more services to people year by year. The municipality was only set up to provide the solutions to certain material problems. The municipality was set up in the beginning as a method of determining, not land use, but land right. A person went into a township and fenced off his farm. He was part of the township. He paid for some very basic services — the policemen, some type of fire protection and so on.

When education became expensive — and here I disagree with the hon. member for St. George — I don't think education has any place in this particular kind of debate. Because long ago we segregated the local board of education from the operations of the municipal council. We did that very deliberately.

But the municipality today whether it is a township or a numbered township in northern Ontario, which is administered directly by the province since it is unorganized territory, or a borough the size of the one where I reside and part of which I have the honour to represent — neither one of those governments was ever intended to serve people.

Just today I got a very nice document from the Ministry of Community and Social Services. It told me how much money was going to recreation in Scarborough this year. I'm very grateful for it, but for the whole borough of Scarborough it is about $43,000. Now that sounds like a lot of money for kids playing baseball and so on, but, the recreation needs of the borough where I reside are estimated at $38 million over the next 10 years. And that's only to bring us, by 1983, to the point where we should have been in 1968.

Why are we in that predicament? We are neither any better run nor any worse run than any other municipality. We are in this recreation predicament because of the housing policies of the federal government. When other areas wouldn't take NHA housing and the small NHA lot, Scarborough was betwixt and between and eventually, because of our low tax base, through some grants and so on and so forth, we got it. We had a proliferation of single-family houses. There were no parks—nothing, just house after house after house. Then along came the provincial government after the federal government and its Ontario Housing Corp. policy forced us into untenable recreation programme.

Recreation is one of the new services for people. It wasn't here 100 years ago. You went in your backyard. Now there aren't any backyards. After the federal government was done, the provincial government came in, and through the proliferation of Ontario Housing again, there was a tremendous need for recreation of $38 million over 10 years. There is no possible way that this borough can provide that; it can't raise the taxes, it can't do anything else about it.

Certainly everything the member for York-Forest Hill has said about the federal government and its attitude towards urban affairs is remarkably correct. I suppose this is going to bring about some kind of an uproar in here, but I am a great admirer of the municipal capabilities of the hon. member for York-Forest Hill. When he went to Ottawa a great number of people in urban areas thought that finally, here is somebody who has enough prestige and personality, enough clout and personally enough brains and enough dedication, that we're going to ram it through some of these lunkhead civil servants in Ottawa that we do need a better break in urban areas. And what happened to him? He's lucky he got back to Toronto alive.

Now, we are back into the same problem here. Last year, with all the fanfare — and let's forget about the Confederation of Tomorrow, what was it, a conference on confederation or something, in 1967. Noble ideals gone again — we went into this. Again we dragoon the poor municipality in. We pull it in by the shirt and we say: "Now, look, we're going to sit down and look at your problems."

We in the Province of Ontario are not interested in urban problems. If we were we wouldn't have got the urban communities into these crazy cost-shared programmes. We sit here, this government — and so does every other provincial government in this country — we sit here and we say we don't want any more of these cost-shared programmes with the federal government because they dictate the terms. Along with the money that comes in, they dictate the terms.

What do we do when we have a chance? When we get the federal money — and we get it in social services and we get it under the table in universities, we get it all over the place — we then dictate to the poor municipalities. There's red tape between us and the feds? You should take a look at the red tape between us and the poor municipality, and it's even worse for the poor crossroads place.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The member should form his own political party.

Mr. Drea: I say to you that the time has come when we've got to be honest. Urban governments are now faced with the problems that were never foreseen by anyone who had anything to do with the British North America Act. Again, I agree with the member that the British North America Act will not be repatriated as the Constitution in our time. I wish it could be but it won't be. In the meantime, Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto and such little side adventures as Mississauga, Cambridge, north Pickering, are not going to wait for a repatriation of the Constitution.

Again, there are some simple solutions being put forward; a one or two per cent income tax; or, let the city levy its own sales tax. These things have been tried in the United States as last desperate measures to try and revive city life — well, they haven't even got an urban society any more. They failed there.

So what the motion is proposing is that instead of all these sham conferences, where they bring everybody in with his dicky suit and take his picture and everybody is supposed to be having a great time and nothing happens, there should be a permanent body. That, to me, makes eminent good sense. The people who work in municipalities and are faced with the terrible proposition of having programmes and not being able to find the money, know where the problems are.

Secondly, I say to you that that kind of a thing will do more for the type of urban Conservatism as represented by such people as the pride of the Eglinton Progressive Conservative Association, Dave Crombie, the Mayor of Toronto, and myself, a little bit further in the suburbs. This will do more to end this nonsense of building a 20-storey apartment house because it will get you taxes. It might get you taxes for two years but it will get you grief for the next 38.

The time has come where we've got to stop playing lip service and bringing the municipalities in as some kind of a juvenile delinquent who is on parole. There are people in the smaller areas, I say to you with a great deal of candour, who can spend money in a wiser fashion than some of the things that we in this area do and the federal government does. So, without qualification, without any type of nit-picking, I am very proud to support the motion of the member for York-Forest Hill. I think it exemplifies the type of thinking that he has always brought to the urban-municipal field. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That concludes the private members' hour.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the estimates of the Attorney General be referred to the standing estimates committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder-Bay): Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification, does this mean that it is possible that the standing committee on estimates may be dealing with those particular estimates tomorrow evening, concurrently with the House and during the windup of the debate on the Throne Speech?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Just after the budget speech.

An hon. member: Not until after the budget.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): It could be. I see nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Stokes: Is it or isn't it?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It could be. It probably will be, but the move is being made so that the committee—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Well, the House leader has got to be more specific than that.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: —can constitute itself tomorrow. As to what the committee does, it is in its own hands. I'm not going to dictate to the members what they do.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The House Leader runs the business of the House and members on this side would like to hear the windup of the Throne Speech debate. I'm sure the NDP members do, also. Surely we can put off the estimates of the Attorney General until after that?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That will be determined by the committee when it constitutes itself.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I'm calling the order of the business of the House. I don't wish to dictate what different areas do. While we are at it, I would like to outline what will happen in the course of the week.

On Thursday, of course, we will have the budget; at the conclusion of the budget, I think it's been traditional that the House adjourn. On Friday morning, we will either proceed here with estimates which will be announced, or second readings. I will let that be known at the earliest possible opportunity.

I'm not prepared at this moment to call the exact order of business for next week but for the information of members I would hope that the House would sit next week on Monday, including Monday evening; Tuesday; Tuesday evening; and Wednesday; and that we would adjourn on Wednesday, April 18, at 6 o'clock until Tuesday, April 24.

That would give us the sitting hours of the week so that we can return to our homes and constituencies on Wednesday evening for the balance of the Easter weekend.

Mr. B. Newman: The House will close at 6 o'clock on Wednesday?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, that is correct. I will also endeavour to inform the House, certainly before the weekend, what the business of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday will be.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

---

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Apart from our very special guests, we have in the east gallery today students from Humbercrest Senior Public School of Toronto and from McLaughlin Collegiate Institute of Oshawa. In the west gallery there are students from Deer Park Senior Public School of Toronto and Sheridan College of Oakville.

At 3 o'clock we will be joined by students from Belle River High School of Belle River.

KINGSTON TRICENTENARY

Hon. C. J. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, may I beg your indulgence for a moment in order to—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): It certainly requires some justification.

Hon. Mr. Apps: —make a short announcement which, I'm sure, will be of interest to all members of the Legislature. As they may know, Kingston this year is celebrating its 300th anniversary.

Members will find on their desks a brochure which outlines the great number of ceremonies and events that are taking place in Kingston during this year. They will see that we will be honoured in having the Queen visit us on June 27. We have a homecoming week from July 9 to July 15. During that time, on July 13, we will have a new landing by Count Frontenac.

I would hope that all members of the Legislature would visit us during this coming year. I can assure them that they will receive a very warm welcome. In the words of our mayor, "Kingston is justifiably proud of its position in the history of Ontario and Canada. I urge all citizens and visitors to join with us as we make 1973 a truly enjoyable and memorable year."

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Can we stay at the minister's house?

Hon. Mr. Apps: A warm invitation is given to all members of the Legislature to come and visit us.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The minister looks better in the dress of the 19th century than that of the 20th.

Hon. Mr. Apps: As members will see, I am wearing a costume—

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): The 17th century actually.

Hon. Mr. Apps: —similar to that which was worn a great deal during those years.

It is my pleasure to introduce to the House at this time in the Speaker's gallery his worship the mayor of Kingston, George Speal and Mrs. Speal.

I would like to introduce to members as well, the chairman of the Kingston tricentenary committee, Mr. Wally Viner and Mrs. Viner, and the wife of the member for Kingston and the Islands, Mrs. Apps.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): She is better looking than the minister is.

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Who isn't?

Hon. Mr. Apps: We would be delighted if after the question period the members would come in twos and threes—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Maybe ones or twos.

Hon. Mr. Apps: —so that we will always have a quorum in the House, to room 247 in order to say hello to our mayor and the delightful gentlemen and ladies who have come down from Kingston this afternoon in order to make sure that everyone in this Legislature knows about our tricentenary project. We will welcome the members very much and would appreciate it if they would just come in and say hello at that time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox): I'd like that wig when the minister is finished with it.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Hon. C. Bennett (Minister of Industry and Tourism): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): The minister is standing, Mr. Speaker.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING OF INDUSTRY MINISTERS

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House about the federal-provincial meeting of industry ministers held yesterday in the city of Ottawa.

The discussion, hosted by the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, covered a wide range of topics of interest to both levels of government, and were both useful and informative. Among the subjects we discussed were national industrial policies, Canada-US relations, the GATT trade negotiations, assistance to small businesses, and the federal government's Bill C-132, the Foreign Investment Review Act.

Ontario pressed during these discussions, Mr. Speaker, for full and complete prior consultation between the federal and provincial governments on any of these areas that are of direct concern to both the provinces and the federal government. May I say that in the case of the Foreign Investment Review Act, we succeeded in getting a commitment from the federal government that before any decision is made on a foreign takeover the provincial government will be able to see the full and complete file on the matter—I might inform the House here that there was an indication by the minister that the complete file would be available at the request of the province at any time during the review—and will be able to make recommendations concerning the decision by the government.

We also found, Mr. Speaker, that there is a wide-ranging consensus among the provinces for more consultation on matters of international interest such as the GATT negotiations, and the federal government was made aware of the need for provincial input before any decisions are made relating to subjects which are of prime concern to the provinces. The federal government also agreed to consult with the provinces on these matters and our officials will be meeting with officials in Ottawa to draw up further agendas which will produce results for provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development: In view of the fact that the damage from high lake levels seem to far surpass what was envisaged in the minister's previous statement, can he report to the Legislature any further assistance or programmes designed to assist the communities which have been so seriously damaged in the last 24 hours and which are still under a very serious threat of further damage?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, one programme that is being assessed by the government—I think I mentioned it the other day—relates to a system of guaranteed loans to be made available to those who suffered damage and need the ready cash to repair it. Whether or not we decide to go this route, of course, will depend on the government as a whole but it is being seriously assessed as to its Treasury and administrative implications.

Also, we are waiting upon the federal government to come to some—

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): The floods aren't waiting.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence:—decision with regard to the availability and use of the armed forces.

Mr. Cassidy: The floods aren't waiting.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: As I understand it, the armed forces have available some 2,000 men in the Petawawa area and perhaps another 600 in the London area, with incidental supporting technical people and engineers.

My conversations with the hon. Jack Davis in Ottawa suggested the federal government is prepared to consider releasing armed forces to Ontario for work along the shorelines on some basis other than the existing one, which would require either the province or the municipalities involved to totally underwrite their cost.

It would be impossible under present circumstances, I think, to sign a blank cheque to the armed forces of Canada, not knowing what the cost of their operation in the province would be. But Mr. Davis has advised me that in the days ahead he and the government in Ottawa will be considering some kind of formula so that we in government can have some support, as it were, in the presence of the forces, some knowledge of what those costs would involve, and we ourselves would be in a position to equate the impact of calling in the armed forces.

I may also say that the federal government has moved to place a number of troops, soldiers primarily, in positions in this province, so that when the decisions are made in Ottawa and in Toronto they can immediately be released for action.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Supplementary question: Why doesn't the minister proceed immediately to make whatever is necessary available to the people on the lakefront? The minister must surely know—or does he know—of the havoc that was wreaked last evening, as was predicted by me some three weeks ago?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Did the member see it in his crystal ball?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: The programme being offered by the government is useless.

Mr. J. M. Jessiman (Fort William): The member walked on water three weeks ago.

Mr. Deans: The government's programme is useless at the moment. It does no good at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. minister have any response? No?

The hon. member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): I have a question of the provincial secretary. Does the minister have any experienced engineers in his department that he could make available to the municipalities in Kent county and Essex, such as Erievau and Erie Beach, that had a severe storm yesterday, so that they would be able to go down and advise the people in some way how they could protect their homes?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Through the Ministry of Natural Resources, and I believe other departments that are clustered together under the chairmanship of the task force headed by Walter Giles of the Ministry of Natural Resources, we can respond to that kind of request. Indeed, they are coming in from all parts of the province involved in the erosion and the flooding problems.

Walter Giles is the key co-ordinator there and he has resources available, not only from the technical and engineering point of view, but I would point out to the member for Wentworth, we are doing the best to make other equipment and other expertise available as we have it.

Mr. Deans: What has the minister made available in Saltfleet township?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: It's the—

Mr. Deans: What has he made available?

Mr. Speaker: It's the New Democratic Party's turn. The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): I have a supplementary. How long will the minister and the cabinet engage in these endless considerations while the emergency accelerates? Why is it not possible for them to abandon their nonsensical 80-20 formula, their dollar for dollar, their endless studies about what can be done, and move in and provide the money that is required now for a really impossible crisis for thousands of homeowners along the lakes? How long will they consider it before they act?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: What are they taking so much time for?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: We are not taking any particular time. We have announced at least two programmes and—

Mr. Lewis: Programmes?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —the money is there for the disaster fund—

Mr. Lewis: Sure—if the municipality starts to pay.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: —the money is there for the municipal 80-20 sharing, and I have a strong feeling that on individual loans we will be able to support the people in a very few days. We are ready to act on those two. Some municipalities are acting with us. The programmes, I think, are fair. We simply cannot—perhaps the leader of the NDP could, but we simply cannot—stop the waters, we cannot stop the storms, nor can we promise the owners of 900-odd miles of shoreline that we will protect them and compensate them from the Treasury of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: But don't take so long.

Mr. Jessiman: The member for Wentworth can walk on water.

Mr. Deans: I wish I could.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: Twenty years they have been waiting.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order please. The hon. member for Rainy River has a supplementary.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because private industry will not, will the minister consider initiating an insurance policy, based on a 20-year cycle, so that the homeowners and cottage owners can protect themselves?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that is very much worth considering. After the last high water, of course, the interest in protection drops with the water, but I would say that's a concrete suggestion and I think the government would have to take it into consideration.

May I say in parenthesis that, let alone the private owners as such, the marina owners are experiencing devastating losses. I was talking to their president a few hours ago and their ballpark figures are running into $30 million to $40 million of damage, which can only increase throughout the rest of this year. So we certainly have a ready public if we should—and I think we must—consider presenting some kind of an insurance package.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another question?

Mr. Speaker: I think four supplementaries are a reasonable number.

Mr. Deans: But just for clarification of a point made.

Mr. Speaker: I think it would necessarily have to be a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Well, this really is a matter of urgent importance.

Mr. Deans: You don't understand the problem—really you don't.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I think I do. The question was asked; the Speaker can provide for a reasonable number of supplementaries. This is what the members of the House asked for.

Mr. Deans: This is useless. This is a crisis, for heaven's sake!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

ADOPTION OF FOREIGN CHILDREN

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question that I would like to put to the Provincial Secretary for Justice, in the absence of the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle).

What legal recourse exists for Dr. Robert K. Ferrie of Burlington who has been stopped by this government in his attempts to get the proper documents from the Minister of Community and Social Services to bring in his two young adopted sons from Vietnam?

Secondly, can the minister explain why the government policy should have changed in this connection, when in the past the acceptance of an adoption under the laws of another nation has always been automatic? Why is it not automatic in this connection?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not fully aware of the latest situation regarding Dr. Ferrie's plans for adoption of children from Vietnam—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They are adopted legally. They have passports; they have got tickets. They are being kept out by this government.

Mr. Lewis: By administrative procedure.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think the information I have, and what I have read, is to the effect that the Ministry of Community and Social Services requires assurance that in fact they have been legally approved as far as the Vietnamese government is concerned—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Try making a phone call.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Also, I believe, part of this consideration is whether or not the Ferrie family itself intends to keep those children. If Dr. Ferrie intends to adopt the children himself, then of course this particular point is settled. However, if the children are to go to another family in Ontario, then again the Ministry of Community and Social Services would be involved in some way.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Would the minister undertake to personally look into the problems which he says are in existence at present and satisfy himself one way or the other and report to the House without delay, since the facts that he presents seem to be completely at variance with those presented by Dr. Ferrie, who has stated publicly that the adoption has been completed and is legally recognized. The immigration of these two young people simply awaits a statement from this government that the requirements have been satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, all I would say is that I wish Dr. Ferrie, who happens to be a constituent of mine, would write to me or talk with me. He lives about two blocks away.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I guess he must be Liberal.

Mr. Lewis: Why should he have to do that?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Maybe the minister should contact him.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The constituent contacts the member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, the constituent contacts the member! Well, I wouldn't want the minister to condescend to contact a constituent of his, no!

Interjections by hon. members.

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS ON REGIONALIZATION

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the provincial Treasurer, Mr. Speaker? Given the endless array of statements in apparent conflict over regional government emanating from the minister, the Premier (Mr. Davis) and yesterday from the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), can he provide for the House a statement of the overall intentions of government for that part of Ontario not now covered by regional government?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): If I may spend just a minute, Mr. Speaker, eliminating the "apparent contradictions," which I think are not contradictions at all, here is the situation.

We have certain proposals in front of the public dealing with east of Metro, Peel, Halton, and Hamilton-Wentworth. These proposals are simply that; no decisions have been made. Decisions will have to be made, of course, within the next few weeks. I am not willing to proceed with any one of these proposals until such time as we have evaluated the reaction from councillors and electors.

I think each of these areas can be treated somewhat differently. I don't think the solution for east of Metro is necessarily the solution that should be imposed, let us say, upon Hamilton-Wentworth. I think that in this matter, as in many other matters, we have to learn how to give heterogeneous treatment across the province to a complicated matter.

Applying that philosophy to the question asked by the leader of the NDP, I think there will be no particular model equally adaptable to northern Ontario and the county of Essex. My hope is that we can work with these counties and municipalities, whether it be Essex and Windsor or Sarnia and Lambton, to assist them to find a solution acceptable and adaptable to their region.

In this respect, I am taking a look at existing legislation to see what might be attempted by way of change to facilitate some kind of evolution toward a stronger county system, perhaps, in some instances.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: When that study has been completed internally, I would hope to be able to give a somewhat more precise explanation of our viewpoint.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): A complete ripoff.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Cassidy: That applause is amazing!

Mr. Lewis: Well, that's relief, let me tell the minister. That's an expression of his colleagues' relief.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): The minister knows almost as much as the NDP!

Mr. Lewis: I'm interested in what the Treasurer is saying; perhaps he can provide just a further step in the analysis. What he is saying is that the announced intention of his predecessor for regional government units across the Province of Ontario, announced or legislated by 1975, has, in fact, altered and beyond anything presently intended he has now decided to retreat to the county units or reinforced county units and that the whole programme has been jettisoned in his terms?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. Hodgson: The member has been listening to the Liberals.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, there was never any such programme. In all my years here I have never—

Mr. Lewis: That's one of the most comic comments the Treasurer has made.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): By 1975, the former minister said.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this cuts pretty deeply. Take my own home town; there has never been any mention at Queen's Park about regionalizing London-Middlesex.

Mr. Lewis: London was meant to be a separate fiefdom.

Hon. Mr. White: For the members of the opposition to go trooping through Huron county—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: —making a claim to the contrary is a complete and absolute falsehood.

Mr. Lewis: I didn't hear but I think the minister accused me of a falsehood. I would like him to withdraw that.

Hon. Mr. White: I used my own part of Ontario as an illustration. I have never, since 1959, heard any suggestion from the member for Kent or any other person in our caucus that we were going to regionalize London—

Mr. Lewis: Can the Treasurer forget him so quickly?

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute. I am repeating this because the member didn't hear it the first time. I said those members of the opposition who trooped through Huron county during the by-election saying something to the contrary were telling a falsehood.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question of the minister.

In light of the minister's comments last week and then again today concerning Windsor and the Essex county area, and knowing that the minister would like to see that the input on the reorganization came from the local areas, is the minister willing to provide funds to the communities—to Windsor and Essex county—so that they can hire staff and go into an in-depth study of the reorganization of government so that they can come up with the answer themselves as to the type of government they would like to have?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, that is one possibility, Mr. Speaker, that I am investigating.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Will the Treasurer indicate, in an area where there might be some confusion from various statements emanating from himself and the Premier, what the disposition in the Hamilton-Wentworth area is at the present time?

Hon. Mr. White: There is no confusion here at all. There is only a variety of interpretations placed by people who want to make trouble.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The minister is referring to the Premier, is he?

Mr. Lewis: The minister wouldn't say that if the Premier were sitting beside him.

Hon. Mr. White: I read the Premier's remarks in yesterday's Hansard and he has said exactly what I said—namely, that there has been no decision made with respect to Hamilton-Wentworth; that the proposals put before the people on January 23 are still under consideration;—

Mr. Lewis: Right!

Hon. Mr. White: —that as part of this deliberation process we are conferring with the Hamilton and Wentworth councils, as I did at noon today; and I was interested to see that no Liberal or NDP members accepted my invitation to be there.

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to you, sir, that the members of this caucus were not invited to the meeting; we have never been invited to the meeting—the government has attempted to keep us out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was invited to the meeting of Hamilton council on Friday and he came.

Mr. Deans: I was not invited, I asked.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! This is purely an argument.

Hon. Mr. White: He was invited to the meeting today and he didn't come.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Deans: That is a lie.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

The hon. member for Wentworth will please withdraw the remark.

Mr. Deans: I can't withdraw it, because it is true.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has accused the minister of uttering a lie.

Mr. Deans: I will withdraw that statement if the minister will withdraw his.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will withdraw the statement.

Mr. Deans: I can't withdraw it.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): He would be lying if he withdrew the statement.

Hon. Mr. White: I issued instructions to invite the MPPs from the area. If this gentleman was not available, then I suppose he didn't get the message.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member withdraw the statement then?

Mr. Deans: No! I will reword it that the minister misled the House.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that I can't accept that; I direct the hon. member to withdraw the statement.

I direct the hon. member for the last time to withdraw the statement.

Mr. Deans: I withdraw the statement. I have to; I have no choice—I want to speak today.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The minister doesn't care. He sits there smiling like a Cheshire cat. He doesn't care about the havoc for his party. He is resigning. That will be his legacy.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: I was not invited.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the—

Mr. MacDonald: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I must intervene here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order. I must intervene.

Mr. Speaker: my point of order is this: The hon. member for Wentworth was forced to withdraw his statement—and I draw to your attention not a single member of the Liberals or NDP were at the meeting because they didn't receive the information the minister allegedly conveyed to them. Now, under those circumstances, then I think the contention that they got an invitation and didn't attend was a lie or a misconception.

Mr. Deans: Damn right it was! And it wasn't a misconception.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: My hon. friend, I am perfectly sure, will accept my word when I say I instructed my staff to make it clear that the press were welcome to this meeting as were MPPs from the area.

Mr. MacDonald: How come nobody got their invitations?

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute please. If this message failed to reach certain members of the press gallery or certain members of the Legislature—

Mr. MacDonald: They weren't invited. Nobody invited them.

Hon. Mr. White: —that was contrary to my instructions and a matter of imperfection in communications.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute. I have attempted to get an input from all possible sources, e.g., from the council, the city, the area—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute. —the city, the county, the MPPs and other interested persons; why should I exclude any of these people?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely we can have some order in the chamber. This is a question period.

Mr. Deans: Why should we come to order?

Mr. Speaker: Well, if the hon. members don't wish it, I assure you I am not going to waste my time trying to gain it.

Mr. Lewis: All right then, don't gain it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: How come nobody got an invitation?

Mr. Lewis: If the minister can't organize a luncheon, how is he going to reorganize Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber (Mr. Leluk).

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Scarborough West has further questions.

ONTARIO NORTHLAND RAILWAY

Mr. Lewis: A question of the docile, uncontroversial, lamb-like Minister of Transportation and Communications: What is it about the Ontario Northland Railway which makes the runs through so-called mid-Canada uneconomic; and why has his ministry supported the ONR in its wish to discontinue those runs through northeastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: I was surprised that the hon. member for Wentworth wasn't interested enough to come to the party.

Mr. Deans: I wasn't invited.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: The Treasurer knows I wasn't invited. I was here at 9:30 this morning.

Mr. Stokes: What do you say about that interjection, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. White: We had a place for him.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Tell him we will pick him up on the train and take him.

An hon. member: Mrs. Calabash can go the next time.

Mr. Deans: Sure he did. I've got a place for him.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, firstly, I would point out that the Ontario Northland is, I understand, probably the only railroad on the continent that made a profit last year.

Mr. Lewis: Why does the minister discontinue passenger service?

Hon. Mr. Carton: We are not discontinuing passenger service.

Mr. Cassidy: But the minister applied to.

Mr. Lewis: I thought he applied to.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Ah, you put the member up to it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: I would advise this Legislature with respect to the ONR—the ONTC, in fact, and not just the ONR, because there are other aspects of the ONTC—at present under my ministry and through the policy field we are having a complete look at the ONR and its role in northern Ontario. I, for one, might add that I think there can be a role for the ONR in northern Ontario, apart from the one presently being carried on. I must say that it is a very efficiently run operation. There are aspects, that I'm looking at, whereby the government of this province should take into consideration some social aspects of the ONR that perhaps we could in turn subsidize, leaving the railway free to look after the proper duties and responsibilities of a railroad in the north.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, if I understand the minister, he is not really happy then about the effort to discontinue passenger service that the ONR is providing in mid-Canada?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on! The government made a submission to the transportation commission to discontinue routes.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Jessiman: Where?

Mr. Lewis: The ONR through what they call mid-Canada.

Mr. Jessiman: What route?

Mr. Cassidy: The mid-Canada passenger route on the ONR.

Mr. Speaker: This is out of order.

Mr. Lewis: I'm sorry. I don't think the question is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The comments, the speech, the interjections, and so on, that the hon.

member has been making, are not part of the question period.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask why did—

Mr. Jessiman: What destination?

Mr. Lewis: Well, that is very interesting.

Mr. Jessiman: Which one? Which destination? Let the member get his facts straight.

Mr. Lewis: I have two questions then. Why did the ONR appeal to the CTC for a discontinuance of its mid-Canada routes in northern Ontario?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Now just hold on a moment! Since the chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway doesn't know his railway made that submission to the CTC—

Mr. Jessiman: Oh, yes he does.

Mr. Lewis: —perhaps he should be removed from the chairmanship along with the vice-chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: That will be dethroning incompetence.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a supplementary question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, following from his statement that he is looking at the purpose of the ONR. Why doesn't he just return to its basic purpose, that it is a development road, a railroad which has this as its basic reason for existence, and simply build on that? We are glad, and everyone supports his statement that it's a good thing to make a profit, but would he not agree that it's far better to return to its primary purpose and that is for the development of northeastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, all I can answer to the hon. Leader of the Opposition is that he must have been listening in on my conversations during the last six months.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think we've had enough discussion on that topic.

Mr. N. G. Leluk (Humber): Mr. Speaker, my question, referring to the extensive damage as a result of the high level of Lake Ontario in the Mimico area yesterday, has already been asked by the opposition.

Mr. Sargent: Somebody speak to him.

Mr. Speaker: Was the question directed to one of the ministers?

Mr. Cassidy: It was withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Environment has the answer to a question previously asked.

ESPANOLA WATER CONDITION

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Good) asked me about correspondence which I had been sent from the town of Espanola. The letter was from the assistant clerk of the corporation of the town of Espanola and requested my ministry to undertake an investigation to locate the reasons for the pools of black water appearing on the surface of lakes in the Espanola area.

I may say that the letter came in when I was on my way to Sudbury and my own staff took it to our own water people rather than waiting until I returned, which I think is quite proper. My ministry was investigating this matter prior to receipt of a similar request from Espanola.

On March 16, inspectors from the water quality branch and the air management branch obtained samples from the black water puddles. These samples are undergoing detailed chemical analysis which, when completed, should allow staff to identify the material present and perhaps the source. I have today written to the town council to inform them that if the source of the pollution is determined to be industrial, suitable measures will be taken to prevent a similar reoccurrence, and for the information of the hon. member for Waterloo North, I will give him a copy of my reply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. David has a question.

Mr. Foulds: That's two Conservatives in a row, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I don't think so. The previous one was an answer to a question.

RYERSON RADIO STATION

Mrs. M. Scrivener (St. David): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. Can the minister inform the House as to whether the Ryerson radio station CJRT will be permitted to continue its operation for the next year?

Mr. Deans: That was asked a week ago.

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, as of the moment, that's a matter for Ryerson to decide.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Could the minister indicate, further to his statement a week or 10 days ago, whether or not additional funds from other sources have been allocated by his ministry for the assistance of Ryerson in keeping that radio station on the air?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, the question as to how we might or might not help Ryerson with respect to this radio station is still to be determined.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: If so, then it is really up to the ministry and not Ryerson at this stage?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I think that that's not an appropriate statement. I think that Ryerson still have it within their prerogatives to fund this radio station if they choose to. I was talking to the chairman of the board of governors as recently as today at noon, and they're looking at this whole question. This might well be regarded as a higher priority in their reassessment. That's up to them at this particular moment.

Mr. Lewis: General welfare recipients can eat at La Scala but they don't have the money!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. About a month ago today the Lands and Forests King Air plane crash-landed at Goderich and did about $100,000 damage. It could have been worse; the Premier could have been killed and we would have had the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) to look after now—

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member ask the question?

Mr. Sargent: I've been looking through the records of the Treasury and I can't find where the Conservative Party paid rent for the plane that day. Is it the minister's practice to do his electioneering on government planes?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, I'll take this question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development regarding a legal aspect of the flooding problem along the shores of the lower Great Lakes: In a community of lakeshore residents, where nine out of 10 may be making great emergency efforts to protect their property with sandbags and other devices, has any government at any level any emergency powers to place, or have placed or allow to be placed, sandbags or other protective devices on the property of the owner who is not, for one reason or another, co-operating in the emergency and thereby jeopardizing the efforts of all the rest?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, it does raise a legal question. It is one I mentioned in the House the other day, that bedevils the whole question of what we do on what legal base. My understanding is that the Supreme Court of Canada is at the moment seized of a case involving lakeshore owners and the province in the perennial discussions that have gone on over the years as to who does own the shore along the lakes and to what extent that ownership is tied to the low or high water level. I would think that until this, and perhaps other cases in the Supreme Court of Canada, establish the title to the shores themselves there can be no satisfactory answer to the question.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. Burr: No.

Mr. Speaker: All right; the hon. Minister of Revenue has the answer to a question previously asked.

ELIZABETH GARDENS PROJECT

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on March 30 I was asked by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Bounsall) if I was aware, as he put it, that the same contractor that built Elizabeth Gardens in Windsor has approval to construct a set of similar units on Union Blvd. in that city. I am advised, sir, that OHC is not involved in any way with the Union Blvd. site.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

ONTARIO HYDRO LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Since it is now over six months since the Hydro arbitration committee was struck and no decision has yet been handed down, when can we expect action to relieve the plight of the strikers, the employees of Hydro?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I didn't hear the question from my hon. friend. Would he mind repeating it?

Mr. Deacon: Since it is over six months since the Hydro arbitration committee was struck and no decision has yet been handed down, when can we expect a decision to help the employees?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this matter, of course, has been sent to an arbitration board. I am given to understand the chairman of the board, Dean R. S. Mackay, is working steadily on this matter. I would presume a decision should come down fairly soon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

AIR POLLUTION IN TORONTO

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): A question of the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister care to comment on the Touhey report, which was released yesterday in Los Angeles, which states that in Toronto our pollution problem will be as serious as that of Los Angeles within five years because of the over-building of service stations, car washes and highrises?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of this report, and does he intend to take any action about it if he is or is not aware of it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am now aware of it, Mr. Speaker, and I will get a copy of it. Having had experience with my hon. friend about other reports, I would like to read it before I comment on it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North.

JAIL SENTENCE FOR KEEPING DOGS

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A question of the Attorney General: Has the Attorney General investigated claims made by officials of the Ontario Humane Society that one Matthew James Varey, aged 82, was serving a 40-day jail sentence because the township of Mono was out to get him in relation to keeping dogs in unauthorized locations?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, that was a case of a breach of a municipal bylaw in that particular township. The sentence has been handed down and it may be subject to appeal.

Mr. Good: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In the investigation that the Attorney General has done, is he aware of the claim that every time the gentleman concerned moved his kennel from one location to another on his property the township changed its bylaw to get him?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, Mr. Speaker, but I checked into the matter generally. It is subject to appeal.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Deans: A question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development: Has the provincial secretary reconsidered his programme for flood control, and will he please make available to individuals, on the 80-20 basis, the money that is at present available only to municipalities for flood control efforts which are at present underway in the area of Lake Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the guidelines spelling out in more detail the statement I made the week before last in the Legislature will be going out this afternoon.

With regard to the latter part of the question as to whether or not the 80-20 could be applied for individual protection, this has been raised but I do not know how we could plunge into the administration of such a formula on that basis. Our feeling was that it was a generous and responsible thing to offer to municipalities.

I think the hon. member's problem probably arises out of those municipalities which perhaps, in his opinion and mine, are not acting responsibly. All I can say is that we are very concerned with this. If we find that, in general, a large number of the municipalities are not responding to the 80-20 offer we will have to reassess it. At the moment I find it difficult to see how we can adequately and immediately administer such a thing on an individual basis.

Hon. Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

EARLY LEARNING PROGRAMME

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education: I wonder if he could advise this House who, on the task force studying the matter of the early programme, represents the board of education or the junior kindergarten aspect of this question?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the members of this task force are members of various government departments. If it can be said that they represent any particular interest, they represent their ministries. They don't represent particular segments, junior kindergarten teachers as opposed to community college graduates. There are people from various ministries on that task force but they all are government people, except for one who has been specially seconded.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could I know who is the chairman of that task force, because my information was that the chairman was related to the co-operative nursery school portion of the community? Is that incorrect?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I can't say whether he is related to the co-operative daycare programme.

Mrs. Campbell: I thought, Mr. Speaker, it was one of those "shes" that we heard about.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He, incidentally, is responsible to and appointed by my—

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Is it a he or a she?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is a he.

Mr. Lewis: It is good that the government is discussing early childhood education with a male chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He is directly responsible to my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. The committee was set up by the policy field and it is an inter-ministry committee. I'll get that information for the member. I'll tell her who—

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary, if I may: Is it the minister's understanding that at some point in time before the report is brought down, this committee or task force will, in fact, at least speak with those engaged in the field of educational programming, since it hasn't done so to date?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised to hear that it hasn't done so to date because it was my understanding that all those interested in this very important matter had made presentations either to the task force or to people concerned with the task force. If the member would like to give me the name of the group I'll see if they have, in fact, been in or why they haven't had a chance to present their brief.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: How many people are on the task force on early childhood education and how many are women?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'll have to get that answer for the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: I would appreciate it, as it is an appropriate area for parity.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think that's right, but I think that it is also appropriate the member know that the responsibility for raising children, whether they be young or old, rests jointly with women and men. So let us—

An hon. member: There should be women involved then!

Mr. Lewis: It is a dual responsibility. It would be nice to have some women involved then, wouldn't it?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I can assure the hon. member that women are involved in all stages of education.

Mr. Lewis: That's right, except where the decisions are made.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege. On Friday, I am told, the hon. Minister of Natural Resources took a few shots at me.

Mr. Jessiman: That's what the paper said.

Mr. Sargent: He said I had said that I had seen him putting cases of booze and other ministers on the plane at the Island Airport. I said I had seen them loading cases of booze on the plane at the Island Airport. He further said, Mr. Speaker, that I must have been looking in a mirror.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Right!

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the way they pass this off. These are very serious charges. They want to cover up the fact they are using these planes for illicit purposes; and I'd like the minister to apologize for that remark.

Mr. Roy: The minister ought to be ashamed of himself. He should apologize on his knees.

Mr. Sargent: Come on! See what happens here!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not, of course, have any point of privilege as nearly as I can determine.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, he has inferred I was loading booze on to my plane.

An hon. member: Does the member deny it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not have a point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: Are you going to allow him to do that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member does not have a point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: He can't back it up.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What was the member drinking?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before I call the first order of business—

Mr. Speaker: Order please! We have other routine proceedings.

Mr. Martel: Don't jump the gun!

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. Drea moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the intent of this bill is simple justice, because it would make it an offence to alter the reading of an odometer installed in a motor vehicle. At the moment that offence only pertains to a car dealer. This would eliminate the bucket-shops and drive aways.

Mr. Shulman: I already brought that bill in.

Mr. Drea: Did he?

Mr. Martel: Late again!

Mr. Stokes: The members can debate it jointly.

WASTE DISPOSAL AND RECLAMATION ACT

Mr. B. Newman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to establish the Ontario Waste Disposal and Reclamation Committee.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide solid waste disposal and reclamation services throughout the province, including incineration and landfill; to develop procedures and establish plants for the reclamation and recycling of paper, metal, glass and other materials; to study the methods of marketing reclaimed materials; and to provide waste collection services in areas where it would be uneconomical for local authorities to do so.

ADJUDICATURE ACT

Mr. Roy moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend the Adjudicature Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech of Feb. 29, 1972, the government promised that it intended to extend the bilingual services in court proceedings. At present, under section 127 of the Adjudicature Act, proceedings can take place only in English. This bill will allow the use of either language where all parties consent in an area where 10 per cent of the residents use French as a first language. With this amendment, as well, there will be an amendment coming in under section 9(4) of the Official Languages Act, allowing the use of French in the criminal courts.

With this amendment, Mr. Speaker, we will correct the ridiculous situation where, as in the national capital area, people have a choice of languages on one side of the river and only English on the other.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before I call the first order of business for the House, I would like to say, in making reference to rule No. 25, in regard to the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, that to facilitate the flow of business, the first order of business today will be order No. 18, committee of supply. In this way the Provincial Secretary may make his statement, which I understand is relatively brief; then I would ask that the committee rise and report so we can proceed with the conclusion of the Throne Speech debate.

I would expect that the votes will be taken at 10:30 this evening and, in regard to the order of speakers, I will allow that to remain with the whips of the various parties and expect that the conclusion will take place this evening in accordance with that rule.

Mr. Martel: There's no way and the minister knows it.

Mr. Cassidy: No way.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Now, so that the other parties will have an opportunity to reply to the Provincial Secretary for Justice, I am prepared to make arrangements that that item will be called first on Friday morning and that the other two parties will have the first two positions on Friday to reply to the Provincial Secretary. Following that, we would consider the estimates of the Ministry of the Solicitor General.

I think that's all I have to say in that regard. I call order No. 18.

Mr. Reid: Why do we have to go through this?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Surely the House leader must realize the position he is putting the opposition members in when he makes a statement like the one he has just completed.

He must surely recall that three weeks ago, when the House began, he undertook to tell all the members of the House on the Thursday or Friday of the preceding week what the business would be that would be under discussion. Yesterday, at the last minute, he moved that the estimates of the Ministry of the Attorney General be referred to the standing estimates committee. Now, all of a sudden, we're going to hear the policy minister make a brief statement when the House leader knows full well that it will be very late tonight by the time we complete the order of business which he has indicated he wants to complete before adjournment.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it would be good judgement on the House leader's part if he were to insist on this type of procedure—that on Friday we hear the policy minister for Justice, if there is something he wants to get off his chest. But to introduce him at this stage for a brief statement, or whatever it is, seems to be a complete nonsequitur, an irrational approach to the governance of the business of the House.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, that is not so, of course. I had felt that, before any ministry in the Justice policy field would be heard, the Provincial Secretary might be heard first. That was the reason—

Mr. Reid: Can't he be heard on Friday?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: —that I suggested he would go on today. There is no wish in my mind to change the order or to become argumentative. If it's satisfactory to the Provincial Secretary, it is certainly agreeable to me that he make the statement on Friday morning. He has just agreed to that course.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Very sensible!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Sensible or not, I believe that in the new course of events it would be my desire that the Provincial Secretary could make his statement in advance of any of the other ministers being heard.

However, that being the case—and it's very satisfactory to me—we can move directly on to order of business No. 1 following the previous suggestion that I made.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, before that order is called, I rise on a point of order. I ask you, sir, if the motion of the minister yesterday was, in fact, in order? I draw your attention to standing orders section 87, subsection (b) and (d), in which it says—(d) particularly—

There may be appointed at each session immediately following the presentation of the budget at least one standing committee which shall be charged with the responsibility of considering [etc.]

It seems to me, sir, that the motion as put yesterday by the House leader, in fact was out of order to begin with, because we haven't had the budget yet.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I don't think it was. I explained last week what the new course of events was. If it requires a change in the rules, I think we will have to consider that.

Mr. Reid: The minister can't change the rules unilaterally.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I would hope that in future years, despite what day the budget comes down, the estimates will be before the House prior to the end of the fiscal year. That will be my responsibility and I'll endeavour to have it that way. I think that's correct.

Mr. Reid: But the minister can't change the rules unilaterally.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The motion was agreed to. Was the member here?

Mr. Reid: I didn't agree to it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could start by congratulating you on the way in which you have been holding onto the chair for the last few days and express the hope that you and I will not have the contretemps we had last year. Also, maybe I should express the hope that when you hold discussions with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), as was recommended the other day by the member for Rainy River (Mr. Reid), you might suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that essentially that is where the problem in question periods really begins.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: The problem of the length of time occupied by the leaders of the opposition parties, Mr. Speaker, really relates to the Leader of the Opposition, who has insisted ever since I have been in this House on having three, four, five and six questions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: This time has, therefore, been matched by the leader of our party in order to have equality between the two parties. I think an agreement by the Leader of the Opposition to confine himself to one or two questions would be the greatest single reform in assuring private members—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy:—access to the question period here in the House.

I would hope the member for Rainy River and backbenchers in the Liberal Party who are concerned about this, Mr. Speaker, would talk to the leader of their own party rather than expressing pious hopes, either to the government or to you, for a reform of the question period. The problem begins right there to the right of me.

Now, that's enough about the Liberal Party.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Now the member has got off to a bad start.

Mr. Cassidy: Obviously I drew some sparks from the Liberal Party. I think they may protest a bit too much, Mr. Speaker. They may feel a certain guilt, knowing the truth of which I speak.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: Compared with the problems of the question period and the Liberal leader, the problems of the government, I think, are far more overwhelming for the future of the province, particularly in view of the fact that this province will never, ever have a Liberal government. The last one left office in 1943.

Mr. Gaunt: Don't be too sure!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I find it really difficult to analyse the other side of the House. I wish I had the talents and the training of the member for Parkdale (Mr. Dukszta) to define and discern precisely what is happening with the government.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I think the member needs his services; I don't know about his talents.

Mr. Cassidy: There seems to be a mixture of paranoia and schizophrenia there. When one compares the statements of the member for York East (Mr. Meen), the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White) and the Premier (Mr. Davis) on the question of regional government, this is certainly a sign of schizophrenia. For that matter, when one sees what the provincial Treasurer himself has had to say, there is obviously a glaring case of schizophrenia urgently in need of treatment.

The paranoia is reflected in the way in which the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario and other ministers have been lashing out at people outside the government and trying to load their own guilt and their own uncertainties—uncertainties which should not prevail with a government of the majority that it enjoys—onto outsiders.

The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) lashes out at ratepayer groups. The Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) sulkily refuses to answer questions about appointments and lashes out through television commercials—published at great expense to the taxpayers—at the patients of Medicare rather than at the doctors and the other people who control the costs of the system.

The Treasurer gratuitously launches an attack on the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans) for daring to raise the questions that people in the Hamilton area are raising about regional government and accuses him of meddling. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) lashes out at the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and at me for trying to articulate the problems of the school situation in Cornwall, when it is his own government which has been laggard and which has created the problem on which it was at the time unwilling to take any action to solve.

The government writhes and wriggles in this way, Mr. Speaker. On the one hand we get statements by the Premier that it ought to make decisions; on the other hand a flexibility which absolutely defies belief, for one thing because we really do not know really what to expect next.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you'll recall that shortly before the provincial by-elections a grandiose plan was unveiled for government office buildings just east of Bay St. in Toronto. The by-election results came in and suddenly a plan which had cost the government money, for which definite firm proposals had been sought from architects, became a chimera, a mere idea that the government wanted to explore and which, in view of the evident lack of interest, it thought it would abandon.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that this kind of vacillating will continue as long as the government has not got its priorities right and as long as its policies are wrong. I would assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the way the government is acting right now its flexibility only extends to non-essentials; the essential kind of course that the government is bent on is still very dangerous for this province. For example, if the government didn't suffer from such a single-minded commitment to the growth of Metro Toronto and the Toronto-centred region, it would not have got into the mess it got into in planning for 9,000 additional civil servants in the area to the east of Queen's Park.

In another case, the Minister of Revenue came through at the last minute with some money in order to further a lowrise, medium-density solution for a redevelopment scheme in the city of Toronto at Dundas and Sherbourne Sts.

We welcomed the minister's conversion to the innovations being proposed by the city council in Toronto. However, the Ontario Housing Corp. and the minister would not have got into that mess, Mr. Speaker, had the OHC not been holding hands with the developer, giving the developer little pats on the back to indicate that it would be all right, that a highrise just like any other highrise built in the city could go up there, and that the process of blockbusting and massive highrise redevelopment would continue, not only with tacit government support but with government funds, government tenants and a guaranteed profit to the builder.

Had that cozy kind of relationship with the developer not existed, Mr. Speaker, it would have been much easier to come to a solution for redeveloping that particular piece of land along the lines the city of Toronto proposed. The last-minute confrontations, the pickets in front of the site, the beginnings of demolition, the wrecking crews coming in; all of that would not have been necessary had the government had its priorities straight as far as housing and the Ontario Housing Corp. are concerned.

In that particular case the city had indicated some months earlier that it wanted a lowrise alternative. In fact, it had put its money where its mouth was by investing $10,000 in a study to show that an alternative was available for the same price, with the same number of units and providing the same quality, in fact a rather better quality of accommodation. However, the province apparently didn't even know what the city was about.

That brings me to the area, Mr. Speaker, where the vacillation, the uncertainties, the lack of direction of the province are most evident, and that is in the question of regional government. I was taking some notes when the Treasurer was commenting in the House this afternoon, and frankly I really hardly know where to begin on the question of regional government.

In Design for Development phase three, in the statement by the Premier to the House, which was made on June 16, 1972, the Premier said that:

It is our goal that by 1975 sufficient progress will have been made to enable the government to make proposals concerning the direction of local government reform in the rest of the province.

He said also:

What we are setting out to do now is to develop a new provincial map of local government in Ontario that will allow us to answer many of the questions on who is responsible, where and for what.

But today we have the Treasurer, who one has to confess is new on the job, saying there has never been such a programme of extending regional government through the province. In one phrase, Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer simply jettisoned seven years of policy on behalf of his party and his government; he simply left it in total limbo. The government is in complete disarray, and God knows what they are going to try next.

He says, after the determination with which the proposals for local government reform east and west of Metro were presented back in December, the minister now says he is not willing to proceed with the proposals until the reaction has been reviewed.

A plan which was definite at that time—speeches by the member for Grenville-Dundas (Mr. Irvine) and the member for York East as they crossed the areas affected say: "Yes we will make minor changes but the basics of these reforms are not up for negotiation and are not up for discussion"—well now the minister says that they are. And he will go across the province with his new philosophy, with his heterogeneous treatment.

If I can quote his words: "We are going to have heterogeneous governments rather than regional government." Or rather, in fact, the kind of local government reform that the province actually needs.

The flexibility now being shown by the minister on this question, Mr. Speaker—and as I say it is very difficult to discern exactly what it is—but the flexibility and the willingness to abandon principle really took place before those by-elections; and members of this House who think that it is the by-elections alone that are responsible are wrong.

There is a certain sensitivity which has entered now; and which frankly is almost welcome, given the arrogance of the government in the past. However, the flexibility the government had betrayed or had shown in the past was a flexibility to Tory mandarins, to developers, to the kinds of interest which always have the ear of the Premier and of the Conservative Party.

Some time ago the government senior bureaucrat, Samuel Clasky, who was involved with the regional development programme, made out for the government a series of criteria which talked about what they could do with regional government. Regions should have a balance of interest, for example, regions should be large enough to be efficient; they should permit the optimum in co-operation with neighbouring regions; and they should have boundaries that were usable by other institutions.

Now, in the two proposals east and west of Metro Mr. Speaker, the government deliberately chose to contravene the principles on which the regional government programme for urban areas had been built. And in either case—I will talk about west of Metro first—the results were disastrous.

West of Metro, the government was damned and determined, at the time the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) was the minister, that there would be one strong region between here and Hamilton, between Metro Toronto and Hamilton; and also was almost as determined that Burlington should become a part of the Hamilton-Wentworth regional government. A union which, although it was reluctantly accepted by people in Burlington—and that's putting it mildly—was pointed to by any of the criteria of the regional government programme.

However, the government—under the influence of the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Snow), the super-Minister for Justice (Mr. Kerr) and the Premier himself as, members from that area—chose to listen to the view there should be separate county reorganization in Peel and Halton; that the natural reorganization in Hamilton-Wentworth should be abandoned and therefore the hodge-podge which we now have before us should be created.

Now that has several defects. One is that it won't work. Peel county in particular is being opened up as a developer's paradise. The Hamilton-Wentworth region is truncated and has been forced into an impossible kind of choice between a one- and two-tier system, under the limited framework presented by the province. There is no possible resolution of that problem. There was unanimity among most people in that region about a two-tier system, provided Burlington would be part of it.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me just cite another authority on that question of regional restructuring west of Metro. This is a speech which was delivered to the Bolton Rotary Club back in 1970. It's by a very eminent spokesman, in fact a very eminent expert on the question of regional government—regional reorganization. He says:

From the outset, it was apparent that the proposal of the county of Peel to have a separate region on its own would not come to grips with the most immediate problems which were confronting councils in Peel. I was also concerned that Peel's proposal would not be consistent with the concept of stronger local government emerging from discussions of a broader provincial programme in the government's Design for Development. The Peel County proposal—

I may as well say who presented this. It was the member for Chatham-Kent who was then the minister, Mr. Speaker.

The Peel County proposal did not recommend any substantial movement towards a system of representation by population.

So what do we have, Mr. Speaker, under the new provincial Treasurer and Minister for Intergovernmental Affairs? We have a proposal which buys—lock, stock and barrel—the Peel county suggestion. We have a proposal which does not honour representation by population, but gives citizens in the rural area of Peel county four-and-a-half to five times the voting power of people in the densely-populated southern municipalities.

The member for Chatham-Kent, who I think is an undeniable expert, having created the regional government programme, stated:

If there is no broadly-based unit of local or regional administration to co-ordinate the planning and provision of services within a region, then this role will, by default, be absorbed by the centralized administration of the senior governments.

He also said that he thought it was fair to say that the preponderance of the town of Mississauga within Peel made it impossible for the thing to work in the necessary climate of trust and good will. And that this problem would be repeated in any region based on the county of Peel alone.

Now Mr. Speaker, if you ask anybody expert in municipal affairs about what the town of Mississauga is most noted for, they will reply that the town of Mississauga is most noted for its fast-buck developer mentality; and for the way in which it has been willing to absorb any kind of development, any kind of profiteering, any kind of speculation and always hold hands with the developers; the way in which it has been willing to open wide and accept development from Metro Toronto. In fact, the way in which it's been willing to simply ignore any grounds of rational planning or any sense of orderly development and growth.

The member for Chatham-Kent was convinced in 1970 that the union of major portions of Halton and Peel is essential if the centralization of responsibility at senior levels of government is to be reversed.

The question one has to raise with the government's plans is: Does Queen's Park intend to ensure there is orderly growth and development west of Metropolitan Toronto? Or will Queen's Park simply leave the two counties with restructured local governments without interfering, and therefore allow the kind of growth and development that is occurring there now? Will it step in; or will it, in the name of local autonomy, leave Mississauga—the town council in particular—as the dominant force in Peel county in directing the future of growth and development in that area, permanently creating a kind of linear city between here and Hamilton, permanently paving over the whole area, and creating no sense of distinction between Metro Toronto and Hamilton but simply wall-to-wall suburbs and wall-to-wall highrise all the way on that 40 or 50 mile stretch.

Mr. Speaker, it's a political kind of thing, and I think it's fair to say the member for Chatham-Kent would not have had it shoved down his throat the way the former member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) and the provincial Treasurer have accepted the truncation of those two contiguous counties, which should have been brought together into one regional government.

It's a very high price to pay, in view of what's going to happen in that area as a consequence of the creation of weak governments; and I think what may happen in the Hamilton-Wentworth area is also a high price to pay. The government, really, is so political at times about these things. Just because the people of Hamilton have the good sense not to elect only Tories but also to elect New Democrats to represent them in the Legislature, they get the short end of the stick every time. This is the petty political way in which the government punishes the people of Hamilton for having elected such fine representatives as they have here in this Legislature.

I would also point out that the developers know perfectly well what the government is doing west of Metro. According to the Globe and Mail on Tuesday of last week, McLaughlin, the largest developer in Mississauga, announced that it had sold a half interest in 2,600 acres of land for $38 million. And just who is involved? Who's coming in for the kill, now that the government has laid Peel county open for the killing with the servicing and the restructuring of government? Well, five Canadian institutions: the Royal Bank, Toronto Dominion Bank, Canada Trust — in London, incidentally — Canadian General Electric Credit and TD Realty Investments, which is a subsidiary of the Toronto Dominion Bank.

McLaughlin puts it this way: "With this money we have absolutely no financial constraints placed on us." Worry about money is usually the thing that slows down development, according to Mr. Bruce McLaughlin. "With this," he said, "we only have to be concerned with the various government approvals." Well, the precedents in the town of Mississauga and the precedents of this government would suggest there won't be much need to worry about that.

I recall Mr. Speaker, just in passing, that the Premier, Bill Kelly and a few others, when they were raising funds before the last election, used to have lunch, or perhaps it was breakfast, with developers; and the price of those meals was pretty high. It's more than one would pay in the Waldorf or the Royal York. The figure I had heard mentioned, in order to ensure the continuation of good government, was $20,000. West of Metro, Mr. Speaker, the developers are certainly getting good government in their terms, even if the rest of the province and the citizens of the province are the ones who will suffer.

There was a leak in the paper the other day about what's happening east of Metro, Mr. Speaker. East of Metro, the government gratuitously and with no forewarning brought the Port Hope Cobourg area and Hope township into the Oshawa regional government plan. The reaction in that area was immediate and intense.

The member for Grenville-Dundas and the two members in the area affected have been manfully defending a decision which by any criteria is insupportable. It is insupportable on the grounds of community of interest and of a need for a balanced geographical kind of dispersion; and it is insupportable by any of the other criteria in the government's regional government programme.

However, these members went along, and they said, "Look, we have to do it." About the one thing that I can recall they said was, "Well, Port Hope-Cobourg on its own would not be able to defend agricultural land in the area; it would become part of the Toronto conurbation."

I would have thought that agricultural land, Mr. Speaker, would be much more subject to linearization—that is to extension of the linear city from Metro Toronto west through Oshawa and Bowmanville all the way to Port Hope and Cobourg—if it was under one regional government. Then, if it was not, I would have thought that the government's own proposals for protecting agricultural farmland and the determination of people in the Port Hope-Cobourg area that they will not be subject to the accelerated and inordinate rate of growth that the government seems to want for them, would be protection enough, without having to put them into a regional government whose headquarters will be 30 or 40 miles to the east, in Oshawa, which is an area where the people of Port Hope and Cobourg have virtually no common interest or community of interest at all.

One of the things that bothers us about the programme of local government reform as it has been produced by the government is the fact that there haven't been any facts. The reports which have been distributed have been full of the most glittering generalities. In the west of Metro proposals by the government there was not one word, Mr. Speaker, to defend the government's decision to include Burlington in Halton county rather than putting Burlington where it belonged, in the Hamilton-Wentworth regional government; and in the proposals for east of Metro there was also not a word to defend the decision to bring Port Hope and Cobourg into the new regional government east of Metro.

You know, west of Metro they had three cabinet ministers on their side and they got what the local nabobs seem to want, which was separate county government. East of Metro—well, the members there apparently don't have the same kind of clout. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker—and I would point out that the member for Northumberland (Mr. Rowe) is in the chair—why is it that you don't have the same influence on the government as the members for Halton East (Mr. Snow) or Halton West (Mr. Kerr), or as the Premier? Why can't you do tricks of magic that they are able to do?

I would say this to the member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers) as well. You have had to go around defending a decision which you know is insupportable. One of the aspects of this that has concerned people, and very rightly, is the fact that regional government has meant very substantial tax increases and they have not been given any kind of clear picture from the government.

Some facts are available about east of Metro now, Mr. Speaker, and what surprised me when I learned about these the other day was that the government, once it finally generated them, didn't rush to give them to the people! Oh no! On March 23, I think it was, a week before the extended deadline for submissions from the public about regional government in the area east of Metro, the clerks and treasurers of the municipalities affected were called in and given a set of figures which were almost incomprehensible to them, let alone to the public.

They did not even release them to their own elected people in the one or two cases that I checked up on. I hope that other clerks and treasurers did. They certainly were under no instructions to release them. Those figures were not given out to the press, and therefore one of the vital elements in local government reform in that area—what's it going to cost me—has been an area of complete vacuum as far as the people in the area are concerned.

I can give a few figures, Mr. Speaker, because I have had a look at this report. The figures show that in 1971, if regional government had been introduced and no other changes had been made—which is a pretty conservative set of assumptions—the tax rate in East Whitby would have gone up by 37 per cent. It would have gone up in Manvers by 25 per cent, in South Hamilton township by 20 per cent, in Hope township by 35 per cent—and they get Metro Toronto's garbage as well—and in Alnwick by 15 per cent. The tax rate would have gone up in East Darlington by 12 per cent but in West Darlington by 65 per cent.

The government has a plan to phase those increases in over a period of five or six years. Fine, but that doesn't stop the fact that after five or six years of steadily increasing taxation, quite apart from the increased costs imposed by regional government in every area where it has been introduced across the province, the people of West Darlington will have a 65 per cent tax increase and in Hope 35 per cent, and 35 per cent in East Whitby.

How do you balance this? All right, in the urban areas such as Oshawa, Port Hope, Cobourg, there are reductions in tax rates projected of around 10 per cent. People aren't naive, Mr. Speaker, and they know perfectly well that any reduction in taxes would be swallowed up within the first year of regional government by the increased level of services.

If I was in a rural area and if I knew that there was a bit of tax room as far as the urban people were concerned, I would be doubly afraid because they would bring their taxes up to the old level right away in order to spend more money, and they would keep on increasing them.

Mr. Speaker, those facts should have been presented to the public in the area east of Metro at the time the regional government proposals were introduced and not surreptitiously handed over a few days before the final date for submission. That is just unacceptable, Mr. Speaker.

The regional government proposals there should have been accompanied not just by an analysis of the tax impact—which people didn't get—but also by proposals for basic and fundamental reform at the local level, in order to stop situations in which people have to pay $600, $800 or even $1,000 a year for taxes on pretty basic accommodation in areas like Pickering township and other areas of the province.

Whether it is east of Metro or west of Metro, in Brant or Haldimand or any other part of the province, it is no good the province coming in on this grace and favour basis saying: "Look, if the problem gets too great you come along and knock on our doors and we might do something for you."

In fact the province did do something for St. Catharines. It created a slush fund and then from the slush fund it gave just enough to ensure that the worst of the heat was off. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that people had to go and fight and struggle to get any of that grace and favour kind of patronage money out of the province when they should have had a fundamental tax reform—and they should have had it by right.

Mr. Speaker, we have already talked about an evaluation or re-evaluation of the regional government programme. It appears from what the provincial Treasurer is saying that possibly we are getting a bit more than we bargained for. What we are seeing now is a complete abandonment of the programme; and as I said before God knows what we are going to get next! I shall look with some interest to see what the government comes up with.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): It'll drift for a while.

Mr. Cassidy: It'll drift, that's right. It'll drift but it calls that flexibility. The Premier says he makes decisions, but the Treasurer is flexible.

Mr. Speaker, there is another example of drift or indirection—or it may even be direction; I am sorry the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) isn't in the House right now—which I would just like to mention before going on to the area of housing.

These past few weeks have seen a hearing before the Ontario Municipal Board about the question of new highrises in the St. James Town West area. That hearing was ushered in what is evidently a new climate in the Ontario Municipal Board and it is something which is very concerning to a lot of people, I would say, here in Toronto and in the province. Let's just look at that hearing for a minute.

The commissioner was Mr. W. H. J. Thompson and he is one of the troglodytes, it appears, who inhabited the Ontario Municipal Board back when possibly some of us were a bit seduced.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Troglodytes? That's being too kind.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, dinosaurs, if the member will.

Mr. Foulds: Except for the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko).

Mr. Cassidy: He would fit! He would grace the Municipal Board the way it is going right now.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): He graces the front benches, too.

Mr. Cassidy: The Municipal Board may have conned us a bit, Mr. Speaker, by the power of W. A. Kennedy and the way in which he chose particular cases which were particularly important.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): The opposition is running out of solid argument.

Mr. Cassidy: Well, let's just have a look at this. As a man of the law the minister would surely agree that the defence should not be forced to go forward in a court trial prior to the prosecution having stated its case?

Mr. Foulds: The Chairman of the Management Board (Mr. Winkler) is in his usual shape. He can leave.

Mr. Cassidy: In the case of the St. James Town West development, however, the chairman insisted that before the city, as the applicant for the zoning change, explain what the change was about and explain why it was there—which was a procedure which has been used, I think, in every OMB hearing until a few months ago—the objectors must state their objections without knowing precisely what it was they were objecting to. The board also ruled that the only subject matter for review was the bylaw itself and not the proposed development which gave rise to it—again something which goes directly counter to the practice of the board in previous hearings, including the hearing on the Quebec-Gothic development, where the board specifically reduced the height of the building involved even though it came nowhere close to satisfying the objectors.

But at that point the board certainly acted on the proposed development. In this case the board suggested that only the bylaw should be discussed; and since the bylaw simply sets out densities—I don't think it even had a site plan attached to it, it sets out densities, height and population and no more—the ruling has been impossible to follow as well as being quite unjustified.

Mr. Speaker, the board has used words such as "interfering" and "obstructionist" to characterize the ratepayers and other people who came to oppose the bylaw. It has been not just impolite, but downright rude to men of the calibre of Mayor Crombie and of Ald. John Sewell, the alderman for the area. I understand Mayor Crombie came down to the hearing, was asked his name and address and, when he said he lived on Glencairn Ave., was asked what possible interest he had in a development that was not in his particular neighbourhood.

When John Sewell came before the board, the first question the chairman asked was: "How do you spell your name, Mr. Sewell?" And eventually Mr. Sewell refused to testify on the grounds of the board's very obvious bias.

Mr. Laughren: Harassment even.

Mr. Cassidy: Harassment, that's right.

Mr. Foulds: And illiteracy.

Mr. Cassidy: The board was saying there was no point in hearing additional members of the council in opposition to the bylaw because they would all say the same thing anyway. Well, Mr. Shrives, the other board member, denied that the next day.

In another case the board refused to hear evidence from one of the witnesses concerning a report that he had prepared jointly with two or three other people and told the witness that he could only talk about matters on which he had directly written, but not about the remainder of the report in which he had been involved. On the other hand at one point where a city witness was challenged for hearsay evidence, the board advised the city how they could get that evidence on to the record through another means.

The chairman said to Mayor Crombie that opposition to developments such as St. James Town always came from people who had great ideas on how to spend other people's money and how to use other people's land. When he was told of the inadequacies of the scheme for family accommodation, the chairman said: "Well if people don't like it they don't have to live there, and if they do they'll have to put up with the lack of park accommodations."

When he was told that the lack of green space led to children in OHC apartments nearby playing in the elevators, the chairman said this is a permissive society and parents didn't properly control their children. When he was told that there would be a podium surrounding the development which would isolate the occupants from OHC tenants across the street, the chairman said maybe that wasn't such a bad thing. At another point he said people had got along before the Ontario Housing Corp. was created, and better than they do today.

There is substantial evidence, Mr. Speaker, of clear bias on the part of the chairman of the hearing, and I'd just like to know from the government whether in fact this represents a change in policy. I think in fact it does.

I think what's happened, Mr. Speaker, is that when Mr. Palmer was appointed to be chairman of the Ontario Municipal Board, as a dedicated provincial civil servant and a man who had been involved with the various ministers of the Crown ever since 1945, he took his marching orders with him. The marching orders were: "Be legalistic. Forget about what Mr. Kennedy did. Don't meddle. We may eventually fix up the Planning Act, but in the meantime you are causing a lot of trouble to our friends in the development industry, for God's sake stop it. We are counting on you." They may even have pointed out to him that he holds office during pleasure.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Palmer is a man of integrity.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm saying that—

Mr. Bullbrook: The member should know that.

Mr. Cassidy: All right; if that's the case, I would like to know what has happened.

Mr. Bullbrook: He's a man of great integrity.

Mr. Cassidy: All right. I accept that.

The members of the Ontario Municipal Board, it may be, have simply been restrained by Mr. Kennedy and now their natural and rather troglodytic instincts are coming to the fore. I don't know what it is, Mr. Speaker. All I know is that a very definite change has occurred within the Ontario Municipal Board and the effect is that the board is no longer being effective as an ombudsman, as a protector of and last resort for citizens' rights.

What are we seeing now? We're seeing appeal after appeal being directed to the cabinet because of the failure of the Municipal Board to perform its function.

It's significant, Mr. Speaker, that in the Throne Speech the government promised to introduce legislation to implement recommendations contained in the report of the select committee on drainage. By contrast, it said that as a result of its review of the report of the select committee on the Ontario Municipal Board the government would place proposals before us to make the board more effective in discharging its responsibilities.

I rather regret that difference in phraseology, Mr. Speaker. I think a fairly good report came out of that committee which would, in fact, have achieved the goals of greater municipal and local autonomy while preserving that essential role of the Municipal Board as a last resort for citizens' rights in cases where that became necessary.

The government's putting the cart before the horse, if you will. It promised a review of the Planning Act, that will take two or three years. It promised a greater local voice in planning matters; that will take three or four years before it's in effect. In the meantime, effectively, the Ontario Municipal Board appears to have been stripped of the kinds of powers and responsibilities that it was taking before the retirement of Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a bit about the question of housing. I want to talk about it in a number of different lights.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there not being a quorum present in the House I'd like to call a quorum.

I want to tell you, sir, that one of the reasons I'm doing this is that the committee on the Attorney General's estimates is apparently sitting and insisting on proceeding, which clearly violates the understanding we reached before the orders of the day today. It's really behaviour which is reprehensible and I'd like you to give us an opportunity to clear it up. I'd like to call a quorum.

Mr. Speaker: Clerk, will you take the count please?

Mr. Foulds: I'd like to point out that there are four Tories in the House at the present time.

Clerk of the House: Including yourself, sir, there are 20 members present. This is a quorum.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk says there is a quorum. Proceed.

Mr. Lewis: There were 19 people present when I called for the quorum. I shall ask some of my colleagues to leave if that need be done. I really don't think the House needs to be subjected to this kind of treatment by the committee system or by the government. We can at least have four minutes in which to try to clear it up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There's not a quorum now the clerk informs me. I shall have the bells rung as required.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker ordered that the bells be rung for four minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Order! There is now a quorum present. The member from Ottawa Centre may proceed.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to have an audience here and to see a few of those unfamiliar faces on the other side of the House.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was just turning to the question of housing. I think it's a darn good thing that people around the province are talking about housing over the last few months as a result of the Comay task force. It's about time that housing became a political issue again, because this government has done everything it can to submerge it and to pretend that the housing crisis that we have in this province just isn't there.

I've got some figures that would indicate, Mr. Speaker, just how deep that housing crisis is. For example, if you take figures which were produced by an authority that I'm sure the government would respect—namely the Urban Development Institute—it reckons that 28 per cent of the people living in Metro Toronto in 1961 were able to afford the cost of a house within a reasonable portion of their income.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that's down to either 11 or four per cent of the population of this city and this region—depending on whose figures you happen to count on—because of the exceptionally high cost of housing, mortgages and all of the other things that enter into it.

The Urban Development Institute, Mr. Speaker, flatters itself that in the apartment field competition has made housing relatively more accessible to people in the last 10 years because of the fact that rents have gone up less than average weekly earnings over the past 10 years.

However, when you look at its figures, Mr. Speaker, something very remarkable comes out. The housing experts have always said that you shouldn't pay more than one week's salary for rent or housing costs every month; approximately 25 per cent of your income.

Well, back in 1961 the average weekly earnings in the Toronto area were about $82 a week and monthly rents for a bachelor apartment were about $85 a month. So back in 1961 your average Torontonian could safely afford a bachelor apartment within his earnings.

In 1971, weekly earnings are up to $145, according to the builders' figures. The rent on a bachelor apartment is up to $142 on average; and that means that now your average Torontonian can afford a bachelor apartment within 25 per cent of his income and have $2.50 left over to buy himself a meal or a couple of beers.

That's progress, according to the Urban Development Institute, Mr. Speaker.

But the fact is that average Torontonians are not all single. Some of them have families, some of them have two and three and four, even five or six children; as well as grandparents and other people living with them. You can't squeeze people into bachelor apartments which rent at 25 per cent of your income.

But that's the kind of housing crisis we have gotten ourselves into, Mr. Speaker. For the person earning an average wage in the city of Toronto and venturing out into the private market, all they can safely afford is a one-room apartment.

Mr. Speaker, rents in Toronto for a two-bedroom apartment—the smallest you need for a family—now run about $203 a month average, according to the Urban Development Institute.

Again, its own figures for 1971 show that out of 1,200,000 taxpayers in Metro Toronto, Mr. Speaker, that only 17 per cent had a declared income of more than $10,000; and that 19 per cent had a declared income of $7,000 to $10,000; and approximately two-thirds of the taxpayers in Toronto had income of under $7,000 a year.

In other words, less than one-fifth of the taxpayers in Toronto could afford one of the developers' two-bedroom apartments; and another group of less than one-fifth could afford it by stretching their budgets; and the rest couldn't afford it at all.

We did some checks up in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, where the income distribution is rather similar. We found that with rents that prevail in Ottawa right now, that on an income of $5,000 a family needing a two-bedroom apartment—which is too small for most families—would have to pay 48 per cent of their income on shelter. And even at the $10,000 mark, they would have to pay 24 per cent of their income on shelter. At $8,000 they'd have to pay 30 per cent of their income on shelter. And, Mr. Speaker, 80 per cent of the families in the Ottawa area have incomes of less than $10,000.

The housing crisis we have, Mr. Speaker, isn't just a problem of a few unfortunate, low-income families who can't cope. It's a problem which now spreads into virtually every group within our major metropolitan areas. It is an economic problem for families, Mr. Speaker, and it's getting worse and worse and worse every year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other day a nice middle-class university teacher of my acquaintance, who lives with her young son in a house in Ottawa which she rents for $230 a month, had a visit from her landlord. The landlord came to announce that the rent was going to go up by 50 per cent to $350 a month; and if she didn't like it she could move at the end of her lease.

Some questions were asked about this kind of exorbitant and unjustified rent increase on the house; and the minister simply said: "Well, we haven't got the power to do anything about it." For God's sake, Mr. Speaker, the government ought to get the power!

Another case which epitomizes the kind of problems that low-income families have is a family with four children, aged one to seven, three of whom are girls, who live in Ottawa on a take-home income of $108 a week to take home. They were renting a three-bedroom house at $165 and paying for the heat on top of that.

That family was paying almost two weeks' income every month for their shelter, and they got no repairs from the landlord. One day the ceiling over the kitchen fell in. They felt the landlord should really do something about that and they asked him for some repairs.

Mr. Foulds: That really wasn't asking too much.

Mr. Cassidy: That wasn't asking too much, Mr. Speaker. The health department issued an order in late March to that landlord to make repairs by May 9, which is an inadequate kind of order in the first place. That order came before the end of March, and that family was given its orders to be evicted, to get out of the place, by April 30. They had no recourse, being on a monthly tenancy.

They had absolutely no recourse under Ontario law.

Mr. Speaker, as for the price of land in the major cities, such as Ottawa and Toronto, nobody can really quote you figures on this anymore, because it is going up so fast. The other night I was up in North York at a meeting of the Comay task force and was told that a semi-detached lot for two houses now costs $39,000 in North York. Once $20,000 or more used to be considered a reasonable price for a house, not for a plot of land 30 or 40 feet wide by 100 foot deep on which you have possibly the privilege of putting together a house.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the government doesn't have a housing policy. As I shall attempt to demonstrate, what it has done in the field of housing has been inadequate. It has been oriented toward developers and not to the users, the people who need housing. The government has been insensitive to the needs of people, of citizens of this province, in getting decent housing. It is not solving the problems, and in fact it is probably making the problem worse. Certainly in Ottawa that is what we see; the problem is getting worse rather than better.

Just to start with a very brief example of how the government is insensitive. If it is true that people should pay no more than 25 per cent of their income in rent, then why is it that in Toronto, in Ottawa, in Sudbury, probably in Thunder Bay and in other parts of the province, people who are receiving social assistance at the municipal or provincial level pay 45, 50 and even 60 per cent of their income in housing before they have any money to pay for their kids' food, clothing and other essentials of life? How can the government defend that if it believes, as governments of all levels are saying these days, that decent housing at a reasonable cost is a right and is not a privilege?

Mr. Speaker, let's just look at some of the things that the Ontario Housing Corp. has been doing and see how it bears out the government's claims to be so sensitive in the field of housing. What we have seen recently, as I mentioned before, is the Minister of Revenue charging that it is ratepayer opposition that is stopping OHC and preventing it from providing the necessary housing.

I am not sure if I have the figures here, but in 1970-1971 OHC accounted for something like 12 per cent of the housing starts in the province. In 1972 that dropped to about 4.5 or five per cent of the housing starts in the province. In 1971, the OHC started more than 6,000 rent-geared-to-income units in Metro Toronto. In 1972 that was down to just over 1,000.

The minister's vaunted claims about how much he is spending for housing, when you look at them through the eyes of Metro Toronto in its brief to the Comay commission, come down to this: 12,000 new units over the period from 1964 to 1972, or an average of about 1,600 units per year.

What about that charge that it is rate-payers and other people, and not the OHC, who have been holding back the housing? Metro reported, Mr. Speaker, that back in the period between 1968 and 1971 the housing advisory committee of Metro government considered 76 projects and about 21,000 units. Mr. Speaker, that advisory committee rejected only 1,000 units as being unsuitable, leaving about 20,000. But the Ontario Housing Corp. did not proceed with that 20,000. It went ahead with only about 7,000.

And, Mr. Speaker, the Metro people admit that their committee was at no time crucial in those decisions. It was purely advisory, and the OHC did what it wanted to.

Up in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, where I had some direct experience, the OHC earned the kind of opposition it is getting in isolated instances right now by the way in which it imposed its will on the Ottawa city council. It simply presented a list of six to seven projects and said: "From all that we have received, these are the ones we want to do, and if you don't want any of them, if you want to knock them out, we will give you no guarantee that we will replace those units." And that in a city which was desperately short of rent-geared-to-income housing.

It's that kind of insensitivity, Mr. Speaker, which really makes it very difficult to accept the minister's charges.

One of the things we also notice in terms of the way in which OHC is dealing with the problems of the amount of housing that is needed, is in fact in OHC's own report to Metro back in February of this year. As is well known, the need for housing is at its most urgent, at its gravest, among larger families. We found, doing some analysis in Ottawa, that it was particularly among larger families on family benefits or other forms of provincial assistance. But here in Toronto, Mr. Speaker, the OHC has been steadily reducing the number of units with large bedroom counts, while at the same time it has been increasing or keeping static the number of units with small bedroom counts. I've got the figures here, Mr. Speaker.

Thus, about 30 per cent of OHC units under management are three bedrooms, but only about 15 per cent of the projects under development will have three bedrooms. And barely four per cent will have four and five bedrooms, compared with about double that proportion in the existing housing stock owned by OHC.

Of the units under construction and development in Toronto, if you look at one bedroom and bachelor units OHC is building enough to satisfy the current housing list. At the two bedroom level barely half of the demand will be met by the forthcoming supply. At the three bedroom level less than half the demand will be met. When you get up to the five bedroom level, the large families that have real problems finding housing anywhere, only 10 per cent of the demand will be met, Mr. Speaker.

It suggests to us that OHC, once again, is geared to developers' proposals, to two bedroom units that come off the shelf and which are convenient and quick. Quick profits for the developers to put up; and for that matter an aggrandizement of the minister who will then be able to get up in this House to say how many housing units he has been responsible for creating, without regard to their use, to the need, and how they respond to the need.

Let's look at another aspect of the minister, Mr. Speaker. Out in Malvern, which is certainly an area where public housing ought to be integrated with the housing going in, the proposal says only five per cent of the units will be for subsidized accommodation. Well if only five per cent is going to be there, and if 50 per cent or more of the people in this city need some kind of assistance with housing, then who's to blame if there's a housing crisis if it isn't the minister, the government and the kind of policies they are putting together?

We're concerned as well, Mr. Speaker, about the Malvern project because of the way in which the government is catering to upwardly mobile members of the middle class and not genuinely getting to the housing needs of people on moderate and on low incomes.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the cost of developing that land was about 60 per cent of what is known as the current market value. But the OHC intends to sell that land, after leasing it for a few years, at the current market value. And it intends to sell it to people who in turn can then sell on the private market, and they too will stand to make a profit.

Everybody gains in this business except the people in the province who need—and desperately need—housing; and except the low and moderate income people who can't get into that project now, and will certainly never be able to get into it when the prices have gone up by $10,000 or $15,000, as they will do, without any shadow of a doubt, in five or six years, given the current government's policy.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, OHC stands to make a profit of about $40 million, and probably far more, on the land at Malvern because of the policy which it is adopting of selling out at the market price after five years. The people who buy will in turn also make a profit, which we believe to be unjustified, of $40 million or more when they sell out. And there's a terrible incentive for them to take this government-sponsored housing, to sell it on the private market and then to go back—I don't know what they'll do after that. But there is an incentive for them to do it.

Mr. Speaker, the legal minimum income for someone moving into Malvern is about $8,500 a year. And there are only 35 units out of the first 650, Mr. Speaker, which are even suited to that particular income range.

When you look at the incomes that will be catered for, you find that this low and moderate income support development—well there are projects there that can't be bought unless you have an income of $12,000 or more. When you look at the lower ranges—$8,500, $8,900 or so—32 per cent of gross income has to go into housing cost in order to afford the units going up in Malvern. It is 38 per cent of net income when you take away deductions for taxes and that kind of thing.

That's the kind of policy, Mr. Speaker, which this government is adopting. They are going to take a profit that they shouldn't; they are going to price housing out of the reach of ordinary Toronto and Metro Toronto residents; and they do it with a smile on their face.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about something else related to OHC, and that is the kind of patronage which it undertakes in making its proposals.

Nobody knows, Mr. Speaker, how the OHC chooses developments on its proposal call system. But it seems to be no accident that in the Ottawa area the developers who do best under the OHC are those who are known to have close and continuing links with the Conservative Party. As I understand it, that's the case in Thunder Bay, in Toronto and elsewhere in the province; and there is no check on that, Mr. Speaker—none at all.

The Provincial Auditor spoke rather generally last year about weaknesses in procedures at the OHC, and he may have been talking about the proposal call. We don't know. Certainly there have been a number of cases where it has been admitted by people involved in the process that the objective criteria haven't been followed, that inadequate buildings have been accepted by the OHC, that inadequate standards have been glossed over, that in fact the public's money could have been used far, far better than it had been.

Another aspect of this privatization and it was the vogue word in the government last year—that has taken place has been the use of builders at places like Malvern and other HOME projects, not just to build the houses but also to allot them. And certainly there is the prospect there that nephews and sisters and other people who are in a privileged position have the chance of getting into that development before your ordinary citizen.

Mr. Speaker, the government went into that system because it said it didn't want to have the lineups which had occurred in Hamilton and other HOME projects, where OHC did the allocation of lots. Now to me it just defies belief that a system couldn't have been established by which people in the income ranges to which that housing is directed, couldn't get first call on it rather than allowing the builders to give it out to whomever they wanted.

There's a real incentive, you know Mr. Speaker, if a builder has a house which is available to people with an income as low as $10,000, to give it to somebody who is earning $15,000 or $20,000. He knows they'll get the mortgage quickly; he knows there is no financial risk. He knows he won't get caught and he'll move the property that much quicker; he can get in, build it, get out, make his profit and go elsewhere.

When we look at the people who have got into Malvern and use the OHC figures, 14 per cent of them earn less than $8,000 which is the level at which they are meant to be able to qualify to go in. The fact is that these figures exclude the wife's income. These are people who probably are in genuine need and deserve to get in there, and are using the wife's income to get in.

About 70 per cent are in the range between $8,000 to $12,000, not counting the wife's income. In other words, some of those are in the income range of up to $18,000 or $20,000. Another 15 per cent or so earn over $12,000 and have no business being in a publicly-sponsored project which is designed to meet the needs of home purchasers who can't compete in the private market here in Toronto. These are figures just for the heads of households and not for the rest of the household.

Why does the OHC have to give the power of decision to the builders? Why does it not even insist that income criteria be respected? Why does it allow some people to buy these houses?

Some of them are now building additions and carports and other things like that because they got housing cheaper than they would on the private market and have lots of money to burn. Why does it allow them to make a capital profit, to make a killing, on a very low downpayment, in five years' time? In fact, their money can earn about 500 per cent in five years' time if one looks at the downpayment and the kinds of profit that they stand to make. Why can't we have a sensible use of publicly-owned land instead of what we have had at Malvern?

Mr. Speaker, I have said that the government has been tied up with developers and I would like to talk very briefly about condominiums. This is some publicity for condominiums, and it's very pretty. It's part of the image for a place called Flemingdon Woods.

Flemingdon Woods is very interesting, Mr. Speaker, because it is one of three or four condominium developments in the city where the Ontario government said to the developer: "Go ahead and build it, but if you can't sell it we will buy back the units and insure you against any loss." Now that sure is socialism for the rich!

In addition, Mr. Speaker, when the government went into this condominium business in a big way a few years ago, it did everything in its power to stack things in favour of the developers. It's interesting that there is not a single person in the Ontario Housing Corp. whose job it is to protect the rights of condominium purchasers, but there is a whole division or a whole department which concerns itself with the problems of condominium developers. According to the law and the agreements with the mortgagor, who is the Ontario Housing Corp. in many cases, changes in the agreement or in the building can be made with the consent of the mortgagor but the tenants or the people who buy in are not consulted.

The Ontario Housing Corp. claims to itself, according to its report to Metro, the right to approve management contracts but insists that those management contracts be drawn up with the developer or with his agent or subsidiary for a period of five years after the development has begun, and then approves the rental fee or the management fee.

In the case of Flemingdon Woods, Mr. Speaker, the management fee is $10 a month per unit, which will be paid for the next five years by the owners of those units. They were not consulted about it; they got no services for that. They have to pay for the superintendents, the janitors, the cleaning, the repairs, all the other things that would normally come under a management fee; and then they have got to pay their builder $10 a month in order to manage this—a job which could be done for about $2 or $2.50 a month if they were able to hire their own management.

Mr. Speaker, the government in the case of these condominiums has stacked things in favour of the developers. Let me state some things else about what the government has done with the condominium industry. The OHC participates in the activities of the condominium industry, in the joint condominium committee which is made up of the Urban Development Institute and a few other developer outfits, the Law Society and the Ontario Condominium Association. That's an association that ought to represent condominium tenants. Condominium tenants in fact belong on the basis of a fee of $35 per building, but the Urban Development Institute provides the major funds for the Condominium Association, which is a public relations organization. It has held booths at the national exhibition here in Toronto in order to popularize the condominium concept and to bring more people in.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that condominium owners have no rights in the management of these buildings in this new condominium concept until two-thirds of the units are occupied and registered? And the registration is at the behest of the developer. Why is it that they have not even a member on the board of directors? Why can't they look at condominium books until they assume the management?

Why is it that the Ontario Housing Corp. allows condominium developers to get by with verbal warranties that aren't worth the words they are uttered in; or to get by with one-year agreements which expire the moment a genuine complaint or grievance is brought in? Why is it that the Ontario Housing Corp. countenances advertising that promises the moon in terms of rooftop gardens, sunken swimming pools and that kind of thing, but bears no responsibility for ensuring that the developer delivers on his promises and even connives with devices that are designed to allow the developer to avoid that kind of situation.

Again, at Flemingdon Woods, the developer has agreed verbally to sell the recreation building to the condominium corporation for $1 when he feels like it. He hasn't got much need for it, so he'll probably carry through on that verbal agreement. But because they are buying it for only a dollar—the money already has been paid by the tenants in the form of their mortgages—the tenants have absolutely no control over what's put into that recreation building. After all, they are getting it for a buck, so why should they complain?

The whole area of condominium law cries out desperately for reform in order to ensure that the rights of people who move in are protected rather than being trampled the way they are right now.

The member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) talked about problems with a housing development in his area. And when people complained, the government said: "Go and get yourself a lawyer." That's what the government is saying to condominium purchasers as well: "Go get yourself a lawyer. Spend $300 or $400 or $500 and find a lawyer and maybe you can enforce your rights."

Mr. Speaker, that's not who condominiums were meant to cater to. That's not the moderate income group. They haven't got the $300 or $400. In fact, in some cases they have next to nothing with which to work.

I will give a final example about the kind of economic situation that this province has created in the housing field in Metro and in other parts of the province by its housing policies.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Even if they get a lawyer, they can't effect any changes.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right—and they can't afford the lawyer either.

Mr. Speaker, in order to bail out the developers of Crescent Town, Chapel Glen and Flemingdon Woods, the government recently brought in, almost unnoticed—they didn't say anything about it—a new programme of subsidized mortgages for people in lower-income groups. The effect was to cut the monthly cost of these units by about $15 or $20 a month—at Crescent Town, it was to cut the cost of a two-bedroom apartment for a family to about $200 a month.

According to the way in which the government computed these things, that apartment now is accessible to someone earning $6,800 a year; and if in fact that were true, it would be a pretty desirable thing. That's certainly a moderate income family; and it allows them to get housing and to protect themselves against rent increases. But if we look at it more closely, I don't think anybody in this House would accept the kind of living conditions they would have to tolerate in order to own that place on $6,800 a year.

Between Canada Pension and unemployment insurance, $20 a month for Medicare and about $60 a month in income tax, that $6,800 translates to $5,700 in take-home pay. They'd have to pay $2,550 for their housing, their principal and interest, taxes, maintenance charges and so on; another $125 to ride on the TTC twice a day; $100 for a telephone. It brings it up, Mr. Speaker, to about $2,800 for housing out of an income of $5,700—in other words, just under 50 per cent of net income for housing—and would leave $250 a month for everything else.

Mr. Speaker, I suspect there isn't a single member of this Legislature who doesn't have $250 a month in his pocket for his own personal expenses, let alone the problems of raising a family, clothing it, buying insurance and doing all of the other things that families need to do with their money.

Mr. Foulds: The Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) probably has it right now.

Mr. Cassidy: He probably has it right now, and he knows he can get far more if he needs it.

Mr. Foulds: Just for today!

Mr. Cassidy: Just for today! That's today's allotment, that's right!

But the government doesn't realize the kind of economic situation it's been pushing people through in this field of housing.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Comay report may be a bit of a shock to the government, because there have been a lot of suggestions come in from a lot of quarters. And it hasn't just been the Dan Heaps of this world who have been making radical suggestions. It has been the eminently respectable bodies such as the Metropolitan Toronto city government, a regional government, the city of Ottawa—

Mr. Foulds: Dan Heap is more respectable than they are.

Mr. Cassidy: —the confederation of rate-payers here in the city of Toronto. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, from the way in which Mr. Comay himself is engaging with these people, that he is very sensitive—much more sensitive than the government is—to the housing crisis that exists in this province and to the lack of any answers on the part of the government.

The minister, his ministry and his corporation are really virtually irrelevant to the real housing problems. The minister rushes in with Band-Aids and sticking plasters in order to solve a problem and pretends that is all that needs to be done. He boasts about how important OHC is and doesn't see the wreckage that is being created in housing all around him.

The minister apparently is unaware of the problems of housing inflation which are taking place. He doesn't believe in interfering with the private sector, and yet as the CORRA brief said there are no effective public controls over the use of land. There is no way right now, because of the lack of development controls, that municipalities can direct and ensure that the housing that is produced will be at income levels or directed to income levels so that people can afford it. It is only by accident that municipalities can stipulate a certain housing mix, only if they happen to have control over a certain part of the land.

The confederation of ratepayers, Mr. Speaker, was recommending among other things that there should be charges under the Combines Act for the monopolistic and oligopolistic practices of the housing industry and of the development industry, and that the government ought to move in.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has suggested the answer should be to service more land. The Urban Development Institute has suggested this as well. As it rightly pointed out, the Toronto-centred region plan didn't even mention housing as one of the goals. But the Urban Development Institute suggested that it was the government's insistence on orderly contiguous development that drove prices up and encouraged speculation. Obviously the builders want disorderly, non-contiguous development in order to give them the maximum freedom.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that may well be what the member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon), on behalf of the Liberal Party, is suggesting as well. When we leave land in private hands and bring in more services than we simply put more profit into developers' pockets. We simply allow people in that top 15 per cent or 20 per cent of the income range to buy more land, to have 80-ft lots instead of 60-ft lots; to get chalets for their kids; to have a 150-ft garden instead of a 100-ft garden. We permit more luxuries on behalf of the rich but we do nothing to solve the housing problems of ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Laughren: Is the member directing this to the Tories?

Mr. Cassidy: I am directing this to both parties in fact.

I don't think they understand the problem. I think all of their actions, which have simply made the housing problem worse over the last 10 or 20 years, suggest that they don't understand the problem at all.

Are the builders willing to make any assurance about price if services are brought in to ensure that more land is available? I've certainly heard no suggestion on their part in that way.

In Ottawa we currently have housing land coming available for about 17,000 people in the south Ottawa development area. That land is owned by Campeau and Assaly and other big developers. It was bought in the range of between $500 and $2,500 per acre. It will be sold in the range of $50,000 to $100,000 per acre depending on its ultimate use; and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that it doesn't cost that much to service that land.

The city of Ottawa is contributing to private profits by bringing a substantial new amount of development land on to the market. That would be all that would happen if we were to follow the prescriptions of the Liberal Party or of the Urban Development Institute.

I want to suggest very briefly, Mr. Speaker, that since we have a housing crisis we better do something about it; and we had better do something about it quickly. We need two things. We need a programme of immediate action, which I will outline right now, and we need some long-term action which will concentrate on the question of land.

I would say that the biggest single problems that are suffered right now are the economic problems of housing. If you can solve people's economic problems in housing, then the problems of ensuring decent standards, of cleaning up slums, of rehabilitating homes and so on, can be solved. But so long as people are pauperized and forced into slum housing, forced under the dominance of slum landlords and put in a position where they have no alternative but to accept sub-standard housing, then that kind of problem will persist.

No programme of simply building a bit of public housing is going to solve the slum problem, so long as people are at the same time being driven into the slums by the government's economic policies in housing.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we need, first, a shelter allowance which will ensure that no Ontario family has to pay more than 25 per cent of its income for shelter. We need that now.

If you will, it should start with the groups which are particularly house-poor and particularly in need; the groups which are now so often knocking in desperation on doors of the Ontario Housing Corp. and getting nowhere, because there is no way that that public housing programme is going to work. If it does work, of course, it is liable to create ghettos. So the allowance should be directed, initially, to the families on low incomes, let's say under $6,000 a year; to families with young children, five years and under; and finally to senior citizens, 60 and over.

Mr. Speaker, have you ever had a case come to you of a family where one partner is retired and the other partner is unable to work, and because of the legislation that exists in this province and this country they are forced to get by on an income of $150 a month or less?

Mr. Lewis: Sure, he has had that.

Mr. Cassidy: If he has, I wish he would show it a bit more; and I wish that the government would show it as well. Certainly senior citizens ought to qualify for this shelter allowance.

Mr. Renwick: It is $155.

Mr. Cassidy: One of the reasons, Mr. Speaker, for a shelter allowance is that the capitalists on that side of the House don't give poor people a choice in housing. They tell them: "You go into that ghetto which has been created by the Ontario Housing Corp., or you sweat it out and pay 50 per cent of your income in rent." That's no choice in my language.

Mr. Foulds: The self-satisfied, smiling Cheshire cats over there are proud of it.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Better than the member!

Mr. Cassidy: It seems to us, Mr. Speaker, that the choice, which people like the members on that side enjoy in housing, ought to be something which belongs to every Ontario family and not just to those who have investments or rip-offs or other means of getting a very substantial income. It should be something which is extended right through society, so that a poor family can decide whether they want to live in a public housing project, in a co-op, or in a developer project; or whether they want to live in town and have a bit less space but better access to transportation, or out of town and have a bit of green grass around them and maybe better schools for their kids; and so that those choices can be made according to the family's wishes rather than dictated by the Minister of Revenue and by his cohorts in the Ontario Housing Corp.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that the shelter allowance should not just be confined to tenants as well, because there are many people on low incomes who are being pauperized even though they are owners of shelter, particularly old people who now find themselves trapped. They can't afford to leave the accommodation they own and they can't afford to stay there either without paying an undue proportion of their income in rent.

But there are also, particularly in rural Ontario, many families who own their own shelter and yet who simply cannot afford the cost of living there, and particularly the cost of rehabilitating it in order to bring it up to an adequate kind of standard.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that if you bring in a shelter allowance you ought also to have rent regulation. We believe that rent regulation is desirable right now—in fact, retroactive to the beginning of this year to forestall any profiteering by the friends of the Conservative Party who tend to be landlords.

Rent increases, Mr. Speaker, would be justified on the basis of increases in costs, but not on the kind of speculative rip-offs that I talked about earlier, which are rife in Toronto, rife in Sudbury, rife in Thunder Bay and in Ottawa. Landlords look at the rents that are being charged elsewhere. Then they blithely come in on somebody who is earning a third or a quarter of what they are and tell them their rent is going up by $20, $30, $40 or $50 a month in order to increase their profits. And then they say to the tenant: "Well, you know how it is."

That's pretty crummy, Mr. Speaker, when the landlord comes up in his Mercedes Benz, or his Buick, or his Cadillac and tells the tenant, who is living in a rat-trap with the ceiling falling in and the back porch needing repair: "Well, you know how it is!"

Sure the tenant knows how it is. He knows that the landlord has power that he hasn't and that this government won't do anything about it.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Look who's talking now.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we believe that rent regulation isn't enough either. The status of tenants has got to change and this also can be brought in within a very short period of time.

Why is it that a tenant can be kicked out at the end of a year, whereas there are the most enormously elaborate procedures under Ontario expropriation law before you can remove an owner/occupier from his premises? As long as a tenant fulfills the normal obligations with his property, Mr. Speaker, we think he should be able to stay. He should have security of tenure. There should be a landlord-tenant tribunal which would sit in judgement if in fact the landlord wants to get rid of him.

If the landlord can show that he's wrecking the property, fine. If the landlord can show that he's not paying the rent, fine. On the other hand, if the tenant can show that the landlord isn't fixing the property and that the ceiling came in and nothing happened, then at that point the tenant should have the right to withhold his rent.

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that the books of landlords should be open. We believe that rent increases, which cannot be settled between landlords and tenants equitably, ought to go before the landlord-tenant tribunals and that the whole question of landlord-tenant law should be taken out of the courts. I'm looking at the superminister for Justice right now.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Going to get a lot of apartment buildings that way!

Mr. Cassidy: It should be taken out of the courts, Mr. Speaker, because they have proved themselves biased in favour of landlords and totally inadequate for handling this kind of problem.

Mr. Lewis: It makes a nice profit for the minister's legal confreres, but it shouldn't be in the courts.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that it takes up to a year or more for a tenant who brings a case against the landlord in order to get a decision from the courts; but nowadays it takes only 15 or 20 days for a landlord to get an order for eviction against a tenant who is in dispute with the landlord and refuses to move? Now why is that? Is that not a clear example of bias?

Mr. Foulds: It clearly favours the landlord.

Mr. Cassidy: Clearly! And the Landlord and Tenant Act still clearly favours the landlord, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Renwick: It won't be solved until you can set it off against the rent.

Mr. Cassidy: It desperately needs reform. All it did was to civilize a relationship which is basically the law of the jungle and nothing more, and it's the members on that side who have created that.

Mr. Speaker, very briefly, there should be a big increase in funds to rehabilitate older housing rather than allowing it to be demolished. I would say that we would welcome the deathbed repentance of the Minister of Revenue and the agreement to go in on the Dundas-Sherbourne development with Mayor Crombie.

Mr. Renwick: He sounded pretty healthy yesterday.

Mr. Cassidy: He did sound a bit healthy, yes.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Too healthy, in fact.

Mr. Cassidy: Also, and in the same vein Mr. Speaker, that problem at Dundas and Sherbourne could have been regulated had there been legislation to regulate demolition permits when they affect the supply of older housing.

It seems intolerable to us that a developer who has absolutely no interest in a property should be able to tear it down and take away the housing accommodation of 10 or 20 people. In one case in Ottawa now, there is a sound apartment building with about 50 units being torn down by a developer.

And so often it is not even to put up a new apartment, not even to put up a new office building, it's to create a parking lot or an extension to an industrial yard.

Mr. Renwick: Or just a bomb crater, as they have in my riding.

Mr. Cassidy: Or just a bomb crater, Mr. Speaker, because the federal tax law gives the developer a break if he tears the building down rather than leaves it in use. We don't think that's justified, Mr. Speaker, and demolition should be justified before it can go ahead.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Laughren: The Justice minister thinks it's all right!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we believe there should be a provincial ministry of housing and that the government should finally come to having a comprehensive policy for housing which lays down what kind of housing should be built, where it should be built, what income groups it should be directed to, and ensuring the needs of all income groups and not just the upper and upper middle classes would be provided for.

Mr. Martel: Policy on something over there would be helpful!

Mr. Cassidy: Well, it would be welcome that's right!

Mr. Laughren: We are waiting eagerly for Friday morning to get some of these policy statements.

Mr. Cassidy: We also believe, Mr. Speaker, that the kind of gargantuan appetites of the Ontario Housing Corp. should not particularly be furthered, but that OHC should stand in reserve to provide housing when the private and non-profit sector is breaking down. The big expansion in housing should not be in the private sector, Mr. Speaker, it should be in the non-profit sector, with co-ops and other non-profit groups.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Cassidy: They should be encouraged by this government by every means that are at its disposal.

Mr. Laughren: It is the member from Timiskaming's fault. It's all his fault.

Mr. Cassidy: And I'm afraid when the Minister of Revenue announced his new programme of integrated housing we saw very little of that. All we saw was a new series of gifts to developers, which the minister himself recognized was to allow them to make a fast buck, and maybe incidentally to provide housing.

The big development corporations, Mr. Speaker, admit their purpose is to make profit, capital gains and long-term earnings. Their function is to build housing, but that is just a byproduct of the desire to make money. And that is why, Mr. Speaker, we would hope to see a situation where a third, maybe even half of the housing being built in this province, particularly the rental housing, would be provided by the non-profit sector, by people whose first aim was to make housing for people rather than make profits for themselves.

Mr. Laughren: Let's go along with the needs for the people.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): And for tenants, too, for a change!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, housing policy in this province must include municipal tax reform. It must include it because right now municipalities effectively zone out low income housing. They exclude it because they can't afford it, or because they feel they can't afford it; and until we get a progressive tax system in which the property tax is not a deterrent to housing for any income group we will not be able to have an effective housing policy.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Foulds: So is the member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Cassidy: In addition, as part of the plan, Mr. Speaker, we believe the province, as part of its housing policy, will lay down for different regions of the province the kinds of housing, where they should go and so on, and then the municipalities will be expected to carry their burden rather than excluding public housing as some municipalities, such as Mississauga, do right now. Vacant land should be taxed to its full value.

But finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to come to the fundamental, long-term thing that needs to be done in order to come to grips with the housing situation in this province.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Cassidy: And that's the question of land! As long, Mr. Speaker, as urban land is in private hands, then so long will we have the kind of housing crisis which we have today.

There is absolutely no way in which the housing problem can be solved unless land is brought under public ownership and public control.

Mr. Foulds: Well said!

Mr. Cassidy: I want to be unequivocal about that. I think the public of Ontario, as they reflect in their briefs to the Comay task force, now recognize this is the case.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Get the cabinet in here!

Mr. Cassidy: At times it is called land banking, Mr. Speaker, but land banking is not enough. If the public simply land banks then it makes mistakes such as the Carlsbad Springs land acquisition up in Ottawa. For the sake of people who don't know of it, at Carlsbad Springs there are springs and the land is very wet.

The acquisition of land should begin with the land which is immediately in the line of development, only that land should be acquired at prices related to what it cost to acquire, if it is held by developers, and not to some inflated market value which the government has allowed to prevail.

Mr. Speaker, only if there is control of the land will there be effective control of the planning. We would hope the planning would go on with the maximum kind of co-operation with municipalities and with local citizens, in order to ensure they have a real say in the development, unlike the way they are excluded from the development plans of the Ontario Housing Corp. right now.

Mr. Laughren: The precedent has been set for giving profits to land speculators!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Martel: On the lowest rate possible!

Mr. Cassidy: As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, in areas like Toronto and Ottawa where the problem is at its most acute, the government should step in right now and simply freeze the price of that land while it decides what to acquire and begins to work out an equitable way of paying for the land that it needs. This is what was done in fact.

This government doesn't have any hangups about that kind of thing; this in fact is what it did in the Pickering airport area when it decided for its own purposes to acquire land. Why is it that it can do it out there where farmers and people who simply sought a quiet rural life have gone? Why could the government pick on people who are weak like that, but why hasn't it got the guts to pick on the developers and the other people who are holding the citizens of this city up to ransom with the cost of the housing they build?

Mr. Foulds: They are holding hands in our pockets.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. They are holding hands in our pockets.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: Show a little determination.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, we also believe that land which is held by the public should not be alienated from the public. It should be leased, but it should not be sold. It shouldn't be sold to developers. It shouldn't be sold for commercial development. It shouldn't be sold to factory owners, to manufacturers; nor for that matter, we would say, should it even be sold to people who are seeking to acquire a home of their own. We believe that there is a better way.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: A 99-year lease!

Mr. Cassidy: We believe it should be on a leasehold system. Certainly with developers and shopping centres and things like that, let's face it, it isn't the developers who pay for those things; it's the tenants, the customers, the people who buy products manufactured in those factories who pay for them. If we can't return the proceeds of that investment by tenants and customers to the people who paid it, at least we can return it to the public in general. Public land should only be leased to developers; for highrise development, for example, when it will come back into public hands with the structures and with the buildings, after 50 or 60 years.

As far as individually occupied homes—duplexes, condominiums, things like that—are concerned, we believe, Mr. Speaker, that a Crown-hold system will provide the benefits of home ownership. It can provide the benefits of unlimited tenure, which is now also held under freehold, without the kind of system that prevails right now by which everybody who buys a home is forced to become a little capitalist.

People are forced to seek the maximum profit from their houses when they sell because they know they are simply going to have to buy another house themselves further on down the line. What's the point of buying a house for $20,000 and selling it for $30,000 if one has to pay $32,000 for the next one? If one buys it for $32,000 and sells for $40,000, one is still on the treadmill.

We want to stop the treadmill, Mr. Speaker. We are saying that if in fact the resale price of that house is controlled so that it becomes accessible to the kind of people who could buy it when it was first purchased—or, for that matter, so that it could be rented, if that was the need at the time—the government can solve a lot of the housing inflation which is crippling Ontario families. It is making the housing crisis steadily worse year by year, and has got us to the pass where even the builders admit that only a handful, five per cent or so, of people in a city like Toronto can afford to buy the kind of houses that are available. It is a sign of the failure of this government in the field of housing.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, there are about five matters I would like to discuss this afternoon and first of all I would like to deal briefly with my concern regarding this Legislature itself. I feel that the general decorum of the Legislature has deteriorated considerably in the six years I have been here.

I am concerned not only at the lack of attendance of cabinet ministers in the House when speeches in the Throne debate are being delivered, but I feel that abuses are creeping in during private members' hours. For example, yesterday in the private members' hour, we were dealing with matters which I felt were of utmost concern to the Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. White). He was not here, which is perhaps understandable, but surely one of his parliamentary assistants could have been in attendance when we discussed the matter—

An hon. member: Right.

Mr. Good: —of a permanent secretariat for tri-level talks. I think this is most important.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): They were busy setting up the lunches!

Mr. Good: I also feel that in our private members' hours, it is not in good taste for members of the Conservative side to mouth the particular feelings of a government ministry or its civil servants, as was done, I am sure, yesterday by the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Wardle). I would think we must remember that our private members' hours must be the individual's interpretation of his position on that particular subject. If he wants to express it as his party's position, he can of course do that. But I hate to see our private members' hour developing into nothing more than the statement of government and opposition positions on particular subjects.

When we deal with a matter such as was raised by an hon. member last year, when he introduced a bill regarding the curtailment of the financial matters of dancing schools, we have unanimity on something unimportant. But, yesterday, when we debated what I considered to be a very important subject, it was not given the importance that I felt it should have been given.

The question period, I am sure the members will all agree, has deteriorated. I think one of the basic problems is that ministers are answering questions which are given in the form of interjections. Perhaps the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) is most responsible for this matter, as well as the ministers who answer those questions, including the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) and the Premier (Mr. Davis) himself, who spend long minutes giving answers to questions which are not questions that should even be recognized in question period but are merely interjections. I think that this is one of the prime reasons that the question period has deteriorated to the low depth it has now reached.

We must remember that this is a dignified chamber, in which the business of the province is carried out. We are all guilty, of course, of making interjections, which I think are good; but in the final analysis I think the general spirit must be one in which more of the business of government must be transacted on the floor of the Legislature and not as it is now being done, by orders in council.

I am certainly concerned about the increase in the amount of money being spent in programmes which never reach the floor of the Legislature for debate. This is done by order in council, and I think it is wrong. As representatives of the people, we have a traditional responsibility to debate all money matters in the Legislature. This has been our inherent responsibility throughout the evolution of our whole parliamentary system to its present form.

Among these programmes, just to name a few that developed on which we had no debate—there was no legislation; they were done by order in council, through regulations—there is the farm tax reduction programme, the capital grants for farm development programme, the lotteries branch regulations, the provincial-municipal employment incentive programme. All of these programmes which involve millions of dollars—and I mean millions of dollars—were never debated on the floor of this Legislature.

As members representing the people I think we have a responsibility. The government represents the Crown. The elected members and the backbenchers represent the people. And we must at least go through the mechanics of debating these things even though the government does have the power to do as it wishes in the end.

In each of these instances, however, the Provincial Auditor's report was very critical of the inept manner of handling these programmes, which distributed millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, very often with improper lists, duplication of payments, and unqualified persons and municipalities receiving the money.

The inefficient manner of accounting procedures extended not only to these programmes but to many other government handout programmes, including the residential property tax reduction programme and the supplementary benefits for persons on minimum incomes.

If we have learned nothing more from the auditor's report, it is that our fears have certainly come to fruition. We realize there is very great laxity and a great deal of room for improvement in the handling of funds, whether they be authorized by order in council or by legislation.

Mr. Speaker, turning to another subject, I would ask a question: Would you believe that it is possible for a person—and this includes a person of any age in the Province of Ontario—to be stripped of his life's savings because of illness? I didn't believe this was possible in the Province of Ontario, but let me say that it is. And it is being done to people—not to a great many people, but to people whose cases I have been asked to look into; not because of physical sickness, let me say, but because of mental sickness.

It is hard to believe that in the Province of Ontario today people are being moved out of psychiatric hospitals into homes for special care and their OHIP premiums are not covering their keep in those homes. When it was drawn to my attention, I could scarcely believe that certain individuals are receiving bills for huge sums. By "huge sums" I'm talking about bills of $8,000 or $6,000 after a person has been in a home for special care for some time.

Let me detail for the members several cases which have come to my attention. Under section 41, regulation 438, the Homes for Special Care Act, the responsibilities are outlined for the spouse or the estate of an individual to pay for that person's keep in a home for special care. Only after that person has been reduced to a pauper, only after his or her spouse has been reduced to a pauper, will the government then step in and provide these services. In the Province of Ontario today, in my view, this is entirely unacceptable.

I would like to quote from a letter which was sent to one family in 1967, when the mother was placed in a home for special care. Before I read, I would like to say this: This family was not aware until after the death of the person in 1972 that it was being held responsible for this bill. The letter says:

This person is deemed to be the type of patient suitable for this type of care and we are recommending that the above-named be considered for transfer to a nursing home.

This type of care is not covered by hospital insurance, but the cost of care in the nursing home will be paid for by funds authorized by the government for homes for special care, up to a maximum of $7.50 a day for those unable to pay for care and maintenance. When the resident is able to pay part of the cost of maintenance, a resident or person responsible for care and maintenance is liable to pay at least $2 a day. The charges will be made quarterly to be collected from the public trustees or relatives where applicable.

The charges were to be made quarterly. For many years, no charges were made against this particular family and on its behalf I took the matter up with both the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) and members of his recoveries department. Finally, I was able to procure from the Minister of Health a letter which said, and I quote from it:

I would agree with you that it is not as clear as it could have been about the responsibility for payment of maintenance. Steps have been taken to correct this situation.

This is very little comfort to a family that has been greeted with the following news. The estate of the deceased received a letter showing maintenance charges of $18,452 against this person, less credits of $9,907, leaving a balance of $8,600 owing to the Ministry of Health for this lady's keep at Spruce Haven Lodge.

When the hospital transferred the patient, the family was entirely unaware that it would be financially responsible for her keep. The letter further stated that any charges would be made quarterly.

So, we have now, by legislation, established that the spouse and the person himself or either of their estates is definitely responsible for the keep of persons in homes for special care.

I've taken the matter up with both the Minister of Health and the Premier of the province, as has the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton), who has had similar cases. We have had letters back from them stating simply that they are well aware of the situation, they are looking into it, but as yet they haven't made a decision as to what is going to happen.

What if a person's estate is depleted and there's no further money there and one spouse is still living? In the case of which I am aware he was paying his own way in an old people's rest home and the department was willing to take his savings from him and put him on general per diem keep.

I don't think that this is the type of treatment elderly citizens of the Province of Ontario should receive.

In two other instances in the riding of the member for Wellington South, the province has moved to place mortgage liens on the home of the spouse, in the case where each patient had previously died. Surely we have got away from this concept that a person's estate has to be responsible for charges made against that person by the government?

The federal government got away from this 25 or 30 years ago. The municipalities used to charge estates for hospital keep of indigent patients. We've moved away from that concept. But here we have one last isolated instance where the government is determined to reduce persons to pauper status because of mental illness before they move in and take over the responsibility for that patient. To me it is entirely unacceptable and, Mr. Speaker, I think both the Premier and the Minister of Health should hang their heads in shame that such conditions exist in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): In absentia.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Always in absentia.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Clerk is here, he will take responsibility.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): We are just as charitable as the opposition is.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Not with that maple syrup, the member isn't!

Mr. Gilbertson: That too.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Has the member for Algoma been into the syrup again.

An hon. member: Maple wine.

Mr. Good: The next matter I'd like to talk about briefly is one which I've been trying to get on the question paper ever since the House started, and I am bringing this matter up at the request of many people, most of whom belong to naturalists, and environmental associations in the Province of Ontario. This has to do with the province and particularly the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier), failing to move to establish certain endangered and rare species on our Endangered Species Act.

Prior to the last election, I think it was in June or July 1971, we passed an Endangered Species Act. We were told there was a study committee which would place on this list certain species of plant life, mammals, reptiles, birds and amphibians. To my knowledge nothing has been placed in the Endangered Species Act.

Mr. Bullbrook: We are thinking of putting the NDP in.

Mrs. Campbell: I don't know if I would protect them.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): They are on the list.

Mrs. Campbell: In absentia.

Mr. Good: Some time ago, one of the naturalists' societies from my riding sent a letter to the director of the wildlife branch and they said among the people who have approached them there are those who:

... because of last autumn's campaign [I was speaking in the last provincial election] and the passage of the bill believed that protection is now accorded to certain species. Recently a citizen contacted us about the large scale vending of certain wild flowers, ladyslippers, at the Kitchener market. There is no legislation to protect these.

Not even the provincial trillium, our flower emblem, is protected in the Province of Ontario. There is no legislation protecting our provincial flower, and are you aware, Mr. Speaker, that when a trillium is picked, the plant usually dies?

The strange part about this whole matter is that in 1970 in the spring and summer issue of Ontario Fish and Wildlife was published what has been deemed to be a very accurate list of rare and endangered species of mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians in the Province of Ontario. And there are those biologists who are working in the naturalists' societies who said that if the province would even start from its own list, it would have sufficient evidence of the need for implementation of this legislation and to get the regulations drawn up and get some names on this endangered species list.

The ironical part of the whole thing is that I just read in the recent March issue of the Ontario Naturalist a big, full-page ad with the name of the Minister of Natural Resources and also that of the deputy minister in it. It is promoting the fact that we must protect our wildlife because it is so important in the Province of Ontario. The ad says:

Things are changing, but as far as wildlife is concerned, not always for the better. Small fields separated by wildlife-rich hedgerows are being replaced by large coverless tracks.

They go on to say how important it is that we consider the protection of our environment.

The same ministry has had three years to have its committee take action under the Endangered Species Act, and as yet it has not.

I would invite a response from the ministry's wildlife department to some of the following questions:

Why has it not placed certain plants and animals on that list? Why is there no special specific advisory committee and no budget to research rare species and implement effective protection? Why is the white trillium not protected? Why are rare species like the prairie white fringed orchid, wild blue hyacinth, bald eagle, white pelican and wolverine not given special protection as endangered species?

These are things which I think are perhaps not as important as some issues in this province, but there is absolutely no excuse why a minister with a huge section of his ministry devoted completely to wildlife, when asked why it hasn't done anything, should reply by saying:

You will appreciate that the government has received requests to protect about just about everything that runs, flies, swims or walks. I am certain that if we made a list of everything that has been submitted, you would agree that there has to be some very serious consideration given to the plants and animals which should be on the list. As a consequence, the best means of developing regulations are now under study.

Well, a pretty flippant reply, I would say, to a letter writer who considered this matter most seriously.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The flora and fauna must be protected.

Mr. Good: Yes, and we have the legislation to do it; but they won't act.

The next matter I would like to talk about is one that is of great concern to me. It is one that is known to some of the members in the Legislature. It is a matter which I don't think has ever been discussed on the floor of the House in detail, and that is the mess which has developed in Century City.

Last week I went out to meet with some of the people; and these are farmers who were farming their land in Uxbridge township as recently as 1968. They were approached by real estate firms who wanted to buy their land and in every instance they were told that their land was being bought for farming purposes. The land was bought in the name of nominees and on the pretence that it was being bought for a brother of somebody who wanted to get in the farming business. Eventually there was a company formed called Mark Valley Farms Ltd.

Late in 1968, as those members who are concerned will remember, Century City Development Ltd. was formed, which was a subsidiary of Revenue Properties Central Development Ltd. The real estate firm which did most of the buying was Thos. N. Shea Ltd., which is still in business in the Markham area. The approach to the farmers was that the land was going to be bought for farming purposes.

Well, finally in December of 1968, as members will recall, we heard here in the House, and we discussed it, the announcements that Revenue Properties was buying the land to form this great Century City, a development of some 7,000 acres. I remember particularly because I opposed the original conception that the land should be approved as an improvement district.

This would mean that this development would be set apart and separate from the municipality, that the municipality would have no control over the planning or the development of this area as it affected the surrounding areas. Fortunately, the Minister of Municipal Affairs did not permit them to develop it as an improvement district.

The land comprised practically all land between the first and the fourth concessions of Uxbridge township and from the Pickering-Uxbridge line up to Goodwood. Later the company did buy some land in the north end of Pickering township as well.

The terms of the sale were basically that 30 to 40 per cent was paid to the vendor and then a mortgage was taken back, usually on 10 years with five years renewable. Interest was paid about twice a year, although some were quarterly. The unfortunate part was that almost immediately these mortgages were in default, so the company rearranged its financing with Kaufman and Broad, which is a large US financier.

However, in May, 1970, I think most of us were out at the announcement of the Toronto-centred region plan. To the consternation of the developers, the area was designated as an agricultural greenbelt and Kaufman and Broad withdrew its support. Consequently, no payments of any kind since 1970, interest or principal, have been made to these farmers.

The odd farmer was fortunate in that he had a lease-back arrangement so that he could live on his farm for several years. When the mortgages did get in default, those people who had a lease-back arrangement just continued to live on their farms.

No taxes have been paid by Revenue Properties Ltd. and there is now over $150,000 owing to Uxbridge township. The township is having to borrow money in order to keep going and, of course, it has to pay interest on the money that it borrows.

One wonders, then, why the farmers couldn't just go ahead and foreclose on their mortgages. This is where the problem arises, of which the government has known for two years but on which the government has refused to take action.

I would like to read from a letter from one of the law firms engaged by the farmers in the area. Let me, at this point, state that the group of some 66 farmers has spent over $40,000 in legal fees trying to correct the situation which has now developed.

I will quote from a letter from the law firm to Mr. and Mrs. Grant Drewry, who are among the farmers concerned. I might say at this point that my interest in this matter stems from having spent five years of my high-school days in the area. By sheer coincidence, the farm on which I met these people last week was one on which I had worked briefly during the summer, I think of 1936 — somewhere in there. I was very young of course.

An hon. member: The member must have been in diapers.

Mr. Good: Quoting:

Pursuant to the recent meeting, with respect to the mortgages given back by Century City, we have been asked by most of you as to our advice as to whether or not to join the association.

The farmers were joining an association to see what could be done.

Our advice is that you should join the association and that the only effective way and the most economical way to attack this problem is by united action.

So that you may follow the reasoning, we would like to report to you on our efforts to date. We have issued writs on behalf of eight clients and have agreed to act for two others when we have established the proper course of action to take in these matters. Most writs were issued in June and July, 1970, after several telephone calls and letters to Century City in an attempt to resolve the problem, all of which were without success.

Of the eight writs issued, five had motions brought to strike out the writs for various reasons. In some of these applications, Century City succeeded in getting an order for further particulars and these were provided.

Century City again moved to strike out the writs in certain instances and were unsuccessful. Century City then appealed these decisions and again were unsuccessful in the appeal. We then took the writs and gave them to the sheriff of the county of York for service. This took a considerable period of time as Century City kept changing its directors but eventually everyone was served by about Nov. 15, 1970. The solicitor for Century City then filed an affidavit of merit [that's a defence to the action] which, in essence, states that because they own all the adjoining lands a judgement for foreclosure would contravene the provisions of the Planning Act.

I would like to stop right there and explain something. Those of you who were in the House in 1969 and 1970 will remember that we amended the Planning Act on two occasions.

The purpose of this amendment to section 26 of the Planning Act was that where adjacent properties whose boundaries were adjoining, were owned by one individual these properties would be considered to be one property. This legislation was put in, as I remember it, to do away with what was happening in Whiterock Estates, and similar instances, where people were subdividing property and selling it with no thought of a person ever being able to get to it.

However, in putting in these amendments to the Planning Act, we found that we created a monster which was being used by Revenue Properties to claim that these mortgages had been illegally drawn up. The second amendment to the Planning Act, I believe, was put in in 1970, which was after the mortgages had been drawn up. If I am not mistaken — and I could be on this matter — I believe the original amendment was also put in after the mortgages were drawn up.

In essence, our amendment to the Planning Act created the situation whereby Revenue Properties, in the opinion of most lawyers, has a very good case that the mortgages held by these farmers are invalid. From there, we must then assume that what has to be done is that the government has to amend the Planning Act. For two years it has been aware of this situation. For two years it has promised to do something about it but as yet nothing has happened.

Mrs. Campbell: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Stokes: Is that what they used to say?

Mrs. Campbell: That is what they have been saying ever since the beginning.

Mr. Good: Revenue Properties is hiding behind this section of the Planning Act. To my knowledge no other developer, and I have checked with some, has used this section of the Planning Act to try to get out of payment of mortgages which were drawn up on similar adjacent properties. The way the Act reads, if you mortgage one, you must mortgage them all. This, of course, wasn't done and consequently the company is saying that the mortgages are invalid.

It is also interesting to note that I have been told that the company has claimed that before it started to assemble the land it met with cabinet ministers. I saw stacks and stacks of correspondence and legal documents and one of these letters named the cabinet ministers who were present at the meeting when Revenue Properties was told that it could go ahead on this basis, that everything was all right. By memory, I have been told that Mr. MacNaughton and the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) were definitely there. At this time I am unaware of who the others were.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Bill Kelly.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, Kelly.

Mr. Good: The statement of claim to the Supreme Court of Ontario was put in. Mr. Drewry and his group of 39 or 40 looked after this through their legal counsel.

In the statement of defence the defendant, Revenue Properties, is pleading and further alleges that as a result of the illegality of the securities — that's the mortgages — the plaintiffs are not entitled to either quiet possession of the land, as alleged in their statement of claim, or to enforce the debts sought to be enforced. The claimant claims that the vendors' mortgages are illegal and other mortgages held would move up one step.

The farmers hold the first mortgages. Royal Trust, Montreal Trust and Kaufman and Broad hold mortgages behind that. Revenue Properties is saying the farmers' mortgages are no good and the other mortgages will all move up one step.

Can members imagine putting out an argument on this basis simply because Revenue Properties is hiding behind a section of the Planning Act which wasn't intended to be used for that purpose?

This wouldn't be quite as serious, if it were not for the fact that many members of government have been aware of this situation, and nothing has been done. The group has spent over $40,000 in legal fees. There are $4 million worth of mortgages in question here, and that does not include back interest. There are about 66 property owners, most of whom are farmers.

I'd like to tell members just a few instances of what is happening, and I won't use names here. One gentleman moved off his property and built another house with the downpayment. He figured he would meet his payments as his mortgage money came in from his farm. Well, he hasn't got any mortgage money; so he's lost his house. The big-hearted development company has allowed him to move back on his farm, providing he pays them rent. So he's back in his old house paying them rent, if you can believe such a situation.

Another couple retired when they sold their farm and moved into a home in the village of Stouffville. They are practically on the verge of losing that. They are at their wits' end. They have no income. They thought their mortgage money would be coming and it just isn't coming. Some properties have been partly expropriated by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, but no money is being paid to the farmer. It is being placed in trust until this mess is cleared up. One family was evicted from its former farm.

The whole matter, of course, is complicated by the fact that the federal government is expropriating some of this land for airport purposes. I can't for the life of me see why we as legislators in this House can't prepare the necessary legislation and get this mess cleaned up.

Mrs. Campbell: They have to want to first.

Mr. Good: In closing on this point, let me say this, all of the cabinet are aware of the plight of these farmers. The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett) went out and met with the same people I met. He had great expectations, until he came back the second time. Something cooled him off. Nobody knows what. He wasn't so sure then when, or if, anything was going to be done.

The member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman) is well aware of what this problem is, as he's been involved with it. The member for Ontario (Mr. Dymond) in whose riding this situation exists, has been well aware of it, and as yet, nothing has been done. Everybody is most sympathetic at first, but, as yet, they are not prepared to do anything.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I can only draw one conclusion, and that is that the government is not acting because it wants to protect the interest of Revenue Properties and Development until such time as something happens to keep it from going under.

There is no reason whatsoever why the necessary legislation shouldn't be passed, so that people can foreclose their mortgages and at least get their properties back. I'm glad to see the member for Ontario South shaking his head in agreement. It is a frightful condition and one which should never be allowed to exist in the Province of Ontario.

For over three years this thing has gone on. The Premier of the province was first approached on this matter during his campaign to become leader of his party. He has known about it since then and has made some great promises at that time. But, as yet, nothing has been done.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Good: The last matter I would like to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is one of more local interest, in my riding. This has to do with some of the local problems. May I start out by saying that I very vigorously disagree with the statement made by Don Collins, chairman of the regional municipality of Sudbury, when he said that he feels "the province is disgusted with squabbling, ineffective, local governments, unable to comprehend and service urban municipalities." Mr. Collins said regional government has fallen into disrepute because of the constant criticism of it and he felt it was time to concentrate on attracting the best men available into the expanded forms of government. Well, I don't for one minute agree that councillors at the local level are creating the problems with municipal government in this province. I believe the responsibility rests right here at Queen's Park.

Very recently, the new budget for the regional government of Niagara was set forth. I'm sure the member for Welland South (Mr. Haggerty) will deal with it in more detail at a later date, but, as is to be expected, we have nothing but increases. This same condition exists in all regional governments. We, in Waterloo region—

Mr. W. Hodgson (North York): York has a decrease.

Mr. Good: We in Waterloo are waiting for our first budget and our first tax bill. It's very interesting to note that the provincial Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Inter-government Affairs, is now changing his mind considerably about regional government. When he spoke to the convention of regions and municipalities only last week he was talking about strengthening the country government rather than, as he said in the House the other day, imposing regional government.

I would like to make just one point and it is simply this, I think the greatest mistake which is being made, or has been made, in setting up the regional governments is the appointment of a regional chairman. In my view the appointment of a regional chairman brings everything out of its context. Nothing is developed by the local municipality. Let me explain why.

In our own area when the regional chairman was appointed — and at this time let me say that he is acting very efficiently, I'm sure as efficiently as Queen's Park wants him to act on their behalf — he was given a considerable budget, in our case something like $375,000, to operate the setting up of the region from the summer until Jan. 1 when the councillors take over. During that time he has ample money to prepare studies, to do more studies, to hire whoever he wishes, to set up and use committees to get people working, and by the time the regional council takes over it appears to the average layman that all it is doing is rubber-stamping whatever the regional chairman has said.

I was so bold as to ask the mayor of our municipality why it is that it appears that all the new regional council is doing is rubber-stamping everything that the new chairman of the regional municipality suggests to it. He said: "Well, you know, Ed, Jack comes in with everything well researched, well presented in quadruplicate, with copious quotes from the various departments at Queen's Park of what we should have and everything. How can you argue with that? Everything is just as they would like to have it, and consequently we have no alternative but to pass it."

Well, I don't think that the Ministry of Social and Family Services, for instance, while meeting with the local committee of social services under the regional government last fall, is qualified to say that we need 10 additional field workers in our social services committee of regional government. This came directly from the advisers from Queen's Park when they met with the local people.

I think the secret to a successful regional government has to be an evolutionary process where the people in the area develop the programmes on the priorities that they want. This cannot be accomplished if you have a superimposed chairman who is not elected by the people of the area but is appointed from Queen's Park. Consequently, I just can't understand why this government would go so far as to appoint a civil servant from Toronto to be regional chairman in Sudbury. It just doesn't make any sense to me at all.

The administrative hierarchy is built up before the new councillors take over on Jan. 1, when the regional government starts, and consequently they have no alternative but to accept.

It's interesting to note, and this point I think I must discuss very briefly, that the officials from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications met with the area governments in our regional government section, which are the three rural governments in my riding, and the press reports came out this way: "Wilmot Approves Road Needs Study Despite Arguments of Blackmail." What really happened was the Ministry of Transportation and Communications officials simply told the area government councils: "If you don't do a road needs study, do you know what's going to happen."

An hon. member: No.

Mr. Good: "You won't get any more subsidy than you got last year. Now take your choice." It was as simple as that.

Well on the road needs study, what would normally happen in rural municipalities is that at the beginning of the year the councillors would probably get in a bus or a couple of cars, take the road superintendent or the county engineer with them, and make a complete run up and down all the roads. They would note which bridges looked as though they needed repair, the length of the time they had been constructed and so on. Perhaps after two days of surveying, the engineer or the road superintendent would make his report to council that: "Well, we have to do some work on this road; we have to do some work on that road; and we have to do some here." And it would be done, and perhaps accomplished for as little as a few hundred dollars. But that isn't good enough when you come to regional government.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): They want the experts.

Mr. Good: The province comes up and tells you that you have to hire a consulting firm, and let me make it plain right here that the province told them they could not hire a consulting firm that hadn't done this type of work before. In other words, you've got to use the people who are doing it for the government all the time.

On top of that, the other report from Woolwich township says they made it clear—and when they say "they", it means the officials from the ministry—made it clear before they opened the bids that they would not necessarily accept the low tender. In other words, "we've got to steer this into its proper channels."

And the only argument the provincial representatives have is: "Don't worry about it, if it does cost $20,000, we're going to pay 75 per cent of it." Well I just don't buy that kind of logic, that it doesn't matter on the local level how much it costs because the province is paying 75 per cent. From whom does the province think it gets its money? The same people! There is only one taxpayer, and he has to get hooked at three levels.

These townships have no alternative but to bow to the demands of the provincial officials, and so they have to inaugurate the road needs study.

Mr. Speaker, I had some other local issues I wanted to speak about but I did give my word I would leave sufficient time for the next speaker. In that regard I think we must recognize that the government does conduct the business of the House and if they want to wind this thing up tonight I don't think it's in very good taste, as the speaker before me did, to take almost two hours in delivering an address.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lanark.

Mr. D. J. Wiseman (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to have this opportunity to participate in the Throne Speech debate.

In the field of housing, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see we are continuing to help the moderate income wage earner. In Lanark county we have had a reasonable growth rate in both senior citizens and low-rental units, but there is still continued need for more growth in both of these areas. I am hopeful that our government will continue to help Lanark county along these lines.

I would also like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, some notes I have made in regard to Design for Development on the eastern Ontario programmes.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I bet the member was really happy with that one.

Mr. Wiseman: We surely were. I have been told that this booklet was published with the intention of having the people of the area involved in the direction of their communities. The people of Lanark county have come up with some good ideas and briefs, explaining their feelings and the direction they would like to take.

In Lanark county we had many well-attended meetings in the towns of Perth, Smiths Falls and Almonte. I feel that the residents of my riding have made their point, and have done it quite strongly, in advising the civil servants who prepared the booklet that in Lanark county we cannot live on tourism alone.

Mr. Speaker, in Lanark county we have industrial parks with good services at reasonable rates per acre. We need, and have the right to expect, a reasonable growth rate in industry. We need industry in all of our towns throughout Lanark county and not concentrated in one area, so that the residents don't have to drive an unreasonable distance to and from their place of employment every day.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the area of tourism, as it affects my riding. Tourism plays a very important role in Lanark county because we have so many beautiful lakes and rivers within our boundaries. I am pleased to see our government including new guidelines for financial assistance to the tourism industry—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): The minister doesn't believe that, does he?

Mr. Wiseman: —as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I hope that this assistance will come in the form of low-interest loans to enable the tourist operators to renovate and update their premises and to meet the demands placed upon them.

I was also pleased to read in the Speech from the Throne that we are going to be asked to approve a programme designed to increase our government's activity in the area of forest management. I believe that this programme is essential to all communities, and particularly to my county of Lanark. There have been instances in the county where people from outside have come in and cut logs, leaving the bush in a very poor condition. I am sure that the residents who have brought these problems to my attention in the past will be very pleased with the new programme of forest management.

Mr. Speaker, I am greatly in favour of land-use controls where agricultural land is concerned, so that good land may be retained for agricultural purposes. Being a farmer myself, it breaks my heart to see good agricultural land being used for housing when we in Lanark have many areas that are rocky and unsuitable for farming—

Mr. Haggerty: The member has got the minister's attention now.

Mr. Wiseman: —but would be well suited for building housing projects. In the near future we are going to need every acre of agricultural land that we can lay our hands on because of the ever-increasing demands to supply food to a growing population.

With regard to land use as it applies to our lakes and rivers in eastern Ontario and in Lanark county, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the government explain to the people their reasons for limiting development on the lakes in many areas. I would like to suggest that a meeting be set up in the areas of natural resources, municipal affairs, health and environment, outlining the reasons for restricting further development along our lakes.

The people should be told that by cleaning up their septic systems and so on, we will be able to open up our lakes to controlled development. If we find as we have in the past, that one-third of our septic systems are not in working order, we should try to develop a programme whereby the residents should be forced to install new septic systems with government assistance in the form of low-interest loans over an extended period.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that a programme of this kind would help to encourage people to improve their septic systems and would further open the beautiful lands along the lakeshores to more residents.

Mr. Stokes: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) doesn't agree with that.

Mr. Wiseman: The final area that I wish to comment on, Mr. Speaker, is the area of roads. I feel that the people of Lanark county need more money for road improvement. The funds they received last year were not sufficient to keep the roads in a satisfactory condition. I realize we are holding the line on spending, Mr. Speaker, but I hope the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) will be given a budget that will enable our people to have the type of roads that they deserve and have become accustomed to.

Mr. Stokes: They are spending it all on Toronto.

Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to see the Minister of Transportation and Communications investigate the possibility of establishing a GO train system from Almonte, Carleton Place and Smiths Falls to Ottawa. I believe that this type of transportation system would enable many of the young people in the area to stay in Lanark county and work in Ottawa, returning to their homes at night. It would also be a good service to our senior citizens and residents of the county as they would be able to visit Ottawa quite frequently. I feel that this system would also benefit residents of Ottawa who would like to visit the rural areas without the necessity of taking a car.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I feel that we will have a very productive and worthwhile session, and I know the government will continue to assist my area, as it will all of Ontario during this session.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Applause from all two of his colleagues.

Mr. Bounsall: Oh, there are more than two here.

I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, the lack of any reference in the Speech from the Throne to impending changes in labour legislation in Ontario, or the introduction of any new legislation or any reference to it, particularly in the area of outlawing professional strike-breaking firms. We have seen them cause so much damage — perhaps irreparable damage — to labour relations at certain industrial locations in Ontario; souring relationships for years, and perhaps permanently, between specific industries and their bargaining agents representing the workers in those plants.

Canadian Driver Pool Ltd. and its guiding force, Mr. Richard Grange — the most blatant example of such disruptive efforts — appears at the moment to have disappeared from the scene temporarily; no doubt, only temporarily. We must formulate now in this province, legislation that makes illegal all strike-breaking activity, and management consultant services — as they now so euphemistically call the services which they provide.

Mr. Speaker, never were the disruptive and violent results of Canadian Driver Pool activities more evident for all to observe than in the strike at Dare Foods (Biscuit Division) Ltd. in Kitchener by Local 173 of the International Union of United Brewery, Flour, Soft drink and Distillery Workers of America. This is a long and bitter strike. It is long and bitter primarily because of the introduction on the scene of this strike-breaking company, 10½ months ago to date, with violent passions engendered on both sides to the point of violence on occasion.

I am going to spend some time, Mr. Speaker, developing and laying out the steps which occurred in this particular strike, which in many ways is a microcosm of all that is still wrong in labour relations in Ontario and negligent in labour legislation in this province. The areas that I can see where our labour relations are falling down, and our legislation is not adequate, are these:

1. The use of professional strike-breaking firms, and the permission by this Legislature for them to operate, through the legislative inactivity by this government in prohibiting them—this government which does little better or little more than observe with interest their machinations and whose members, at best, shake their heads in sadness at the chaos they produce, and then only when we extract it out of the government by questions from this side of the House.

2. The involvement of the judiciary in this province by the continued use of injunctions in labour disputes—and to a certain extent, although this could not be handled in a legislative sense, by the decisions and sentences which it hands down.

3. In labour relations and matters, the employment of the police in every instance on behalf of the company. Indeed, under our present laws they can't do very much otherwise, even if they felt so inclined.

4. The application of the legislation relating to collective bargaining in good faith in this province, and quotes from the Act such as, "making every reasonable effort to reach a collective agreement." Mr. Speaker, these are meaningless motherhood phrases when the ministry will not, independently, assess a situation and apply the statutes themselves in a given situation, rather than one side—usually the bargaining agent—applying them itself; and in the case of not bargaining in good faith, with such pittance fines resulting when successful. The feeling across the whole of the labour movement in this province is that one really just shouldn't bother unless one is purely interested only in scoring debating points.

5. The whole attitude of the government-industrial complex to equality of women and their rights and their dignity in this province—a situation which the Ministry of Labour has not felt inclined to really change, in spite of having under its aegis the Women's Bureau and the Ontario Human Rights Commission and Code. It has not given the proper leadership.

Returning particularly to the Dare situation, Mr. Speaker, this company has a 10-year history of collective bargaining with the Brewery Workers since they received their certification in 1963. One year prior to that, in 1962, the Brewery Workers failed narrowly to receive certification when the executive vice-president addressed all three shifts within the plant within the time limit that he was allowed. This caused the vote to be shifted into the period of the summer when a considerable number of employees were on vacation.

It's interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, in that 1962 vote the reason for the address to all three shifts, when normally only two shifts are employed at this particular plant, was because a third shift had been recently added. The third shift was added because of the strike at the Vancouver, B.C. plant of the one other division of Dare which makes biscuits. The attempt was, of course, to have the west coast of Canada supplied with biscuits produced in this unorganized Dare factory in Ontario.

I will mention at this point a certain personal involvement of a long-range sort in this particular company at Kitchener; and in the actions that took place in 1962 when certification was not gained, and in 1963 when it was.

My wife, Joanne—then my fiancée in 1962—worked with the employees at Dare, first on the packing belt, where in 1962 she received a take-home pay that varied between $30 and $35 a week for standing on her feet throughout the shift in temperatures that sometimes ranged as high as 130 deg. Part-way through that summer, Mr. Speaker, she was shifted to the personnel department and with the grandiose take-home pay for this advancement of $50 a week.

In both positions that she occupied she was involved, one might say, in helping the workers to form themselves into a union. One might say that she was a union agitator—although in the second half of her employment it was assumed by this company that, of course, she wasn't.

To return to the present situation at Dare—or by “the present situation,” meaning a return to almost a year ago—contract negotiations commenced in February, 1972, for renewal of the contract, with April 30, 1972, being the termination date of that contract. Memoranda of agreement were prepared in fact, Mr. Speaker—they had got that far—to the terms of which the negotiating committee agreed.

Finally, on May 27, a secret ballot vote was taken by the membership of that unit, 75 to 80 per cent of which were women. They rejected the final offer on the basis of the discrimination against women. It offered both men and women 30 cents an hour increase in the first year of the contract, but in the second year of the contract, it provided for 10 cents an hour difference between men and women, the offer being 25 cents and 15 cents respectively.

This was incredible in this day of a heightened consciousness of women's contribution to the workplace and to our society—incredible in this day of women's rightful demands for equal opportunity and equal treatment.

In the light of subsequent events that occurred at Dare, Mr. Speaker, one almost suspects that this discriminatory offer was deliberately tendered, knowing that the workers could not and would not agree. Ninety-seven per cent are reported to have voted to reject this contract based on discrimination between men and women.

It was a case, therefore, of the women standing up for their rights in this plant, but the men standing with them in support of those rights. This was on May 27. On May 29, at midnight, the strike commenced with a special picket line thrown up around the company.

Well, it's hard to speculate, but with this small difference—and this being the main point of rejection of the contract; a 10 cent an hour differential between men and women—one might have suspected that the strike would be of short duration and that Dare cookies would soon be available to the general public in the Province of Ontario.

Such was not to be the case, Mr. Speaker, because almost immediately, Canadian Driver Pool—with its whole strike-breaking organization and its group of employees with their shatterproof trucks—was brought into this situation. They arrived on the scene on June 1, ostensibly for the purpose of removing from the plant the cookies which had been produced prior to the strike. However, as is well documented in many other areas across this province where Driver Pool has been involved, they employed much more than that.

In this situation they did not bring their dogs across the picket lines, which has been so often their action and so often has accelerated feelings between the workers and the company. But they certainly brought in their cameras and their security guards with the intent of alienating as much as possible the workers in this strike.

The direct involvement of this strike-breaking firm did not appear to last very long—June 1 through June 5, increasing to a large degree of intensity, disappearing from the scene around June 9 roughly. However, the very appearance at this site of a strike-breaking firm—with its history in this province, with those heading this company having been charged under various Acts in this province for their activities concerning unions was bound to, and it certainly did at this point, cause feelings to be tremendously accelerated.

On June 6 a very regrettable incident occurred. It is now estimated that $38,000 worth of damage occurred at this company as windows were broken in both cars and in the factory. There are charges pending on the events of this particular night. One can say two things of that night. It was certainly brought on by the appearance of Driver Pool and the rest of its strike-breakers at that site. There were outside people involved. At one point in this strike, the representatives of the Brewery Workers and some of the striking workers at this company joined hands in an attempt to keep the outsiders from perpetrating further damage at the site.

There is some evidence—certainly not complete in the sense of being able to indicate specifically where and in what manner — to indicate that not all the damage was done by the outside agitators; but there was some damage, as tempers flared on both sides to make the situation appear worse than what it was, by people inside the plant. That damage could not be attributed to either the Brewery Workers or whoever the outside people were in this situation.

The police at this point, by and large, took a hands-off attitude. There were many on the scene. They stood back and watched what was happening, almost as if they were willing to see the $45,000—which was first reported and then more reliably estimated to be $38,000—of damage proceed. They stood back and watched. When the group of workers joined arms to try to hold back various people causing the damage and to prevent further damage occurring, they did not, it appears, join with them in this endeavour or in any particular way try to cool down the feelings of the people so involved.

Mr. Speaker, this very regrettable incident occurred. It was top news in all the newspapers in Ontario. When one reflects that all this damage occurred and that Driver Pool was involved, all because of 10 cents an hour less offered to women than to men in the second year of a contract, it's almost incredible. To continue further on this women's aspect, one can say this was in a sense, a very small stand for women's rights, although a very important one. The women in this plant were not saying they wanted equal pay with the men in the plant.

An hon. member: They should have been.

Mr. Bounsall: They had different jobs. They were not really stressing at this point that they wanted complete openness and access to those jobs; which they could have done. They were saying something very much less. They were just saying that no matter what jobs they had they would like to see—and we are saying this as well—they would like to see the same increases pertaining to both men and women; which situation did pertain and was offered in the first year of the two-year contract that was being negotiated.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): It should be legislated, but this government will never do it. It is sexist—and gutless!

Mr. Bounsall: There was an opportunity at this time in light of the situation that developed—really before the situation developed—that having known about details of this particular offer, the Ministry of Labour, if it were really involved in seeing that women had their rightful opportunity in this province and their dignity in this province, should and could have been suggesting to Mr. Carl Dare, the owner of the company, or the executive vice-president Mr. Thoms, that it might be appropriate in the second year of this contract to make the offer of equal pay to both men and women employees. In point of fact —

Mr. Laughren: Where was the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon)?

Mr. Bounsall: —the whole situation of this company and what it has offered over the years does not make a very sterling impression that it is interested very much in helping its employees in any material way.

Let's take a look, for example, at the situations that pertain to this plant in Kitchener and to the plant in Vancouver.

In Vancouver one has a 40-hour week. In Kitchener one has a 42½-hour week; they were hoping to reduce it to 40. For female work—this is mainly in the packing area—at Kitchener the rate is $2.26 an hour; at Vancouver, $3.06 an hour. Here we have a company in Ontario which is not very interested in seeing that equal opportunity prevails among its men and women workers in terms of jobs; it is not really interested in seeing that parity be achieved. It is not at all interested, apparently, in seeing that they are treated equally in terms of offers for the future. It also has such a sorry record in terms of what it pays here in Ontario relative to what is being paid in Vancouver.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): And this is supposed to be the province of opportunity.

Mr. Laughren: Where is the Women's Bureau?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): It is there.

An hon. member: They get 80 cents an hour less.

Mr. Foulds: Almost $1 less.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Not better, the best.

Mr. Bounsall: How can this province, which is supposed to be the province of opportunity, see 80 cents an hour less for the women in this province? This is a commentary, Mr. Speaker, I believe, on what the Ministry of Labour thinks is acceptable—or, by its omission of activity in this area, thinks is acceptable. The male help, for that matter, isn't that much better relative to Vancouver. The male help, as a starting salary, runs from $2.66 to $2.95 in Ontario, compared to $3.77 to $4.07 in Vancouver.

I have more remarks on this subject, Mr. Speaker, but as we are at a natural break point in my remarks before I shift into another major area, I would like to adjourn the debate.

Mr. Speaker: It is not necessary to adjourn the debate. The hon. member may carry on when we resume at 8.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor West was speaking at the hour of recess.

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will continue more briefly, perhaps, than I did before the break for supper at 6 o'clock.

In the situation at Dare Foods Co., Kitchener, there is, as I mentioned, a prolonged strike. It has gone on for 10½ months and is mainly based on the fact that in the second year of the contract the women at that plant were offered 10 cents an hour less than the men were offered. Their first year of the contract was identical.

Mr. Speaker, I have already mentioned the introduction into this strike of a firm which is guaranteed to escalate feelings, that is Canadian Driver Pool. Its continued presence for some days escalated feelings on both sides while it trucked out the products already manufactured before the strike came into being.

We had violence which occurred on June 6. We now move into the interesting area of the continued use in this province of injunctions in labour disputes. On June 12, Dare Foods obtained an injunction from the Supreme Court of Ontario which would allow peaceful entrance to and exit from the plant. This was to assure, Mr. Speaker, that the products could be moved from that plant and that people could enter freely and perhaps employees be found and hired — non-union employees, commonly referred to as scabs—in order possibly to continue production at this plant.

Ex-parte injunctions are no longer used in Ontario. Ex-parte injunctions passed out just a short time ago. Injunctions have been used in labour disputes since 1880 or 1890 as a means of breaking strikes and, even though the lawyers or representatives of the union involved in a strike may be present, they are still granted. One wonders just how much attention, if any, is paid to the representation made on behalf of the workers in this province with respect to any strike injunctions.

In many states in the United States injunctions are no longer granted in labour disputes; in some of them since 1936. It is time now—if not 20 or 30 years overdue—that the use of injunctions in labour disputes in this province be banned.

July 6 saw the first appearance of non-union labour in large quantities at this plant.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): All injunctions or just ex-parte?

Mr. Bounsall: Ex-parte are already not used in the Province of Ontario in labour disputes.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: No injunction should be permitted.

Mr. Bounsall: This is present in some states in the United States and in some states as far back as 1936.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It was in 1937 when our labour laws took a great step forward as I recall it.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The member for Brant can remember! Like everything else the government was behind the times.

Mr. Bounsall: Some more violence arose at that time as the picketers, needless to say—with the involvement of Driver Pool and the history of this strike up to this point—were involved in some breaking of car windows and some jostling of the people attempting to get in. There were attempts by the strikers to prevent the entry of vehicles, and as a result, various court actions were taken by the company. I'll mention court actions in a little more detail later on. But it appears that again we had Canadian Driver Pool involved by the use of station wagons to bring personnel in and, of course, escorted throughout by the Kitchener police. The way our laws now read—laws which we should consider changing — they really had no other choice but to do so.

In any event, as a result of this a second injunction was passed on July 14 which limited severely the number of pickets to four at any one time at any one of the four entrances. The picketers were limited to Dare employees and officers of the local union No. 173. It, in fact, prohibited international staff of this union from going on the picket line, and if there is any group of people who might be able to not further escalate feelings but bring more sanity and rationality to a situation it would be some of the international staff. It's an unusual decision, as far as I can see, that members of this group should have been prohibited from appearing on the picket line as one of those four.

The injunction further required that at least 50 per cent of the pickets at any one entrance be women. This injunction assured continued production at this plant, even in a very small way if you like, by the use of strikebreaking employees, employees who would be assured of being transported into the plant under the care and protection of the police.

I might just mention at this point a couple of small thoughts on the police involvement in this strike. I'm not going to dwell unduly on it except to say that there was one incident which was indeed interesting.

On Monday, June 5—this was when Driver Pool was still sending large vehicles into this plant to take out the production—on Highway 8, at about noon, there was a three-vehicle pileup. This came about as a result of tractor-trailers heading for the strikebound plant being involved in a collision when, as they were being escorted by a police cruiser at their head, they collided when the police cruiser pulled up rather sharply, having noticed a radio station news car of CHYM stationed near the Freepoint Bridge to report on their noon-hour news the arrival of any further vehicles to help in the removal of production. As the cruiser braked it was struck from behind by a green panel truck which, in turn, was rammed by the lead tractor-trailer heading for the strike. Other tractor-trailers then piled into each other. Each truck carried a driver and a passenger and some three persons were injured.

There was a bit of a furore in Kitchener police circles as to what authority this particular policeman had outside of the boundaries of Kitchener in the apparent escorting of trucks of Driver Pool to Dare, and his immediate reaction upon seeing a radio station car which might be reporting their approach. The damage was estimated at $8,150 and it's reported that Canadian Driver Pool was paying the damages that resulted from these collisions.

The only other thing that I might report about police involvement is that the chief of police in Kitchener was often heard to complain about the cost of that strike to the taxpayers of the city of Kitchener, as they were all required to be paid overtime for duty at that particular location. When one policeman was being paid $8 or $9 an hour, and in some cases there were 40-plus policemen there, the police were being paid over $300 an hour and sometimes close to $400 an hour to be present.

These police turned up repeatedly. They were sent by the city of Kitchener and by the police chief, in spite of requests on the part of the union to have the police not appear as that seemed to them to be one of the causes of tempers and feelings being escalated. In spite of their requests, they were sent at that terrific cost per hour to the taxpayers of the city of Kitchener.

One might ask what was the company doing, apart from employing the services of strike-breakers throughout all this? In mid-June it withdrew all its previous offers and put back on the bargaining table the fact that it would no longer agree to a union shop or checkoff provisions. It demanded that the union pay the full amount of the damages that occurred to the company property as a result of the June 6 incidents there. They also continued in the month of July and thereafter to advertise quite widely for workers in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record. In point of fact, Manpower in the city of Kitchener provided workers for this particular opening.

When the federal Minister of Labour was informed that they were referring people to the strikebound plants, a spokesman, on being questioned said that the federal job placement service tries to maintain neutrality when dealing with a strike-breaking plant.

He said, "We cannot refuse service to a company where there is a strike. We accept their requirements when the job seeker shows an interest in vacancies at that plant, but we make very sure he knows about the strike. Any referral slip we give a potential employee records the fact that we are informing him of the strike, but it's his job to make the decision as to whether or not to go."

That's very interesting, Mr. Speaker, that throughout this with the company on strike Manpower should be playing this sort of a role in interfering with labour relations in the Province of Ontario—

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Absolutely shameful!

Mr. Bounsall: —and be referring prospective employees to a strikebound plant. I think that should no longer be tolerated in the civilized areas of our province, where the province so often tries it appears, with greater or lesser degrees of success, to solve the differences amongst the parties involved.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Shameful, but not surprising.

Mr. Bounsall: They also put out several letters and made numerous phone calls to all employees of the company to persuade them to return. They used the technique of phoning one person up and saying her particular friend—the company was small enough so that one knew who were friends of whom—is thinking of returning to work or was going to be returning to work, so why didn't she come back too? They made those two phone calls simultaneously, with the information being by and large incorrect in each case, so that one figured the other was going back and this caused both to turn up.

They also issued various letters to their employees. I won't read these letters in detail but, as a result of these letters, writs came out.

Mr. Laughren: Go ahead!

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Read them.

Mr. Laughren: The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) would like to hear them.

Mr. Bounsall: The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) would like to hear them.

An hon. member: In detail.

Mr. Deans: Spell the big words.

Mr. Foulds: Being anti-labour, he'd like to hear these.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): I'd read them out.

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Go ahead! I have heard a lot of fairy tales.

Mr. Deans: Spell the words over the size of "and."

Mr. Bounsall: Right. These are letters of June 23 and July 19, in which they—

Mr. Laughren: Try to get his attention first. The member for Timiskaming, please listen.

Mr. Bounsall: —really contravene various portions of the Labour Relations Act in intimidating and trying to change the salaries which they were offering, all of which is against the Labour Relations Act. This resulted in the Ontario Labour Relations Board on Oct. 5 granting the petition of the union for leave to prosecute the company under sections 56, 58(a), 58(c), 59 and 61 of the Labour Relations Act, which relate to the intimidation of the trade union and the representatives of the employees by their advertisements and their letters discriminating against members of the trade union because they are members of the trade union exercising their right, and because of advertisements to compel the employees to refrain from becoming or continuing to be members of the particular union. They said through the advertisements that William M. Thom, the executive vice-president, sought by intimidation and coercion to compel persons to refrain from becoming or continuing to be, and hopefully ceasing to be, members of that particular trade union.

Mr. Deans: He was following the government line.

Mr. Laughren: Shocking, but not surprising.

Mr. Bounsall: Leave to prosecute has been granted and I understand that the hearing in this particular prosecution is coming up this Friday.

Throughout this there have been attempts at mediation. On July 21 the mediation department convened a meeting in which the company did offer an additional 10 cents per hour to the female employees, and the employees had to agree to pay damages which the company sustained—the 10 cents an hour being the reason why the strike was held in the first place. But, here again, the offer was made in a way that couldn't possibly be accepted because it provided that the union shop clause had to be removed and the checkoff provisions dropped; so the acceptance of this would have meant that part of the plant would be run by union personnel and they would be allowed to use non-union personnel as well.

Shortly after the decision on Oct. 5, in which Local 173 was allowed to prosecute Dare, the company, presumably in a fit of pique over that particular decision and as a result of a quite successful boycott of their products in some areas around the province and by some of the major supermarkets which did not renew their contracts with Dare until this strike was settled, filed a $1.6-million suit against the union and the Ontario Federation of Labour for this particular kind of action.

Another mediation attempt took place on Nov. 2. A Ministry of Labour mediator, Mr. Hal Howells, again came down and presented Dare's latest offer to the brewery workers. Again, it contained no union shop, no retroactive pay; the company would reserve the right to discipline or discharge employees convicted of offences. They said they would not rehire 10 employees, those names to be released after the agreement was reached; and there would be 10 employees who they would suspend for a further six months, and again with the names not to be released unless it was agreed to. They said they would pay the extra 10 cents an hour to the female workers in the second year, and withdrew the $38,000 damage claim.

Mr. Foulds: Sounds like the Court of the Star Chamber.

Mr. Bounsall: But again, it was automatic that this sort of proposal would be rejected with the entire security, retroactive pay and union shop points in that proposal. With respect to the women's involvement in this particular strike, the Ontario Committee on the Status of Women at one point in September wrote to Mr. C. M. Dare, the president of Dare Biscuits, and said to him, and I quote:

On behalf of the fair employment practices subcommittee of the Ontario Committee on the Status of Women, I respectfully request that you personally make a sincere offer to bring management and striking workers at Dare Biscuits together and back to work because of the following practices, which in our opinion discriminate against women: A smaller wage offered to the women, thereby increasing the already wide gap between men's and women's wages; assembly-line speedups occurred whenever the company desired, all personnel being female that were involved; no fixed lunch breaks for women, subject to the company's requirements; female employees obliged to stand at all times; no sitting permitted in the work area even during a pause or breakdown in production; female workers obliged to raise their hands and ask permission to go to the washroom.

Again, they mention that the company employed the services of a strike-breaking firm, Canadian Driver Pool, against the strikers, over 80 per cent of whom were women. They go on to talk further in general about the strike, and it's signed by Pat Sellers, on behalf of the fair employment practices subcommittee of the Ontario committee on the status of women.

It shows how this group of women was concerned about what really is the major issue in this strike. When one looks further at the discrimination occurring against women here in this strike, one finds some other interesting points on which they would like to have some say, and I think which we would feel were only just.

One of the points is that women must wear dress uniforms as opposed to the men's uniforms, which do, of course, have pants. The women would like this same provision extended to them. This is rather important, because in the fly and mosquito time the packers on the belt have no opportunity to take care of this particular irritation, and sometimes it has become so bad that management goes down the line and sprays the women's legs. In one case, there was a woman who was doing a job usually done by a man, but who didn't receive the regular job pay because the company said she wasn't doing the full job. Later she was laid off and a man with much less experience and less seniority took over the job and he received the full job rate.

Mr. Laughren: Sounds like a civil service job to me.

Mr. Bounsall: One really wonders whether they were making any serious attempt at any time to be fair with the women in this company.

Mr. Foulds: Sounds like a task force on the state of early childhood education.

An hon. member: Sounds like the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells).

Mr. Bounsall: On the subject of washrooms, there are three washrooms for 30 men who are there per shift, and one washroom for the 70 to 100 women per shift who are employed at this plant.

Mr. Foulds: Intolerable discrimination.

Mr. Bounsall: There are several other minor points. The men have long, large lockers; the women have boxlike ones. This again, in a plant in which 80 per cent of the workers are women.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at some length about all the injustices that have occurred here. I won't go on any further except to mention another odd point or two about the extent to which feelings were affected in this particular strike. It led to the death of one particular employee, by suicide, a Mr. David Ruston, who—as a result of his activities on the night of July 2 and July 7, when the first group of strike-breakers was being escorted in by the police and Driver Pool—was charged and a court order issued that he had to stay 1,000 feet away from the picket line, have no contact with union members, and could no longer attend union meetings. This person, Mr. Speaker, was very depressed by this and eventually in the month of August committed suicide because of this depression. At least, he committed suicide by asphyxiation; it would appear that the particular requirements laid on him as a result of this activity brought it about.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there have been six people charged and sentenced in this strike. Four of them are appealing; one is serving sentence and one person has already completed his sentence. Again, it shows the degree of feelings involved in this strike for events of this nature to take place. What is needed in this strike, Mr. Speaker, beyond any shadow of a doubt, is that from here on in, if possible, feelings be cooled as much as possible in the hope that a reasonable settlement can be achieved; a settlement which would allow these women to return to work under conditions that are humane and just to them.

Throughout this, acts of violence occurred on both sides, particularly with the introduction of the professional strike-breaking company, Canadian Driver Pool. In this province, we must form legislation to prevent the operation of any and all professional strike-breaking companies.

When the history of labour in this half century in this province is written, this strike will certainly be recorded as the first instance when women really stood up for their rights in this province and the men stood with them. This is a strike which, as I say, will go down in history and from that point, if no other, is a very just one.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, before the next speaker in this debate, I might draw to the attention of the House that we have the galleries filled tonight with residents of Scarborough North. This is an annual pilgrimage to Queen's Park and I thought I would mention that in about 15 minutes these people will leave and the other 200 waiting outside will take their place.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Huron.

Mr. J. Riddell (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I deem it an honour to be given this opportunity to speak to the assembly considering that I have occupied this seat in the House for such a short period of time.

Before I begin my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of the wise old saying, "Blessed be the man who, having nothing to say, refrains from giving ample evidence of that fact." If at the end of my speech, Mr. Speaker, I am able to sense the feeling of the assembly and I am left with the impression that I should have taken a message from this saying, I won't be too highly insulted. From my brief observations I am quite convinced I won't have been the only one who stood in these chambers to speak and actually had very little, if anything, of great importance to say.

However, in my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, I do have something important to say! Before launching out in my delivery I think it is worthy of note that I am talking, more or less, into a vacuum for as I look out over the House all I can see are empty blue chairs. I realize that anything I might say at this early stage of my political life might be considered by the more experienced members to be of very little significance, and that more important work is awaiting them elsewhere.

However, I was shocked to see the ministers and most of the other members of the Conservative Party vacate their chairs when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. F. Nixon) stood up to debate the Speech from the Throne. And in my humble opinion this was the most disgraceful, distasteful, disrespectful and irresponsible act that I have ever seen performed by persons who are supposedly entrusted with the ability and authority and confidence of their constituents to govern the affairs of the country with a certain degree of accountability and responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, at the swearing-in ceremony for the hon. member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), and myself, and at the same time we were introduced to the Legislature, you witnessed the attendance of some 250 people from our riding, the large majority of whom, sir, have never been in the House before. And you must have been embarrassed, as I was, to see the Conservative members vacate their chairs when the hon. leader of the Liberal Party got up to debate the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that these people were astounded at such behaviour. It was not only their feeling, but mine as well, that if more of the electorates throughout Ontario would visit the House unannounced while it was in session, the Conservatives might find themselves sitting on the opposition side of the House after the next general election.

It is our contention, Mr. Speaker, that this will happen anyway—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Right on.

Mr. Riddell: —for never has the Province of Ontario been in such a sorry state of affairs as it is in today, simply because of irresponsible government; and the people now know it.

At the time of the by-elections, Mr. Speaker, the Premier (Mr. Davis) and his colleagues stated many times that the Liberal and NDP candidates were creating issues that didn't exist. Red herrings, they called it! Well, Mr. Speaker, with a provincial deficit of $800 million, or as it has been more accurately predicted, $1 billion, I would prefer to think that we were dealing with a big blue herring! And the sooner that this big blue herring is diminished in size, either through genetic means or more preferably through elected means, the sooner accountability will be brought back to government.

The threat of regional government in our riding was supposedly another red herring, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is now denying charges that he ever intended regional government to become established in western Ontario. Yet the former member for Huron and his hand-picked candidate, who contested the by-election in the Huron riding, openly stated that regional government was recommended for Huron county, but on a present county boundary basis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you can tell me how regional government can be kept within the confines of present boundaries when it can't hope to meet the population guidelines laid down by the government of 150,000. Huron county has a population of 52,000 people and the largest urban centre in the county has a population of around 6,000 people, which in itself wouldn't even qualify for local government guidelines of 10,000 to 12,000 people under a regional government system.

This means that for regional government to become established in western Ontario under the present standards, neighbouring counties would have to be amalgamated with Huron county and three or four towns scattered across the riding would have to be governed by one body.

Mr. Speaker, I can inform you that the constituents in the Huron riding are not going to be treated as nothing more than a cog in a wheel of the big blue machine. And municipal governments are not going to disband in favour of a bureaucracy.

I firmly believe that the results of the last two by-elections have given the Premier a pretty good indication that people still want to have a say in the affairs of their country. It is rather obvious that the Premier is starting to listen. Saturday's edition of the London Free Press quoted the Treasurer (Mr. White) who, I am sure consults with the Premier once in a while, as saying that the provincial government will consider a two-year moratorium on the implementation of regional government in the Hamilton-Wentworth area. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if this two-year period is simply a random selection or could it be coincidental with the time set for the next general election?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Could be!

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): It was in the last election.

Mr. Riddell: It would appear that the government is losing the confidence of the people and it knows this only too well at this particular stage of the game.

I call it a game, Mr. Speaker, because really the government has been playing games at the expense of the taxpayers. Rather than acting in the best interests of the country, many of the ministers and their colleagues have obviously been acting in their own selfish interests along with those of their friends. As long as this government is re-elected with such an overbearing majority, I am afraid the trend will continue whereby a few people become very wealthy at the expense of many.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Riddell: I will even go out on a limb, Mr. Speaker, and say that many of the present members of the Conservative Party will, in all probability, not choose to contest the next general election—

Mr. E. M. Havrot (Timiskaming): Dreamer!

Mr. Riddell:—simply because they have lost faith in their party policies and administration and, more particularly, in their present leadership.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: How about that!

Mr. Riddell: As an example of my predictions, I would be surprised if the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) contests the next election, not because he is dissatisfied with the affairs of his own ministry but because he is a man of integrity. He must surely be disturbed—

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): He only took $3,000.

Mr. Riddell:—with some of the practices of his colleagues.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): And he's afraid of Max Chikofskyl

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Riddell: I would like at this time, Mr. Speaker, to pay my respects to Bill Stewart. I believe he is one of the few ministers who know what is going on within their ministries. I think, by and large, that Mr. Stewart has served the rural people of Ontario well.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I would like to point out, with respect, to the hon. member that we do not refer to ministers by their first names or last names. We must use the term, the hon. minister.

Mr. Riddell: My apologies, sir.

Mr. Ruston: He doesn't mind. Bill doesn't mind.

Mr. Riddell: I think, by and large, that the hon. Mr. Stewart—the hon. minister—

Mr. Lewis: The member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) wrote this portion.

Mr. Riddell:—has served the rural people of Ontario well—

Mr. Germa: He is going to pave the farmyard.

Mr. Riddell:—through his ministry. I am sure that he has not only been a great asset to his constituency and rural people right across Ontario—but also to the Conservative Party in the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Havrot: Just like the rest of the Conservative members.

Mr. Riddell: Although we might fault him for using poor judgement in some matters, such as spending $3,000 of the taxpayers' money to pave his feed lot, I do not believe that his intentions were ever to sacrifice the people of Ontario for his own personal gain.

An hon. member: What is the member talking about?

Mr. Riddell: While I am handing out bouquets, Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the former member for the Huron riding who most certainly was a good man for Huron, and obviously, by the number of ministries that he headed in government during his political career, he must have been considered a good man for the Conservative Party; and I am sure he must have been well respected by his own colleagues and leaders.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Riddell: However, the former member for Huron, to the amazement of his own supporters, blemished his character somewhat: first by forcing his executive assistant, Mr. Southcott, on the people in the recent by-election; and second, by stating after the election results were in that the people of Huron county would regret their decision. I firmly believe, Mr. Speaker, that this was a statement made at the spur of the moment, and if the former member for Huron had given this matter some thought, he would have realized the complete absurdity of such a statement and no doubt would have abstained from making it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Well, he is on the racing commission now; so he will feel a little better about that.

Mr. Riddell: However, because the statement was made, Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to say that I will work every bit as hard as the former member for Huron did for the betterment of society in Huron county—and in Ontario for that matter. If I fail to live up to this commitment, then I will be prepared to surrender my position with integrity and with honour when the next election rolls around. And I trust that I will be man enough to congratulate my successor and wish him the very best in his future endeavours.

An hon. member: See what happens.

Mr. Havrot: It will be another Conservative.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, as yet I have said very little about Huron county, but I feel obligated to do so seeing that it is one of the most aggressive and self-sustaining counties in Ontario, and is unique in that there's practically an even balance of rural and urban people with the scale being tipped a little in favour of the rural people.

I was somewhat amused but also highly insulted by the statement that Mr. Southcott, Conservative candidate in the last by-election, made in a flyer that he sent out across the riding. The article read as follows:

Don Southcott says he is amazed at the talent he found while covering the riding. He says he has met more people who are sure that they can do three things better than anyone else on earth—like drive a car, make love and organize a political campaign.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): In that order, yes.

Mr. Riddell: Have you ever heard such nonsense—

Mr. Singer: Tory nonsense.

Mr. Riddell: —from one who aspired to become a political figure?

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Sounds like the member for Downsview.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, any time we in this Legislature think that we have been bestowed with God-given rights and talents that others supposedly do not possess, then we had better get back out into our constituencies and observe for ourselves that God shows no favouritism.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I hope those Tories up there are better at making love than they are at organizing a Tory campaign.

Mr. Singer: The Minister of Agriculture and Food is disgusted at that.

Mr. Riddell: Huron county has very capable people at local and county levels who are able to plan and make decisions on their own initiative and who are not prepared to accept policies imposed by the Ontario government without being consulted and without having a voice in the proposal of policies which will ultimately affect the area in which they live and work. They remember too well the railroad job that was done in establishing county school boards.

Mr. Singer: Order, Mr. Speaker, for the members who want to listen.

Mr. Riddell: They have seen the cost of education escalate beyond reason, since the centralization of our local schools and school boards.

Strange as it may seem, the added costs have not been justified by an enhanced educational system. According to an article in Saturday's London Free Press, 22 London elementary public schools were checked and the tests showed that pupils are below the national standard in many subject areas such as vocabulary, mathematical concepts and mathematical problem solving. This may not have anything to do with the administration of our schools, but it does say something about the educational programme which is supposedly designed for the benefit of the students.

As a former trustee of the Huron county school board, I respect the ability and dedication of my former colleagues and the board's administrators. I am inclined to believe that larger units of administration have made possible the provision of special education services that would not have been economically possible under the former fragmented system. However, the centralization of our local school boards under a county system is a typical example of the workings of regional government where the powers and authority and the decisions rests with the provincial government.

The regional governments are expected to cater to its every whim and fancy. The county school boards are really nothing more than rubber stamps. I am sure that if the boards had been given the responsibility of running their own affairs, our educational standards would not now be jeopardized because of imposed ceilings on the boards' budgets.

I think I should point out at this time, Mr. Speaker, that the boards of education were not responsible for the building of more schools in the wake of declining enrolment, but that such misjudgement and mismanagement of public funds again stems from the complete inadequacy of the present government.

An hon. member: Right on. The minister's got the message. He's got to go.

Mr. Havrot: Blame it on the school boards.

Mr. Singer: The minister knows. He knows.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Restrain yourself.

Mr. Riddell: As a result, schools will be closed down and many teachers will be dismissed.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Did the member for Downsview write that? Did he write that speech?

Mr. Singer: Wells' speech? No, no; the minister won't listen to me.

Mr. Riddell: How then do you explain the expenditures that are tied up in these vacated schools? I am probably not as concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the business administration of our schools as I am about the educational programmes to which our young people are subjected. Our educational curriculums have been bounced around like a volleyball, dating back to the time that Mr. Robarts was Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. Singer: Education.

Mr. Riddell: Minister of Education, pardon me.

Mr. Singer: He ran it like the Department of Agriculture.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Riddell: The greatest bounce came when the present Premier was acting in that capacity. We have seen the system go from one of structured courses, basic compulsory subjects, and disciplinary measures, to one of open concepts, a do-your-own-thing attitude, a definite lack of discipline, and now a credit system that has affected secondary school education much more than the formation of larger units of administration.

The credit system might have some merits, but I am inclined to believe that pupils at the grade 8 level are neither mature enough, wise enough nor sufficiently sure of future goals to pick the right subjects, if there are such things, for grade 9. I am afraid that many grade subjects are picked either on the basis of prejudice of older brothers or sisters, sometimes even parents, or on the consensus of popularity by the peer group. Sometimes a rather frustrating or bitter past experience with a teacher can easily colour a youngster's perspective. Conversely, a happy experience that has nothing really to do with the subject itself can have a powerful influence.

I am one of the proponents of a compulsory course at the first- and second-year levels in secondary school education, and I'm sure that had the Premier been compelled to study mathematics in secondary school, he could have added $600 million and $200 million and arrived at $800 million with very little difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, if you will pardon the digression, I will get back to remarks I wish to make about Huron county. At the present time there are in the county 16 townships with a population of approximately 29,000, there are five towns with a population of 18,500 people, and five villages with a population of approximately 4,000 people. This, according to my mathematics, adds up to 51,500 people.

By the year 1990 the county planners have proposed that the rural population in the townships will remain the same, but the five towns will increase their population by 12,000 and the villages by 3,000 people. It is anticipated that the increased urbanization of the London and Kitchener areas will begin to have a spillover effect in Huron county.

Although the long-term historical population trend has been a reduction in population of about 300 to 500 persons per annum since 1880, which has been brought about in the past by the depopulation of the rural farming communities of the county due to the mechanization and economics of the farming industry, it is probable that this trend has substantially ceased and that a stable population of the farming industry will be experienced in the future.

It is anticipated that the modest population increase in the 10 incorporated towns and villages will continue and will increase as these municipalities offer a higher level of municipal services. It is assumed that the public interest is best served by directing future urban growth to those areas and municipalities which have the capacity to absorb additional development as economically as possible.

Most future urban development in the county will occur on full municipal services. Rural residential development may be permitted in areas designated as agricultural, subject of course to the land division policy of the county plan.

It is assumed that it is not in the public interest to allow substantial additions to the cottage development along Lake Huron and that further lakeshore development will be curtailed until such time as it has been found that no municipality or county or provincial agency wishes to acquire additional land for public purposes.

It is assumed that the necessary additional municipal services for water supply and sewage disposal, as noted in the plan, will be undertaken by the respective local municipalities and that the capacity for urban development will be made available.

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned briefly the plans for Huron county and, as you well know, the implementation of such plans poses many problems. Planning is not new. It was done more than 140 years ago with very little change or concern for planning until these past few years. The original surveys divided their land into neat 100-acre parcels, bounded by roads laid out in a systematic manner. Towns and villages were first located at river mouths, on streams and later on railway lines, as means of transportation were important.

Most towns, villages and hamlets were surveyed in a proper way, with streets properly laid out. Some of these prospered and some disappeared. Nevertheless, this system was adequate for over 100 years. Within recent years, however, a spillover has occurred and the trend is continuing. Towns and cities are bulging and spilling out into the county concessions and locating in clusters here and there with no thought given to the effects of these developments on the rural countryside and the wise use of our land resources.

At present, Huron county and the Province of Ontario are co-operating in a study of rural development and its effects and desirability. Such development cannot be justified without a reasonable consolidation of land to maintain field efficiency. We in Huron can still put together a viable farm unit but without proper planning the problem will occur. In planning our livestock operations, a new series of problems arises, such as air pollution from animal waste products, either in storage or when spread on fields, and pollution from sprays which strikes fear in the urban mother with a small family on a small lot in the country. Fences around farm boundaries are always a problem. There is an apparent lack of respect for fences by sports enthusiasts. Dogs owned by urban people seeking a country home cause considerable concern to farm operators as well.

From the study must come recommendations for the amount and location of recreational land available for both private and public development. Sound planning must be done for housing and commercial and industrial development to avoid a clash between true farming interests and non-farming interests. Since the original planning over 100 years ago, the trend has been to fragment these 100 acres into one, 10, or even 25-acre lots for the construction of houses, gas stations, and so forth.

A study in Wisconsin indicated that by 1980 a cash crop farm in that area capable of returning a good income would require 1,600 acres. Beef and hog farms would have to have investments of between $500,000 and $1 million in order to operate profitably.

These are probably inflated figures for Ontario, but the trend is there and may be more true than we realize. These are realities from which we cannot escape. These farm units cannot be established by accumulating 10 acres here, the back end of a farm there, and another 50 acres up the road. Proof of the trend towards more acres is that the largest increase in tractor sales in the past few years has been in the over-100 horsepower class.

Standards of service must be upgraded in the rural areas to accommodate the urbanites, services such as snowploughing early in the morning to permit travel to and from work, grading of roads, garbage disposal and other services. School bus routes are often changed to accommodate the most children in one area, resulting in rural children on the concession roads being picked up first and returned home last.

These are just a few problems, Mr. Speaker, associated with rural planning, but there are just as many problems in connection with planning urban areas. Towns are struggling to maintain industries in order to keep their people employed and their taxes to a minimum, as most villages are heavily populated with retired people. Most villages and some towns have documented evidence of septic tank contamination of nearby streams and have no alternative but the installation of expensive sewage systems.

A lack of planning in some towns and villages resulted in a great number of non-conforming uses in zoned areas. The expense of services such as water, sewage, roads and recreation to serve a few people has led to real hardship for small towns and villages. Yet our towns and villages are essential to the farming community.

One area which could stand to be improved in helping our towns and villages to survive would be a speeding-up and a lessening of the red tape involved, in setting up five- to 20-lot subdivisions within their limits.

This would benefit towns and lessen the pressure for lot development in rural areas.

In all cases, a positive approach to planning is a progressive approach, but it must be done at the local level. The idea that planning results in protection must be stressed. The person wanting a house and lot in the country because there are no zoning regulations against it, must recognize that in that situation there are also no regulations against an expanded hog operation, or a gas station, or the village dump being located next to him.

With no planning, you get a hodge-podge of conflicting land uses and they all seem to land on the lap of the municipal council. At the present time there is not a shortage of good agricultural land in Ontario. However, the need for preserving it is becoming more clear every year as we see more good farmland being paved, built on, driven on or excavated. It is a crop rotation, Mr. Speaker, which cannot be repeated.

Again, all of us wish to preserve the visual effects of our countryside, such as maple tree bush, river valleys and rolling pasture land, but who is going to pay for this preservation? The landowner who has his land frozen for recreational or agricultural purposes, who might otherwise realize $1,000 per acre for some other use? Or the taxpayer who could be asked to share in compensation to landowners whose land is frozen at a value less than could be realized on the open market?

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that the land is the farmer's bank account, or his retirement savings plan, or his nest egg against hard times, and by freezing the value of this land his savings have been reduced by one half. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it will take brilliant minds to solve that problem.

Mr. Speaker, I seem to be emphasizing the importance of planning at all levels of government and the reason for this is that I personally believe there has been a very definite deficiency in this area on the part of all government. I am not that naive to think that regional planning is unnecessary and that regional planning no doubt suggests the necessity of having a regional form of government, which I am opposed to on the basis of the manner in which it has been proposed and imposed.

I don't believe you can have regional planning without having a regional form of government, providing that such a government is structured to simply reinforce municipal and county governments.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Riddell: Regional planning is not a single-purpose planning scheme which would serve to only establish policy or design for one project for one given area. Rather, regional planning is comprehensive planning, combining numerous single functions to benefit a large area.

Therefore, the implication of reinforced municipal and county government bodies is quite apparent and certainly the Ontario government becomes quite involved, as it is the only government which has the authority, both moral and legislative, to implement a broad range of social, economic and physical policies and programmes.

Ontario's regional policy, Mr. Speaker, both planning and government, is confused and confusing.

Mr. Good: That's for sure.

Mr. Riddell: Simply stated, there are two opposing forces in regional definitions for purposes of regional planning. Functional planning requires large areas for control—not for efficiency, as is so often stated—whereas social planning requires small areas for human interactions and relationships. Put another way, policies are set for large areas in general terms while implementation requires small areas for local adjustment and interpretation. These factors conflict in defining regions and the region will always be a compromise between the two.

Here are a few observations, Mr. Speaker, in connection with regional planning in rural areas. The Ontario planning regions, five in all, are too large for regional planning. They are based on urban economic theory, more commonly called growth points or growth poles. In such theory, rural areas are treated as residual areas and are definitely of secondary importance.

Although urban areas have larger problems in the provincial sense, this does not mean the rural areas do not have problems which are very significant to the people living there. The province has neither the quality nor quantity of staff for a regional planning programme of the magnitude it is talking about. Planners with rural municipal experience are virtually non-existent.

The regional planning programme is essentially regional economic analysis with a minimum of physical and no social planning. Hence, it is not very comprehensive and does not deal in implementation except via sweeping control methods, such as ministers' zoning orders. Public participation is non-existent and, based on the size of the regions, non-attainable.

In summarizing my remarks about planning, I would like to review Huron county's planning approach and point out certain key factors. Huron county is carrying out certain phases of regional planning. It has a county plan and, based on this plan, local municipal plans which contain a great deal of public participation are being developed. The restraining factor is local staff and not provincial staff.

One point which should be made, and made quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, is that municipalities or regions, regardless of size, must plan. They must, I feel, set policies to determine their future. They cannot just drift. I believe the province must be prepared to assist in both a financial and an advisory capacity.

I detected in the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, that the government is concerned about preserving the province's land, environment and resources. Therefore, I would like to say a word about conservation in Huron county.

Approximately 98 per cent of Huron county is covered by conservation authorities, primarily by the Ausable, Bayfield and Maitland Valleys Conservation Authorities. The Saugeen Valley authority extends into the northern fringe of the county. Conservation authorities are a type of regional government but at a grass-roots level and although they do not really govern, they do manage the renewable natural resources of the watershed.

Every municipality in the county but one has a representative on one or two of the conservation authorities. These authority members decide what programmes will be undertaken and ensure the wise use and management of the county's natural resources. Examples of some of these programmes which have benefited the county are flood control, erosion control, reforestation and provision of recreational open space. I would like to elaborate on each one of these programmes, Mr. Speaker, but time does not permit.

Other less visible but equally important programmes include the restoration and conservation of fish and wildlife; conservation education; pollution monitoring; conservation services for landowners, such as tree planting; land-use planning input to official plan; zoning bylaws; severance applications; and subdivision proposals.

Concerns of the authorities for the future will be, first, continued acquisition of key recreational lands for public use in the face of accelerating demands for these lands by private individuals; second, further control of flood plains and valley lands to keep development out of hazardous areas and reduce the necessity for costly flood-prevention measures such as dams and concrete channels; third, continued work on the problem of prime agricultural land washing away into gulleys, and a serious look at what should be done along the Lake Huron shoreline; and fourth, stepped-up programmes to increase fish and wildlife populations and protect existing important swamp and wooded areas.

All of these activities take money—money for staff and offices, tools and equipment, and money for engineering and construction projects. Traditionally, this has never been much of a problem. The local people saw the benefits and put up their share, which ranged from 30 to 50 per cent of the authority's budget. The government of Ontario was always ready to help with its share. Dollar value received, the authorities have, through the conservation authorities branch, since 1946 provided more services to the people at a lower cost than any other government programme.

Now the crunch is coming, Mr. Speaker. The big squeeze is on. The municipalities still have their share ready, but it appears that the government is falling down on its part of the deal. The quickest way to make an organization inefficient and ineffective is to cut back its operating funds until it can no longer operate.

The conservation authorities across Ontario, now numbering 39, have just about been pushed to this point. Already many authorities have had to curtail, cancel or postpone programmes for lack of government grants. The government of this province has consistently and repeatedly reiterated its support for, and belief in, the conservation authority movement. Every municipality and every citizen stands to lose if this support turns out to be nothing more than verbal.

I think it is time, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier realized that there are areas outside of Toronto which require adequate financial assistance, and that people in these outlying areas are not convinced that what is good for Toronto is also good for them. I would rather choose to believe, sir, that the reverse is true and that the lives of people in large urban centres is largely affected by the conditions that prevail in the rest of the province.

Now, in winding up my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the business of farming in Huron county, seeing that it plays such a major role in generating revenue for the county and income for its inhabitants.

A total of 5,052 Huron farms were recorded in 1961, with a decline to 4,213 farms according to the 1971 Statistics Canada information. Some of these farms could conceivably be one acre in size with sales of agricultural products amounting to $50 or more annually. It has been suggested that farmers producing under $2,500 per year in gross agricultural sales are not very actively involved in the business of modern farming. So, more realistically, there exists at the present time about 3,563 farms reporting a gross income of over $2,500.

It is also significant to note that the number of farmers receiving $10,000 and over gross farm income increased from 923 in 1961 to 2,247 in 1971. In relation to other counties in Ontario, Huron has the most improved farmland and the largest inventory value of livestock and poultry. Huron is first in production of white beans, barley and silage corn; second in total cattle and market-hogs; third in forage crops and total hogs.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Looks like it has been well represented for many years.

Mr. Singer: Never heard that before.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Too bad the Minister of Agriculture and Food isn't listening.

Mr. Riddell: In the economics of the agricultural industry, while beef and pork prices have been generally favourable this year, many will remember the 1972 crop season for a long time. The very severe June 10 frost was only the beginning of a long list of unfavourable happenings during the cool and cloudy summer. Although some replanted corn made suitable silage, the necessary heat units were lacking for the optimum growth of grain, corn and other crops.

The lack of feed value in the silage and grains is definitely showing up in the performance of the livestock. Producers have had to rely more heavily on purchased protein feeds to supplement their rations. This has added to their cost tremendously and certainly justifies any increase in price that they have received for their product.

With prices at their present level, Mr. Speaker, farmers are just now beginning to enjoy a standard of living that is comparable to that of those in industry. The swine producer, for example, is netting about $8 per hog, so if he feeds 1,000 hogs a year he is making an income of approximately $8,000. The beef producer is netting about $50 per cattle beast, so if he feeds 200 cattle a year he is realizing an income of $10,000.

The fluid milk shipper is netting 60 cents per hundredweight for bottled milk, which amounts to approximately $3,000 from 40 cows producing an average of 12,000 pounds of milk per year. The industrial milk shipper, after taking all costs into consideration, is barely breaking even on his milk sales, but considering the income from the calves and surplus stock, both the fluid milk shipper and the industrial milk shipper are making an additional $4,000 to $8,000, depending on the particular feeding programme, for their young stock.

I think it is worthy of note that the figures I am using pertain to the better-than-average farmer in a year when prices have never been equalled. As a comparison, the average farm income in 1965 was $4,000 and declined to $3,400 in 1971. We, therefore, can't begrudge the farmer making a better-than-normal income this year. I would hope that this level of buoyancy in the farming industry will continue as an encouragement for the younger generation to return to the family farm.

It is also interesting to note that, even though retail food prices are up 33 per cent, per capita income is up 62 per cent since the year 1965. With personal income dollars up nearly twice as much as food prices since the mid-1960s, is it so surprising that the cost of eating is up as much as it is? The consumers are only spending one-fifth of their income on food, which is the one basic ingredient that is necessary above all else for survival. As consumers, let's be thankful that we are getting our food so cheaply and in such abundance, and let's also use our better judgement before we become too reactionary on matters pertaining to food.

For too long now the farmer has been sacrificed at the altar of his own efficiency. We need the farmers and they certainly deserve a standard of living that is equal to that of other segments of society.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on for some length of time and talk about problems of our society and inadequacies of our government to cope with such problems, but time is of the essence. I will simply summarize by reiterating that there was never anything more sure in my mind than the fact that many of our present-day problems would be virtually non-existent, if local governments were given the freedom and financial assistance to run their own affairs with as little interference by the provincial government as possible, other than in a moral and legislative capacity.

So what then, Mr. Speaker, is our job as members of the Ontario Legislature? Well, I'll sum it up in this way;

It's not our job to run the train,
The whistle we cannot blow.
It's not our job to say how far
The train is allowed to go.
It's not our job to shoot off steam,
Nor even clang the bell.
But let the damned train jump the track,
Then see who catches hell.

Thank you very much.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Speaker, in my years in this building I can't recall that chair being graced by one so—

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Fair.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Pretty.

Mr. Martel: —so witty and—

Mr. Laughren: Intelligent.

Mr. Martel: —so abounding with wisdom.

Mr. J. H. Jessiman (Fort William): And with such a beautiful tan!

Mr. Martel: I know you'll serve your tenure there well.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): That's the quietest he's been in five years.

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): Give him a few points of order to rule on.

An hon. member: He has justice and compassion.

Mr. Jessiman: He looks well rested after his holiday.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, in considering what one could discuss, after listening to the Throne Speech and what it lacks, one could have discussed at great length the necessity for a uniform building code, which the province has steadfastly refused to bring in; my colleague, the hon. member from somewhere around Niagara, is thinking of bringing that in. We don't really need it in Sudbury, with the likes of Trasco, Cambrian and now Posan and a few more. But we could have had something there indicative, and we hope that the ministry will see fit to introduce that legislation before the fall.

We might have taken heart when they came to that portion of the Throne Speech which announced yet another school for the deaf. And lo and behold, the location was the showplace of Ontario—London. One in Milton, one in Belleville and a third in London. I can recall, Mr. Speaker, advocating on many occasions that such a facility be built in northern Ontario, in view of the traumatic experience suffered by young kiddies when they're torn from home and have to travel 800, 900, 1,000 or 1,200 miles to attend such a facility.

But the government didn't see fit, and the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) argued against it when we asked that he at least put in an amount comparable to what is spent per student by the various school boards in places like Belleville, to allow the larger school boards in northern Ontario to develop a comparable programme within their school system which would not necessitate kids leaving home. That $6,000, of course, was also denied; and there was really no need for a third facility. Yet, lo and behold, in the budget we have a third one announced; and, as I say, in the showplace—London. I don't know what the attraction is in London, Mr. Speaker, but certainly it's there.

We could also have discussed roads and the lack of them in northern Ontario, but I thought the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Rhodes) and the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane), both of them Conservatives, did a rather adequate job of putting the problem in perspective.

I'm not sure that the cabinet will listen any more closely to Tory backbenchers than it has to the opposition over the years. I suspect it won't, because northern Ontario is just a place from which it draws wealth, brings it to the south and processes it. I see my friend from the Lakehead agreeing with that; despite the fact he sits on the Tory benches, he too is cognizant of that fact.

Mr. Gilbertson: I have to have someplace to sit.

Mr. Laughren: They've forgotten how to listen.

Mr. Jessiman: And maple syrup.

Mr. Martel: Well, that's going to do the province a great deal of good. With that in mind and the fact that the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes) was fighting about roads, and so on, I thought I'd discuss that portion which was left in the budget again, natural resources, and anything that might look like a programme which would satisfy the needs of Ontario and which would be related to the natural resources field—particularly the non-renewable, the mining industry. As I searched about to try to find some material to discuss on this topic, I turned to the 1971 report of the Ontario Department of Mines and Northern Affairs.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That's the latest?

Mr. Martel: No, 1972 is the latest.

Mr. Laughren: He is taking out certain information.

Mr. Martel: I just picked out certain facts which would indicate just how well the Tory government treats its friends in the mining industry. I'm going to quote a couple of sections from the 1971 report. It starts out under the heading "Mineral Production in Recent Years" and says:

Although there have been dips in a few years, the story of Ontario's mineral industry since the turn of the century is one of remarkably consistent progress and development.

I wish someone would tell the people of northern Ontario that, in view of the boom and bust economy that we experience in Sudbury constantly every three years when it comes time to negotiate contracts and Inco lays off a couple of thousand men. Despite the number of communities which lie dormant and the number of ghost towns which exist, we've got these spook writers or these ghost writers for the Department of Mines writing this type of nonsense. It's indicative of the mentality which pervades that department, about which I am going to have a good deal to say in a few moments.

The next statement in the report is a great statement. It says:

The estimated total value of metals prior to 1891, when the Ontario Bureau of Mines was established was $9 million [in rough terms]. No estimate of the output of non-metallics up to that time has been made. Between 1891 and 1899, the total mineral output was $53 million.

Mr. Gilbertson: The member is always trying to get into their pocketbooks, isn't he?

Mr. Martel: The member is so right.

Mr. Laughren: Then let them get their hands out of ours.

Mr. Martel: And I just want the member for Algoma to listen for the next couple of minutes to see what we've got out of that industry.

Mr. Laughren: He's forgotten how to listen, too.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): His ears are filled with maple syrup.

Mr. Martel: To continue with the report:

The overall [production of mineral resources in the period 1900 to the present] is $25,287,989,000.

If you add the last two years, where in fact there was another $3 billion worth of production, we're talking almost totally of $30 billion of mineral production. If you turn to another part of the book, in the chapter, "Mines Produce Government Revenue," it says:

This department has always been a revenue-producing arm of the government. [Well, let's see.] From the fiscal year 1919-1920—

Mr. Laughren: The member for Fort William should leave too. They are embarrassing statistics for the government.

Mr. Martel: To continue:

—to 1969-1970, the total ordinary revenue derived by the department amounted to $300 million.

On a production of almost $30 billion, our share in provincial revenues was 300 million.

Mr. Laughren: Include dividends of $2 billion.

Mr. Martel: One per cent—1.19 per cent to be precise—was Ontario's share of the largess.

Mr. Laughren: Shame! How can there be a Tory member from the north?

Mr. Martel: The department likes these statistics, Mr. Speaker. We don't hear from the member for Algoma any more because he—

Mr. Laughren: He's very embarrassed.

Mr. Gilbertson: There wouldn't be any Sudbury if it wasn't for Inco. The member wouldn't have that nice home and all that.

Mr. Martel: I would suspect that if it wasn't Inco it would be someone else. I don't happen to live in Sudbury.

Mr. Haggerty: And three cars.

Mr. Martel: We got 1.19 per cent on $30 billion of production, hardly anything with which one would finance a province and hardly anything which would assist the budgets with which this government tries to keep the tax situation in hand.

What we notice from those statements I have read is the attitude which pervades that department and the Tory government in particular. Our generosity to the mining industry is obvious. The attitude of the Tory government is obvious and the attitude of those who comprise the mining section of the Ministry of Natural Resources is, in my estimation, company oriented. In no way are the needs of the province considered, and I will have a good deal more to say about that in just a little while, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: We'll be here until 2 o'clock.

Mr. Martel: That's right. We had a boom year. In 1967 the then Department of Mines put out a booklet, its annual report. Members will notice that great rocket on it, "Through the billion-dollar barrier." That's magnificent—$1 billion—in fact, that year we reached $1,192 million. That's a magnificent total, isn't it, of mineral production? Ontario's share in tax from the mining industry that year was $10,640,000 or 0.89 of one per cent.

Mr. Laughren: The Americans got more than we did.

Mr. Martel: We did not get one per cent return on $1 billion of production. Maybe the member for Algoma would like to comment on that?

Mr. Laughren: Vietnam got more than that.

Mr. Martel: Less than one per cent, and that was a boom year! The increase in production was only 24 per cent from the previous year when it was only $964,000. That's why we have the cover on this showing the cracking of the $1 billion mark, as though it meant something to the people of Ontario. All it meant was something for the mining industry in Ontario; our share was $10 million. How does a government finance a province on that sort of malarkey?

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): They financed the Conservative Party on that.

Mr. Gilbertson: There are 90,000 people employed in the industry.

Mr. Germa: How much did the Tories get out of that?

Mr. Martel: Well, 1968 was another banner year. In fact, we cracked the $1 billion mark.

Mr. Gilbertson: International Nickel feeds them all. They have nice new cars; they are living off the fat of the land.

Mr. Martel: Does the member want the floor? If he wants the floor, I will yield for a few moments.

Mr. Gilbertson: No, I am finished now.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): We challenge the member to stand in a straight line.

Mr. Martel: If he wants, I'll yield and he can speak. Let him tell us how well we have done.

Mr. Speaker, we did much better in 1968. The value of mineral production was only $1,340 million and that year we got something like $16 million in taxes. It was a big year for Ontario, 1.2 per cent. If one considers the federal share in corporation tax—our 12 points back—we got $14 million from them. In total that year, Ontario derived from $1,340 million of mineral production some $30 million or 2.26 per cent of the value of mineral production.

Mr. Germa: A sellout.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): A rip-off.

Mr. Martel: It is interesting that the job opportunities that year went down by 41! We have all of this production and there are no job opportunities. Well, 1969 was a good year, too.

Mr. Laughren: That was the year they appointed the Women's Bureau, wasn't it?

Mr. Martel: That's right, so they could get people to work underground! About the only ministry one would get women in would be the Ministry of Natural Resources. They would put them underground!

Mr. Laughren: That was a token year for the Tories.

Mr. Martel: It was a poor year that year, only $1,214,000,000 and our share was $19 million or 1.61 per cent.

Mr. Laughren: But no prosecutions.

Mr. Martel: Then 1970 was a real banner year. We got it all the way up to $1.6 billion and our share was $23 million or 1.46 per cent of the value of mineral production.

Mr. Deans: Isn't the member for Algoma ashamed?

Mr. Gilbertson: It's going up all the time.

Mr. Deans: Isn't he ashamed?

Mr. Martel: We are coming up? Well, I am going to disillusion the member. He keeps putting his foot in it. Now 1972 was a banner year—

Mr. MacDonald: He's got it in the sugar toffee again.

Mr. Martel: In 1972, Mr. Speaker, production was $1,521,415,000; our share was $16 million. That's down from $23 million in 1970 and $25 million in 1971. It represented 1.05 per cent.

Mr. Germa: Shame!

Mr. Martel: It was 1.05 per cent and if we include the federal tax, it measures in the area of 2 to 2.2 per cent. That is what we get back in this province on over $1 billion of mining revenue. The Tories sit there and I hear Treasurer after Treasurer—and we go through them every three or four months—crying the blues that they have no room to move in the tax field. Yet, here is an area that is wide open; where it is estimated that this industry does not pay 13 per cent tax on profit total.

But in no way will this government move in on its friends. It will sit back. It will raise taxes in a variety of fashions, as it has done in the past year-and-a-half, to the ordinary taxpayer—I am going to come to the Minister of Mines' statement in a moment—but not to the mining industry.

But the job opportunities—I want to show you that as well. In 1967 there were 50,700 job opportunities. In 1972 there were 53,000. So that in fact we have gone up almost 2,200 jobs, or about five per cent, in the mining industry and production has increased by 70 per cent. Tremendous job opportunities, aren't there?

What are we getting from these companies? Absolutely nothing, because we have the expertise ourselves to develop those mines. We don't get jobs. We don't get taxes. What do we get outside of some campaign funds? I would like someone over there to tell me. Our share of the resources from that industry is negligible. And so is the return in jobs, as is evident from the last six years—an increase in production of 70 per cent, and job opportunities by 5½ or 6.

Mr. Germa: And the job isn't even worthwhile keeping.

Mr. Martel: My colleague from Sudbury well knows, having spent 36 years at "father" Inco—or "mother" Inco—whichever term you would like to use.

Mr. Germa: The worst job I had in all my life.

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): What about this one?

Mr. Bounsall: Even worse than this?

Mr. Martel: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can see that what we derive from that industry doesn't even support the provincial budget to any degree. I'm going to talk about that in a moment.

Mr. Laughren: It hardly supports the bag man.

Mr. Martel: I can recall two years ago bringing some of these figures to the ministry estimates. That ministry, as I say, is sick, and so are the people in it. We will have a good deal to say about them. But I got into an exchange with the mining assessor; he is the man who knows all about the money—one Brady Lee. It becomes obvious when you listen to Brady Lee just where his sympathies are—and they are not with the province. We were talking about money. I just quoted the 1968 figures and Brady Lee jumped into the fray. He said the municipalities receive a lot of money from the industrial minerals that does not come to the government.

I put the question to Brady Lee. I said: "In 1968?" He said: "In every year." And I said: "What kind?" He said: "They assess them on the value of the properties." My comment then was: "When did they start paying mining municipal assessments?"

They do not pay mining municipal assessments because these people are not assessed as mines under the Mining Tax Act, therefore the municipality is allowed to tax them. And I said to Brady Lee: "How much? Give us the figure of how much we got in 1968?" And his reply: "I do not know what each municipality got. I have not the foggiest notion." Then I said: "Give us an example."

And he said: "I do not even have an example."

But you will recall his opening statement was that the municipalities receive a lot of money. And here is the mining assessor who, when you pin him down and you ask him to tell how much the municipalities received, doesn't know; and he is not interested. And his chore of accruing this wealth—the type of wealth I have indicated in the opening remarks; and the percentages I have shown—was indicative to me that Brady Lee is from the dark ages.

Now, suppose we get a provincial share that is similar to Manitoba—and Manitoba gets 2.26 per cent from the mining industry. This came out in the report by Mr. Eric Kierans, the former minister, and there was an editorial column in the Toronto Star recently and it made the following point:

Assuming the return in Ontario is roughly the same—a reasonable assumption given the similar pattern of fees and taxes—Ontario last year got back $28.7 million from the production of metal mineral valued at $1.25 billion.

In other words, about two per cent. That includes federal corporations tax; that includes provincial tax at all levels to the province, whether they be municipal or direct provincial tax against the mining industry. About 2.2 per cent. That has to change. But I'm convinced that it won't change with the people involved in that department and even more so with the minister who heads up the department.

In a speech at the Royal York on March 14, the hon. Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) made the following statement with respect to taxing these industries—and he's speaking, of course to a rather notorious group, the Prospectors and Developers Association:

Nor can we in Ontario assume, as some have suggested, that we can continue to load the mining industry with taxes and other basic costs of refining ores in Ontario.

We cannot load the mining industry with taxes! What kind of nonsense is being written by his ghost writers over there to suggest that an increase on the 2.2 per cent that they pay would be loading that industry with tax? Is that entire department sick?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Martel: Is that entire government sick, to tolerate that kind of nonsense? A 2.2

per cent return, and the minister gets up and says: "We can't tax them any more or load them down any more." There is something wrong in the state of Denmark.

The minister goes on and he says:

The time has come when we all must look for new ways to reduce our costs, develop and improve technology to assist in the development and processing of ore, and develop new markets.

I suggest to you that it might be time we started to take a look at finding a way of extracting a little more of the largess, which is our just right, because those natural resources belong to the people of Ontario, not to the mining companies. Two per cent, and the minister says we can't extract any more from them. If I were the ministers opposite I'd dissociate myself from that individual and that whole department. In fact I think the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Carton) should come and sit over here.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Transportation is obviously contemplating that.

Mr. Lewis: Don't push it, don't push it. The government can get a lot more from the resource industry than it is getting, and it's refusing.

Mr. Martel: It is getting none. The minister goes on: "In addition to those who urge us to nationalize our industry"—and of course the ghost writers in that department are making reference to what Kierans suggested to the people in Manitoba—

Mr. MacDonald: You can't nationalize what you own.

Mr. Martel: —but how can you nationalize something you already own? We own the natural resources. We just give them the right to utilize them—and I say "give them the right," we don't even charge them. In fact if things get any worse we will be paying them.

Mr. Lewis: We do for a portion.

Mr. Martel: In fact we do. In fact we do in social costs. I am going to come to that in a moment. In fact I am going to come to it right now. It just irritates me so.

In 1968 we collected $16 million as the provincial share on a production of minerals worth $1,340. We got roughly $16.5 million, and if you add all the other little fringe benefits we got $18 million total. The budget for that year, Mr. Speaker, was $2,296 million. Do you know what our return represented?

If we don't include the federal government's $14 million that we got back, and Ontario's total take from the mining industry, and we applied it to the budget, do you know what part of the Ontario budget that financed? Just 0.7 per cent! We don't even get enough out of the mining industry to cover one per cent of the budget and we go around blowing our horn about this province and its abundance of natural resources. But the people aren't getting any of it. When are the Tories going to wake up to that?

Mr. Germa: The jobs aren't even there.

Mr. Martel: Less than one per cent of the financing of our budget comes from that industry that we hear so much bragging about. And if we include the federal share, it comes to 1.4 per cent. If we just look at the provincial tax it's 0.7 per cent—or seven-tenths of one per cent to put it another way—of the total cost of running the province. If we include the federal government's share, it's 1.4 per cent. That's a magnificent amount on which to build an industrial base, isn't it—the most of which is taken out of the country anyway and processed somewhere else into the finished commodity, and nothing changes.

Mr. Germa: And it's non-renewable.

Mr. Martel: That's very important. My colleague from Sudbury says it's non-renewable.

Mr. Germa: It's obvious.

Mr. Martel: Well, we had some better years. As the budget got bigger our share didn't get any bigger—in fact, it lessened. In 1971 we got $25 million from the mining industry and the budget was $3,848 million, and I'll forget the remainder.

Mr. Gilbertson: The member wouldn't want them to move out, would he?

Mr. Martel: I wouldn't mind. I absolutely wouldn't mind if they moved out tomorrow.

An hon. member: What would the member do?

Mr. Deans: Let them go.

Mr. Gilbertson: Then the member would have to go with them.

Mr. Martel: Because in fact in that year, Mr. Speaker, the contribution from mining tax in financing this province was 0.79 per cent—four-fifths of one per cent to finance the Province of Ontario. Rather sick, isn't it, when one hears various cabinet ministers going around this province gloating about the great wealth we get from the mining industry. We don't get enough year after year to finance one per cent of the budget! We don't get the jobs because it's capital intensive. If you look at Sudbury, production has gone up over 100 per cent in the last 10 years—

Mr. Laughren: OHIP premiums pay for it.

Mr. Martel: —but the jobs are fewer.

Mr. Gilbertson: Look at all the member's friends who go to Florida in the winter.

Mr. Germa: The friends of the member for Algoma in the maple syrup business.

Mr. Martel: My friends don't go. They can't afford to go.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Sudbury East's friends to Florida?

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): It was the Minister of Education who went to Florida.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, 1972 was even a better year. In 1972, and it's on the record and it's in the public accounts, the budget is $5,200 million, or was, and on the value of mineral production of $1,521 million we got, in Ontario, $16 million. And on a budget of $5,223 million that represents one-third of one per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: It's getting worse!

An hon. member: What a ripoff!

Mr. Martel: One-third of one per cent! I want to be honest. I'm excluding federal tax because I can't get my hands on it.

Mr. Lewis: That would bring it up to half of one per cent.

Mr. Martel: But the federal tax is even lower than our provincial returns. One-third of one per cent of the budget of the province we finance with our returns from the mining industry. It's sick.

An hon. member: We're financing the Department of the Attorney General.

Mr. Martel: It's absolutely sick.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Martel: It's incomprehensible that we can give away non-renewable natural resources where the wealth accrues to people who aren't resident in Canada, or Ontario, and where the natural resources are taken out and processed somewhere else. What do we get?

Mr. Gilbertson: The member gets the biggest nickel in the world.

An hon. member: We get shafted with it!

Mr. Gilbertson: They have been shafted before.

Mr. Martel: And does the member know what I'd like to do with that big nickel? Believe me, if it fits—

An hon. member: Don't press the question!

Mr. Martel: —I'd shove it.

Mr. Deans: The jokes aren't even worthwhile taking.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Well, after the last boner Falconbridge pulled on the $60 million deal, they'll need someone new, because I understand they're going to fire everyone in sight. They blew $60 million because they wouldn't even listen to the engineers.

So we see in 1972 a real banner year, one-third of one per cent of the budget financed out of our natural resources.

Mr. Speaker, it's a sick government. It's a very sick government. So we get two per cent roughly and things won't change.

An hon. member: Ripoff.

Mr. Gilbertson: The member is not making it very good for Sudbury, talking like that.

Mr. Martel: Well, Mr. Speaker, if one were to look at what we get from the federal tax—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: I'm not talking about Sudbury. I'm just glad the member for Algoma reminded me of that. I want to talk about what we got in Sudbury in tax in 1971.

Mr. Gilbertson: I heard it was $16 million—

Mr. Martel: Yes. Well, we'll find out.

An hon. member: Plus $1 million in debts.

Mr. Martel: We'll find out what we got from Inco in tax in 1971, okay?

Mr. Laughren: No ETV either.

An hon. member: And no maple syrup.

Mr. Martel: There is great wealth in our natural resources, but to appreciate it fully one has to leave the town and the mines and head back to the executive suite. Those softly lit, carpeted rooms present quite another picture. There the story is told of how in 1971 Inco had net earnings of some $210 million and a clear profit of $94,200,000. But when it came time to pay income tax, the federal government—I want to include the Liberals because they are part of this bag—

Mr. Laughren: Same gang.

Mr. Martel: Same gang.

Mr. Laughren: They are all in the same bed.

An hon. member: You can't tell the difference.

Mr. Martel: The federal government declined and they said, "Don't pay us." They were saying in Ottawa, "We'll pay you." On a clear profit of $94,200,000, not a single cent was collected in income tax, while the government in 1971 gave Inco a tax credit of $2,800,000.

As I said a little earlier, before long we'll be paying them to take it out of the ground—and in fact that's what we did in 1971. We paid them. By comparison, of course, the non-corporate citizens of Sudbury—members will recall that their average income was $7,500 that year per worker—paid income tax at the rate of 25 per cent of taxable income. Nothing for the industry that made $94 million; 25 per cent on the taxable income for the peasants. That's what the member for Algoma wants to hear about, isn't it? Keep them down on the farm.

Mr. MacDonald: Or in the sugar grove.

Mr. Deans: They can't even afford to buy the member's maple sugar.

Mr. Laughren: What's good enough for the member for Algoma is good enough for everybody.

Mr. Germa: And the job isn't even any good.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, in social terms, there are other people who now are starting to realize that the social costs aren't met. It almost makes one question whether in fact we should be overly concerned about the exploitation of the natural resources, because all they are doing is serving some master off in some board room in some other country. They are not serving the needs of the people of Ontario.

An hon. member: Right on.

Mr. Martel: I want to quote from a book written by Prof. Eric Kierans who was once a Liberal cabinet minister but who has seen the light, unlike many of his colleagues who haven't, because we will talk about the new tax structure federally in a few moments.

Mr. Haggerty: They are coming around again.

Mr. Martel: Oh, they are coming around, yes. If the member stays around we'll find out how far they have come around. They've made it even bigger and better for the mining companies and I hope the member stays around to hear about it. In fact, I invite him.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): The member has said it all before.

Mr. Martel: Well, I can't recall having given this one before.

Mr. Good: Some day you'll get out of the Tory bed.

Mr. Martel: Some day you might get out of the Tory bed or the Liberal bed and worry about providence.

Mr. Haggerty: This is Eric Kierans' speech, isn't it?

Mr. Martel: Well, what does Kierans say about this?

An hon. member: Kierans is a good Liberal.

Mr. Martel: I'm not sure; the Liberals used to consider him a good Liberal but they are turning on him. They are dissociating themselves from him.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): He is an enlightened Liberal.

Mr. Martel: Yes. Well, it wouldn't be hard to be enlightened when you compare it to that motley group.

Now what does Kierans say? He says:

Even where the province receives some income in the form of royalties or income tax received, this revenue will certainly not be sufficient to finance the costs of highways, schools, hospitals, and other services that are required to make a new community livable. Here the mining development will be subsidized by the taxpayer at large.

Of course, that is what is happening in Ontario. When we get one-third of one per cent of the budget from the mining industry, in fact the citizens are subsidizing the industry, because nothing—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: —we accrue is sufficient to meet the social costs.

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. Martel: How does the government meet social costs? Even for northern Ontario, if the government ploughed the full $16 million that we get—

Mr. Laughren: It would even build a highway.

An hon. member: It wouldn't pay for the cost of the carton.

Mr. Deans: But they can blow $50 million.

An hon. member: It wouldn't build an overpass.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Didn't the member build a $60,000 home?

Mr. Martel: No, not quite; it's going down. The last time I heard, it was $80,000.

Mr. Singer: Ah, good, good!

Mr. Martel: Now here it's $60,000—in Happy Valley.

The social costs will exceed the returns; and the resource development, far from yielding a net income to the province, becomes a burden on the whole community; I suggest to you that is exactly what's happening, based on our tax returns in the province.

And to go on is absolutely ridiculous. One would wonder why, though, the various governments have been so generous to these poor companies. For example, if one examines how much they earned in 1969, nearly half a billion dollars of the profits of metal mining companies and nearly $400 million of the profits of oil and gas producers were untouched by the federal income tax in 1969; which of course accounts for why the province receives so little from Ottawa. Ottawa isn't taxing them. But that surely gives the province the leverage to increase the provincial share. If Ottawa isn't going to tax them, why can't the province?

Mr. MacDonald: That's the tax room the provincial government has been wanting them to give Ontario.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I've heard this Treasurer (Mr. White), and his three or four predecessors in the last two or three years, scream they had no tax room. Well, the government has got all kinds of tax room. When the federal government cannot look at hundreds of millions of dollars of profit, not tax them at all, surely the province could move in and extract a fairer return. But that won't happen under this government.

As I read to the members, the minister responsible for mining says: "Nor can we in Ontario assume, as some have suggested, that we continue to load the mining industry with taxes." Well, certainly we are not going to move into that field, because the minister and his ministry feel they are overburdened; $16 million worth last year—and that's a great extraction from them, isn't it?

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to continue with this discussion on what we derive, to try to put it in the proper perspective; to destroy some of the arguments my friend from Algoma-Manitoulin makes, because his seating mate the other night used the same arguments, and I—

Mr. Gilbertson: It's not Manitoulin. It is just Algoma.

Mr. Martel: —was saving it for tonight. I am going to relish it as we hear the same arguments over and over again that we're going to drive out exploration and they are not going to develop; and they quake and they quiver in their boots. In fact, the mining companies just have to—

Interjection by hon. member.

Mr. Martel: —cough, and someone over there in that ministry sneezes; they've got a cold; they're so frightened, so petrified.

Mr. Gilbertson: The member is going to kill the goose.

Mr. Martel: Well, we're going to come to killing the golden goose. In fact, that is the term Eric Kierans uses. The same argument the member for Algoma is now trying to use is pretty well documented by what's happening in Manitoba. Based on the fact that the taxes and tax structure in Manitoba and Ontario are basically the same, then we can assume that the problems confronting Ontario are basically the same and so are the returns, which we have already documented.

I want to suggest that the first thing this department could do, aside from taxing, would be to convene a conference of all the resource ministers of this country to stop allowing the mining companies to play off one province against the other. This was obvious when Falconbridge went to Quebec two years ago, and it was able to extract from the Quebec people 20 tax-free years, reduced hydro power, reduced rail—

An hon. member: Free land.

Mr. Martel: Free land!

Mr. Laughren: What kind of government is that?

An hon. member: That's a Liberal government.

Mr. Laughren: Must be a Liberal government

Mr. Martel: Well, the interesting thing is that they played Quebec off against Ontario and extracted additional concessions for the mining industry, which of course is only interested in one thing—not the people, but the maximization of profit. They were able to extract all of those concessions over and above the seven they had already received via the generosity of the federal government in Ottawa.

Mr. Laughren: Would my friend repeat his entire remarks for the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot), please. He doesn't understand.

Mr. Martel: It would be over his head.

Mr. Deans: One has to speak slowly in single-syllable words.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): He'd have to spell it out.

Mr. Germa: He is responsible. Look at him.

Mr. Deans: He is not responsible. Don't believe it.

Mr. Laughren: We're just trying to get his name into Hansard for once.

Mr. Martel: Well, in such a conference of ministers to prevent the likes of Falconbridge or Inco manipulating the various provinces as they jockey to try to get a few more jobs, like the increase in 1941, this provincial government should take the lead in such a conference. Because this should be the key—and I am quoting from Kierans: "A better resource policy would attempt to provide and maintain the same number of jobs while retaining all or a greater portion of the disappearing billions". That's something Ontario might look at. And as I go along I want to indicate some of the interesting figures that come to light.

It is sufficient here to emphasize the encouragement given to the metal mining industry by the federal government through its tax legislation. Profits before taxes for the years 1965 to 1970, as recorded in the books of the corporations themselves, amounted to $3,165 million. Through preferential tax legislation, they were permitted to report $591 million only as subject to corporation income tax. More than $2.5 billion in profits escaped provincial and federal taxation.

Mr. Gilbertson: That's good for the shareholders.

Mr. Martel: The shareholders? Even the shareholders don't get it. That's the stupidity of it all.

Mr. Gilbertson: Oh yes they do!

Mr. Martel: We'll come to that too. The shareholders aren't getting it; it's being kept in retained earnings, which aren't even passed on to the shareholders.

Mr. Laughren: Less than five per cent of the population of Canada are shareholders.

Mr. Martel: The member for Algoma keeps putting his foot in it; he's helping me. I need his guidance; just keep me right on track so that I can take the arguments apart one by one. Keep coaching, okay?

Mr. Gilbertson: All right. I'll quit if the hon. member quits.

Mr. Martel: Oh, I'm not going to quit yet.

Mr. Laughren: Just the member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Deans: Don't quit. He needs a straight man.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on $2.5 billion there was no corporation tax and no provincial tax! My good God, what are we doing? Is there any conscience over there at all?

Mr. Deans: Just from the Deputy Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Martel: Well, I want to come to what my friend from Algoma talks about, the shareholders and the fear that they won't produce. There is an illusion in Canada, you know—and, of course, we know who perpetrates that illusion: the industry itself—the public image projected by the mining sector is that of a high-risk industry that demands large amounts of capital and where probabilities of loss greatly outweigh those of gain. That is absolute nonsense. The greatest profits aren't in smelting or in refining, but in mining.

They have been able to cajole, kick, scream and pull that government over there into believing that it's such a high-risk industry they won't invest. But in fact prospecting activity and the number of claims staked went down last year, despite the generosity of the Tory government in providing another $1 million, I believe, to the industry to go out and do some exploration. The amount of exploration diminished.

The government can't even pay them. And do you want to know why? They have already got it tapped; they know where it is—they sit on it. That's part of the problem which we will come to in a few moments. They extracted.

It is not a high-risk industry. In fact if one looks at it carefully one finds out that the biggest profits are from mining. They are double anything else. We have listened to that corrupt department—and I use the term "corrupt" not in the sense of theft but in thinking. I am going to document that department in a few minutes and who is in there. I hope the ministers stay around to find out who is in that department and where they came from.

Mr. Laughren: The parliamentary secretary has just arrived.

Mr. Martel: We have talked about the high-risk industry. In 1965 there were 824 mining companies and it is such a high-risk industry that by 1970 there were only 218 left, most of them gobbled up by the way—and I want to quote this very precisely—by 36 firms. Here is what these 36 firms control. This is simply traffic on paper and is unrelated to the mainstream of the industry, but 36 firms in 1969 controlled 87 per cent of the assets—$6.1 billion; 86 per cent of the equities—$4 billion; 84 per cent of the sales—$2.6 billion; and 86 per cent of the profits—$658 million. That was 36 companies in that high-risk industry.

I am glad the member for Sault Ste. Marie joined us because I am just coming to him in a moment. I am delighted that he has seen fit to join us.

Mr. J. R. Rhodes (Sault Ste. Marie): I wouldn't have missed the member for the world.

Mr. Martel: I am glad, I want to put him straight, too. That is the risk area. In fact, it is so risky that all of the large companies are now taking control of the smaller ones and the federal government has, in fact, with its recent tax legislation provided the tools to finish the job. Let's take a look at it.

Mr. Laughren: Are they still building roads to resources?

Mr. Martel: Yes. The new federal tax policy is an even greater assist. There are three major policies and these destroy some of the arguments advanced by my friend from Sault Ste. Marie the other night, and his colleague from Algoma-Manitoulin earlier this evening as he chirped in.

Mr. Gilbertson: Forget about Manitoulin.

Mr. Martel: There he goes again.

Mr. Gilbertson: The member for Manitoulin isn't here.

Mr. Martel: Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr. Gilbertson: Why doesn't the member just say Algoma?

Mr. Martel: Well, Algoma. It is somewhere up in the boondocks.

Mr. Rhodes: Put that on the record. The boondocks, eh?

Mr. Gilbertson: They won't like the member for Sudbury East up there now.

Mr. Martel: The representation from there isn't too strong, anyway, and not very knowledgeable.

Let's talk about what the federal government has done in terms of assisting those poor, underprivileged, bedraggled, poverty-stricken companies—

Mr. Rhodes: From the boondocks.

Mr. Martel: From the boondocks, okay. The member for Sault Ste. Marie told me the other night that they wouldn't get involved in exploration and development; it was so high and where was that money going to come from? In 1970, the mining companies in Canada got back from the federal government or were allowed to write off $111 million in development and exploration. Not bad for one year. That is where the money comes from! The taxpayers subsidize the development and the exploration. That is who is paying for it.

In 1969, it was a poor year; they only got $128 million in writeoffs; it was a rough year. That is part of it and the new federal tax makes it even better.

The federal government will now permit corporations to deduct in full from their income the interest on money borrowed to buy the shares of other corporations. Thus the 36 corporations will be able to borrow from banks and other investors the funds needed to buy out any of the 218 mining firms, or each other, and to charge such interest against their profits and so reduce their taxable income on existing operations. Well, that is that.

Mr. Gilbertson: David Lewis won't go along with that.

Mr. Martel: No, he won't go along with that; no way.

Clearly the large firms are placed in an even more advantageous position.

I will tell the members who will go along with that for one year—the banana man. When the Canadian Manufacturers Association sent him the big telegram and said, "Now look, Bob, you are not going to vote against that," it didn't take long for old Bob to squirm around and say, "We'll vote for it, for only one year though."

Mr. Cassidy: The Tories here take instructions from the CMA, too.

Mr. Martel: That's the foot in the door. One year, two years, three years; but its there, and old Bob found a way. He was worried about the campaign funds, of course.

Mr. MacDonald: That's what you call slipping on the banana.

Mr. Martel: The Canadian Manufacturers Association wouldn't have paid for the next campaign. And you know, if Bob's got any illusions of making it he's going to have to have some greenbacks, so he altered his position quite noticeably in public.

Well that was the one way. What else did the federal government do?

Mr. Gilbertson: Put David on our side and we'll push him out.

Mr. Martel: The cost of acquiring mineral rights will not be treated any longer as a capital outlay, as an investment by the corporate buyer, but will be considered as additional exploration and development. So here is more consideration for exploration and development cost, all fully deductible against existing income.

Mr. Rhodes: Is that the gospel according to Kierans?

Mr. Martel: Thus acquisitions and take-overs can be expected to be increased and concentration strengthened even further.

Clearly, the 36 resource-rich firms will be able to derive the maximum benefits from the new legislation. So in fact you write off more even when you take over someone who's already operating. That's considered a new development and you get another tax free holiday.

Mr. Germa: That's a ripoff!

Mr. Martel: That's a comfortable position to be in, isn't it? These starving companies!

Well what's the third one? "For every $3 spent on exploration and development the federal government will permit mining corporations to deduct $4 from their income." Now that's not a bad return either. Not a bad way of financing it.

In other words, you know who's financing exploration and development—the people! Through the federal tax field and through the system set up by this government last year to make a return of—what is it, one third of the cost up to $100,000? Something like that.

In fact, we're financing them to go out and explore. Why don't we do it ourselves? That would be too revolutionary, wouldn't it, for the Tory party? Too revolutionary.

So they not only get it from the federal government, they get it from the provincial government, and we end up with, in 1972 as stated earlier, one-third of one per cent of our budget financed from our natural resource industry—non-renewable!

What a great return. What a great return. No wonder there are no roads from Sudbury to Sault Ste. Marie. There's no money from the industry to build those roads.

Mr. Gilbertson: And the member's federal leader is going right along with it.

Mr. Martel: Well, that voice in the wilderness!

Mr. Rhodes: And the boondocks!

Mr. Martel: And the boondocks!

An hon. member: And the sugar shack!

An hon. member: And the big bridge!

Mr. Laughren: You said it!

Mr. Martel: Well Mr. Speaker, the profits are in mining. It's completely documented in Kierans. If you want I'll take the—well, I'll take the trouble; yes I will.

Mr. Germa: Read the whole thing!

Mr. Martel: I'm just going to quote the profit on the mining section.

Mr. Laughren: The hon. member for Timiskaming would like to hear it.

Mr. Martel: Just on the mining section, just one short statement.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Corporate ripoff in Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Rhodes: Written by a Liberal.

Mr. Martel: The net profit on income for the 177 mining companies amounted to 33 per cent; for the nine integrated corporations it was 27 per cent, and for 181 companies in the smelting and refining sector 11 per cent.

So that in fact the mining industry is higher by six per cent than the complete complex; and the smelting industry itself is some 22 per cent less than mining. The profits are in mining, and the mining industry has convinced the minister's department that in fact there are no profits; that it's a high-risk area, and that if we infringe, in fact, they'll back off and they won't explore. They continue to threaten.

Mr. Cassidy: They just want to be sucked in by the government.

Mr. Martel: I'm going to use three quotes in a moment, from such a noted gentleman as Henry S. Wingate, as they apply the leverage and tell the members what they're going to do if the government dares tax them a few cents more. But before doing that I want to turn to this department, a department that as far as I'm concerned in the six years I've been here, is the most immoral and corrupt-in-mentality department I have ever seen.

In fact I want to know if Charlie Hews still writes the mining reports—Charlie Hews, the industrial man from Inco who used to write the reports for the Minister of Mines. I'm just wondering if he still writes those reports for the Ministry of Natural Resources in the mining section.

We happen to have caught him doing it. It was very embarrassing to the Minister of Mines. But can you imagine? And that's the mentality that prevails, that they would accept reports from company officials and try to pass them off to the members as though they were the result of investigations by the investigating team of the Department of Mines.

Mr. Laughren: Their annual report is written by the company.

Mr. Martel: And you wonder. Well, I put a question to the minister about a year ago. I wrote the minister and I said, "Would you tell me the composition of your department, and those people in it, and their work record, their background?" And old Leo the Lion refused. So I put it on the order paper. And I named certain people. Let's just take a look at where they come from, and you'll wonder why some of the things occur which I am going to briefly outline in a few moments.

You have the Assistant Deputy Minister, A. J. Herridge. He had no previous employment with a mining company. G. A. Jewett, vice-president and general manager of Dressers; Southwest Potash Corp. project manager Canada; Rio Tinto; Rio Algom. That's where that gentleman came from. D. P. Douglass—he had no experience. J. R. McGinn—he worked previously for International Nickel—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, well, that would bring the balance of perspective to the party.

Mr. Martel: —Dome Mines and Stover Gold Mines. H. F. R. Davis—he worked for Noranda and—

Mr. Laughren: It is incestuous—the whole government is.

Mr. Renwick: But it certainly balanced the International Nickel perspective.

Mr. Martel: —Waite Amulet. M. S. Altan—well this is a strange one—he didn't work for a mining company. It's hard to find one who didn't work for some mining company, in fact, when one looks at that department. In fact, I am told that Mr. McGinn travels every day from his home in Oakville with, is it Mr. McIntyre from Inco? Yes, McIntyre. He commutes daily with one of the chief officers of International Nickel.

Now that's where you get that balance when you go to the minister and talk about a condition not being safe, and you are always told that that's not true. It's quite obvious. You know, Mr. McGinn travels daily with the executive officer of International Nickel I am told.

Mr. Lewis: You've got to be careful about that. The member for Scarborough East (Mrs. Birch) asked me to travel daily with her from Scarborough to the Legislature but I wouldn't do it. I knew that you can't handle it.

Mr. Rhodes: No accounting for taste.

Mr. Martel: Well, let's go on with some more. T. J. Baker, he's with the department too, and he worked for Sutherland-Shultz Electrical Co. and International Nickel. And C. M. Barrett, of that department—

Mr. Renwick: Does the minister want to put it on the record that it is not true?

Mr. Martel: —Eldorado and Wright-Hargreaves. You know, I can't find anybody here who worked for the union. Not one. But let's continue. H. J. Bone—he worked with Brunswick Mining and Smelting, and Canadian Westinghouse.

Mr. Lewis: Oh well.

Mr. Martel: M. J. Caron—district mining engineer—previous employer, International Nickel.

Mr. Rhodes: Does the member want a milkman to do that?

Mr. Martel: A milkman would probably do a better job. He would go in with his eyes open.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What has he got against milkmen?

Mr. Martel: In fact he might get beyond the pithead.

Mr. Foulds: Let's have it on the record that the member for Sault Ste. Marie dislikes milkmen.

Mr. Lewis: You know the member for Ontario is embarrassed by this. All those people from Ontario riding are going to vote NDP next time.

Mr. M. B. Dymond (Ontario): They are too wise—too wise.

Mr. Martel: Now let's see. Well, I'm using the government's own documentation from its material. What does the member want?

Mr. Dymond: The devil can cite scripture.

Mr. Martel: Oh, now don't give us that nonsense.

Well, let's go down just a few more here to make it interesting. Hoffman—Coldstream Mines and Quemont Mining; Koivu—Noranda Mines; Lazurko—Steep Rock Mines; Lockhart—International Nickel. You know, they sure get in, don't they?

Mr. Renwick: Right on.

Mr. Martel: In fact I would suspect about a third of that department is International Nickel.

Mr. Cassidy: They're insecure. That's why they need so many people there.

Mr. MacDonald: I think the ministry is the outdoor relief department for the mining industry.

Mr. Martel: Well, let's see who else. May—he worked for Guest, Kean and Baldwin. Murray—

Mr. MacDonald: Senatorial appointments.

Mr. Martel: —McKenzie Red Lake, Central Patricia, Gold Eagle, all mining companies. Hurst—Omega and Kerr Addison. E. W. Isaac—he worked for Cadillac Explorations, Noranda Potash, Allan Potash, International Minerals and Chemicals. Kirk—Fryman Gold Mines, Lake Shore Mines, Consolidated Smelters, Wright-Hargreaves. Neils—previous employer, United States Steel Corp.

Mr. Lewis: Oh boy.

Mr. Martel: J. K. Redsell—Kerr Addison and Hollinger.

Mr. Lewis: Terrible.

Mr. Martel: Senkus—Canadian Standards Assoc. and Foundation Engineering of Canada.

Mr. Renwick: All of them little fellows.

Mr. Martel: Thomas—Rio Algom, Paddy Harrison and Noranda Mines. Well, there are only a few left—J. C. Smith, the chief mining recorder; International Nickel—

An hon. member: There they are again.

Mr. Martel: Ah, they just keep showing up—

An hon. member: Don't the members oppose get the message?

Mr. Lewis: And that doesn't include the regionals.

Mr. Martel: C. P. Foster, in charge of pits and quarries in the province—previous employer, International Nickel.

Mr. Lewis: This is what you call incest.

Mr. Martel: What a corrupt ministry. No wonder you get arguments from Brady Lee when he is shooting his face off and says: "We get all kinds of money from the mining industry." And I say, "Okay, well give us an example. And he says, "Well, I have got no example—I don't know."

It is the chief mine assessor making this statement. He collects the money and he is telling us we are getting all kinds. And when you ask for an example, he says: "I don't know." Well, you wonder why that ministry is corrupt.

Falconbridge was ordered by the Minister of Mines to conduct SO<sub>2</sub> tests when the men complained of the gas—and a year and a half later it still hasn't implemented them.

Well, the mining inspectors knew that. The inspectors knew that. Why weren't they insisting on it? Why not? They are turning their heads the other way.

Then you have got Charlie Hews writing the letters for Allan Lawrence over the years. Charlie Hews works for Inco. He doesn't work for the department, but I would just like to know; and maybe the member for Sault Ste. Marie can find out for me if Charlie Hews still reports for the government and they are passed on as ministry reports.

Mr. Rhodes: I don't know Charlie Hews.

Mr. Martel: Well, ask the minister—he is well aware who Charlie Hews is. He is the fellow in charge of safety who used to write the reports which Allan Lawrence used to pass on to the members as though they were done by his investigators.

An hon. member: He wrote them last year.

Mr. Martel: I just say all of this indicates—when you look at the makeup, the composition, of this ministry, it is obvious why you get the Minister of Mines saying, "Well, we can't tax the industry any greater." It is obvious why you can't get improvements in safety. It is obvious why you never see a charge laid against mining companies. In fact, when Redzel has the courage to suggest to Allan Lawrence that a charge be laid against

Falconbridge—in fact, the way he wrote the letter was:

Would you please lay a charge. The union knows of three cases. They don't know of the fourth yet, and Martel might find out and we will be in serious trouble."

That was in Mr. Redzel's letter. It wasn't supposed to come into my possession, either. But the ministry didn't lay the charges. And you know it is so obvious to me after seeing the makeup of that ministry why it is such a sick department; why in fact it shouldn't have the right—the only department in government that I know that has the right—to collect the taxes. What in God's name is it doing there? Why isn't it over in Revenue where it belongs?

Mr. Lewis: Here's the chief prospector.

Mr. Martel: Why isn't it over in Revenue where it belongs?

Mr. Lewis: The water boy for the department.

Mr. Renwick: There he is.

Mr. Martel: No wonder they write speeches for the Minister of Mines which say: "Nor can we in Ontario assume, as some have suggested, that we can continue to load the mining industries with taxes. No more can we load the mining tax"—two per cent and we can't load them any more. I am delighted to see the minister responsible for that department here.

An hon. member: Where has he been?

Mr. Renwick: He is too embarrassed to say.

Mr. Lewis: Brady Lee called him and told him he had better get in there.

Mr. Martel: Well I want to tell you why they knuckle under over in that ministry; the threats. I am going to read three threats by the mining industry, from an illustrious gentleman like Henry S. Wingate. I have another term for it—but the usual arguments are advanced. There is one advanced by the member for Sault Ste. Marie the other night that taxes were too high and exploration and development would be curtailed if in fact we didn't give them more concessions. And the Minister of Mines was setting up a programme to give them more money when, in fact, in 1970 they wrote off $111 million for exploration, and that wasn't good enough. The minister, Leo the Lion, gave them another million last year to go out and do some exploration and even that fell on its face. He couldn't buy them then.

Mr. Lewis: Leo the what?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): The member built an $80,000 home on the strength of that!

An hon. member: A toothless tiger.

Mr. Martel: It's $80,000? A moment ago the member for Downsview told me it was $60,000!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's a brand new $80,000 home constructed by non-union workers.

Mr. Martel: Well, let's see what the mining industry says, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Leo the what, did the member call him?

Mr. Martel: I mean that lion in—what is that play?

Mr. Lewis: "The Wizard of Oz"?

Mr. Martel: "The Wizard of Oz." That is the lion I'm talking about! That ferocious beast.

Mr. Lewis: Leo the Lollipop.

Mr. Martel: What does the mining industry say every time we talk about taxing it? Mining has been described as a capital-intensive industry and, interestingly enough, the one which perpetuates the myth the most is the mining industry. "In proportion to invested capital the direct employment opportunities offered by the industry are less than those available in manufacturing and service industries." They went to a Hedlin-Menzies report to get that sort of nonsense. Here is what came out of the Hedlin-Menzies report, "An historical impact analysis of resource development prepared for the International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd.; Hedlin-Menzies and Associates."

This is an amazing claim. In appendix table 112 Hedlin-Menzies listed 1,637 employed in construction at Thompson in 1968 and 3,538 employed in mining operations. Indirect employment was estimated at 12,460, totalling 17,635. "If the end of construction activity is to have no impact as suggested, we have a multiplier effect of five; one job really means five jobs." This study was probably the basis for the famous five-to-one ratio.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Six.

Mr. Martel: Quoting:

This across-the-board ratio to investment, smelting and refining is just one of many manufacturing activities. One could reasonably conclude that there is no unemployment if one uses Hedlin-Menzies on mining and that there are, in fact, six million job vacancies running round Canada—looking for someone to take them up, based on the five-to-one ratio that Hedlin-Menzies uses.

What does Wingate say in his defence of less tax?

Regrettably, the Manitoba government during the year made effective increased income tax rates and enacted an increase in its mining royalty tax [which amounts to 2.3 per cent per annum. That is a tremendous increase!] This means that individuals and industry in Manitoba are paying the highest income tax and that the effective mining royalty tax is amongst the highest in Canada, 2.3 per cent. Such high taxation can only deter new mining investments.

That is what the minister's afraid of.

Mr. Renwick: They may have to go to South Africa.

Mr. Martel: That little thing—"Such high taxation can only deter new mining investment and expansion in the province."—that is what this department and this government is scared of. Every time we even talk about taxing this industry fairly the companies bring out the big stick that they are not going to get involved in exploration; they are not going to get involved in development; they are going to move out. I want to know where they are going to move to and how they are going to drag those natural resources with them.

Mr. Laughren: They'll go to PEI!

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious as I said earlier that the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would permit me an interruption? Our standing orders do require that we adjourn at 10:30.

Mr. MacDonald: That's a good idea.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that the intention was to continue with this debate. Do we have the unanimous consent of the House to do so?

Mr. Cassidy: For how long?

Mr. Speaker: I am not in any position to say for how long. The unanimous consent would be to continue the debate until the motions before the House are dealt with.

Agreed.

Mr. Martel: We have, Mr. Speaker, the threats. It was interesting when the select committee was in New York and we talked to Anaconda and what they wanted to do was come here to open up in Nakina, in the riding of the member for Thunder Bay. They stated rather emphatically that before they would open up they wanted, from the date development started, a guaranteed annual return of 12½ per cent, otherwise they would not open up in the Nakina area—12½ per cent including the years of development. That's what they want for a return. They extract to no end from the residents, and as I've indicated right along our returns have been most negligible.

Mr. Speaker, if I just might, in concluding, I would like to put forward—

Mr. Renwick: No, don't do that.

An hon. member: Keep it up.

Mr. Foulds: Keep it up, keep it up!

An hon. member: That is just the opening.

Mr. Laughren: Talk about roads to resources.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: See if you can get the attention of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence).

Mr. Laughren: His attention span is very short!

Mr. Martel: I'll summarize then; how's that? I'll put it all together in a concise summary.

An hon. member: And don't repeat it.

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Revenue): Why don't the members stop heckling their own member?

Mr. Martel: In Ontario, Mr. Speaker, we don't have the accurate analysis of the mining industry that Manitoba now has; and before the minister runs around gumming it as he did to the prospectors, he might just read—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is a statement that has not been researched.

Mr. Martel: The minister hasn't read the report, has he? It is obvious from his comments at the Royal York that he hasn't read it.

An hon. member: He can't read.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Look at the exploration going on in Manitoba today. It is down, down, down!

Mr. Martel: Did the minister read the report?

Mr. MacDonald: Did the minister read their budget? They are up on every score.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Did the minister read the report?

An hon. member: Including the election results next time; wait and see!

Mr. Martel: Two-point-three per cent is the return in Manitoba. Is that extracting too much from that industry; 2.3 per cent?

An hon. member: We don't think extracting anything is too much!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Pick another province, because the member picked the wrong one.

Mr. Martel: I picked Ontario. Does the minister know what we got last year? I'm glad he is here. Does he know what our return on the mining industry represented of our budget?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They follow everything we do in Ontario.

Mr. Martel: One-third of one per cent of Ontario's budget!

Well, the minister is interjecting; I just wanted to answer him. One-third of one per cent of Ontario's budget for last year was met by returns on the mining industry; $16 million.

How can you justify it? How can you sit there and justify it? A $16 million return on an industry that took in $1.5 billion.

An hon. member: How can he justify a parliamentary assistant?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member addressing his remarks through the chair?

Mr. Stokes: He is.

Mr. Speaker: Is he? I wasn't sure.

Mr. Martel: I was just circumventing you a little.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I ask you, how can that minister sit there on $1.5 billion in mineral production and say that $16 million tax by the province was sufficient?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not being repetitious is he?

Mr. Martel: No, not a bit! Not a bit, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Not at all; this is the sixth year I have heard it.

Mr. Martel: How can he, when it was only last year he got this $16 million?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Get in your own seat!

Mr. Martel: I can't help it if the minister is so dense it doesn't sink in.

Well I've got the budget in front of me, Mr. Speaker, if I just might—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: I want to turn to the budget; the public accounts, 1972. General revenue under the Department of Mines and Northern Affairs was $16,065,000. Is that accurate? I ask, Mr. Speaker, is that accurate?

It is in the public accounts and we are supposed, I believe, to rely on the public accounts. Is the minister denying that we took in more than $16 million as the provincial tax on mining for last year?

He had a lot of audacity a moment ago; he was full of smoke and vigour. What will he answer?

Mr. Stokes: Let the minister give us the right figure!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well, he has got faith in the mining industry, he bought an $85,000 home in Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: I don't have an $80,000 home in Sudbury. I don't have a home in Sudbury.

An hon. member: What's that got to do with it.

Mr. Stokes: Another red herring! Another red herring!

Interjection by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Two homes now!

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the minister, through you, that my home is in the municipality of Capreol.

An hon. member: Completely irrelevant!

Mr. Martel: There is no mining in Capreol. Maybe you could convey that to the minister, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: It wouldn't do much good.

Mr. Renwick: The member has got to them, they are all whispering advice to the minister.

Mr. Martel: Well, that would be useless.

Mr. Renwick: Even the house leader is in on it. The Minister of Revenue was in there a minute ago.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): I could whisper a little to the member but he never listens.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why don't they stop heckling their own member?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We want to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Laughren: The minister for Resources Development up in the back row could enlighten us as to what we actually got.

Mr. Renwick: One would think so.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Provincial Secretary for Resources Development is wearing a hat.

Mr. Martel: The minister, Mr. Speaker, indicates we are getting sufficient; and there isn't a year that we have got 2½ per cent return from that industry. I would ask the minister, if he is so sure we are doing such a magnificent job, that he set up an independent commission or committee, not made up of Tory hacks, but economists—

Mr. Laughren: Hire Eric Kierans; he'll get to the facts.

Mr. Martel: —and have them do the study that was done in Manitoba. The minister is so sure that we are getting such a return; is he willing to do that then, set up such a committee to do this type of study? Or is he afraid of the results, of what they'll show?

Mr. Renwick: Of course he is; he's frightened.

Mr. Martel: In fact, Eric Kierans puts it pretty nicely. I think its the last quote I'll take from Kierans.

An hon. member: Careful now, watch it!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's the joke of the century.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He's the former Postmaster General.

Mr. Martel: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He got the mail moving.

Mr. MacDonald: Get Hedlin-Menzies to do it. He's a former chairman of the Tory convention.

Mr. Foulds: What's the minister got against mailmen? Kierans went from mailman to Minister of Finance.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, the reason the minister won't do it is summed up quite easily. If the government of Ontario decides to maintain the status quo—and it's obvious from the minister's speech the other night that it does; with some marginal increases in taxes, although I doubt that in Ontario—then it should say frankly to the people in Ontario that it is unable and helpless to challenge the power and control of the corporations.

An hon. member: Absolutely true.

Mr. Martel: That's what it is in a nutshell. Every time the minister even talks about increasing the taxes they threaten to move out—and our share is less than 2½ per cent a year. If the minister won't do it, I'm asking the Premier (Mr. Davis) to do it; in fact he should set up a commission to find out exactly what we're getting from that cruddy industry.

An hon. member: That's up to Bill Kelly.

Mr. Martel: One-third of one per cent of the budget last year was financed by mining. How can the government possibly have any type of fiscal policy when the area the minister brags about consistently—the returns from mining—are in the range of $16 million to $17 million a year on production that is valued at $1.5 billion?

Mr. Renwick: That's right.

Mr. Martel: That represents less than one-third of one per cent of Ontario's budget! How in the world do we build anything on the mineral resource industry in Ontario when the materials are taken out and processed into a finished commodity somewhere else? We subsidize the industry. And if I'm wrong, I challenge the minister to set up a committee to prove me wrong. But I suggest I'm right and this government is afraid to find out the truth because it has backed off so long. That's the one thing I'm asking this minister to do: Set up an independent commission and find out what we're getting.

Mr. Renwick: They're very quiet over there now.

Mr. Martel: Secondly, I'm asking that this department not be allowed the right to continue to collect the revenues from mining. That belongs in the Ministry of Revenue.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: What kind of nonsense is this? It's the only branch of the government that collects its own income, and every flunky in that department is a mining company official.

An hon. member: Oh, no!

Mr. Martel: Yes, they are; they're all listed.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member was disappointed when he found out the truth.

Mr. Martel: I've read the names. Only about four have never worked for the Department of Mines.

Mr. MacDonald: And one of them worked for the United States Steel Co.

Mr. Martel: They're all there. Does the minister want me to go over the list again?

Mr. MacDonald: No, please don't.

Mr. Martel: Does he want me to go over the list again?

Mr. MacDonald: No, please don't.

An hon. member: Is the minister going to lose any sleep over it?

Mr. Martel: Thirdly, I want the complete removal of safety inspection from that department and into the Ministry of Labour, where it belongs, and leaving all the flunkies behind. In fact, I want to ask the minister, through the Speaker, if Charlie Hews of Inco still writes the department's reports. You know, Charlie Hews, the safety man for Inco. Does he still write the department's reports?

Mr. Renwick: He's frozen into immobility.

Mr. Martel: Or does the department now write its own reports?

Mr. MacDonald: He has suddenly become silent.

Mr. Laughren: He has to consult with Charlie Hews to find out!

Mr. Martel: That should be removed; it should be over in the Ministry of Labour under the Industrial Safety Act, where it belongs. I'm asking the minister to go along with something I think he's tried to suggest at the mining conference, that there be a convention of ministers of natural resources in Canada so that the various mining companies can stop playing off one province against the other and extracting more than their fair share of the largess. One thing the Tories have to learn is that there is only one motive behind any corporation, and that's the maximization of profit. If they can play off one province against the other, they'll do so; and they've done it beautifully in this province, as was witnessed by Falconbridge going to Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, we in this party would have no qualms about doing what Kierans is doing, or is saying they should do. The minister in his speech at the Royal York suggested nationalization and I'm not sure how you nationalize—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member catered to that.

Mr. Martel: Possibly he can explain how you nationalize what already belongs to the people of Ontario. He should tell me how you nationalize that.

Mr. Renwick: The government gave it away.

Mr. Martel: It already belongs to us.

Mr. Renwick: They gave it away.

Mr. Foulds: He takes their executives into government, that's his theory of nationalization.

Mr. Martel: How do you nationalize something which already belongs to the people?

Mr. Renwick: You give it away for a dollar and they sell it back for several million.

Mr. Martel: That was in the minister's speech. All that diatribe from that group that writes his speeches over there, who are nothing but fronts for the companies.

An hon. member: Shame!

Mr. Martel: It was in his speech.

Mr. Laughren: Including the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. He is the biggest flunky of them all.

Mr. Martel: They talked about nationalization and that's why I know the minister didn't read the report, because nowhere—nowhere—does Kierans say "nationalize." And the minister had egg all over his face the day he spoke at the Royal York, because he was saying Kierans was talking about nationalization. He doesn't mention nationalization. The minister had better get his joe boys in that department to read the book so that they can write his next speech accurately.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Read the Manitoba report.

Mr. Martel: I've got the Manitoba report in front of me. By God, that's what this is called, it's called the "Natural Resource Policy in Manitoba," and Kierans goes to great lengths to suggest you can't nationalize that which you already own and that which already belongs to the people—the mineral resources.

It's the minister's people who didn't read this. They took some report out of the Globe and Mail maybe, or the Toronto Star.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Digest it. Read it.

Mr. Martel: They didn't read it.

Mr. MacDonald: The Northern Miner.

Mr. Martel: And that's how bad the minister looks when he gets up and makes stupid statements like he did at the Royal York. It was obvious he didn't read it.

We'd have no problems doing what Kierans says. He says two basic things really. He suggests that Manitoba get involved in a company distinct from mining and do all the explorations and that they then do the mining, in two different companies. That's where the profit is—it isn't in refining and smelting—And that's what they do. They would do nothing with smelting or refining, but they would do the mining, by and large. And they would give the major companies 10 years to get out of the mining field, stock piling all they want. But he doesn't mention nationalization.

Those are the six things this government should do if it's going to get more than two per cent return and not the sellout the Minister of Natural Resources perpetuated in his speech at the Royal York—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Manitoba didn't accept it.

Mr. Martel: —when he said, "We are not going to tax them any more. We can't load them with any more tax."

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Martel: If two per cent is a load of tax then the whole government is sick.

Mr. Germa: Give them a saliva test.

Mr. Martel: If they think that two per cent of taxation on the mining industry is an adequate tax return then the government of Ontario is sick and we are in trouble.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: If the minister had been here all the time he would have learned more tonight than at any time in the last year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I shall dispense with the formal comments that are made by a member when he first rises to speak in reply to the Speech from the Throne. However, I would like, at the outset, to congratulate the good people in the two ridings, the riding of Huron and the riding of St. George, for their wise selection of Liberal candidates in the recent by-elections.

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): I wish they were in the House to hear the member's compliments.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we do know about the government opposite is that they are always draggin' and the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), like St. George, slew the dragon, so those fellows can realize now and can know now that it will not be long before those people will be on this side of the House and we over there.

Their days are numbered. The people have spoken. It has been found out by the people that this government that was supposed to have listened does not listen. As a result, at the next go at the polls they will seek their vengeance and they will return—I shouldn't use the word return—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Elect!

Mr. B. Newman: Elect a Liberal government to run the province's business.

Mr. Speaker, one of the items I would like to make mention of is the problem of the question period. There is a lot of discussion on this side of the House as to who should have the opportunity of asking the next question. There are also the comments that we may not get the full 45 minutes in the question period.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you have a sweep second clock that could record one hour duration and that you operate it, or the Clerk operate it, when the question period starts. Everyone in this chamber could see the exact amount of time left in the question period. In this way there would be no undue criticism whatsoever levelled at you in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon, I introduced in this House a bill intitled an Act to establish the Ontario Waste Disposal and Reclamation Commission. I would like at this time to make a few comments concerning that bill. The richest natural resource ever discovered by man is now garbage. Canadians produce great amounts of garbage every year, and more so each ensuing year. The total national output for 1970 has been estimated at 673 million tons, or approximately 4.3 pounds per person per day collected in the urban areas. So you can see when we talk about garbage, its disposal and the reclamation of byproducts from garbage, that we have a job that will require an enormous amount of ingenuity on the part of our scientists, and likewise a big responsibility on the part of government.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, as I made mention—and the latest statistics are for 1970—we produce only 4.3 pounds per person. It is estimated that within approximately 20 years that amount of garbage will double to almost nine pounds. So you can see that the problem does not diminish, but it seems to accelerate, and accelerate at an extremely rapid rate.

At the present time, natural resources are supplied continually, but they are not unlimited and are not incapable of depletion or abuse. Estimates predict that present sources of many metal ores will be depleted in the near future, necessitating greater costs in money and energy if a continued supply of these metals is to be obtained from the earth.

Present methods of garbage disposal do not take these facts into consideration and very little is done to try to conserve the reusable components of garbage. The three traditional methods of garbage disposal, as everyone knows, are the open dump, landfill and incineration. Unfortunately, none of these methods is problem-free. Many open garbage dumps are unorganized and often create unsightly littering. They have long been recognized as a health hazard and they are often infested with insects and rodents. Furthermore, they present a danger to the environment because of decay and decomposition.

The problem with landfills is that suitable spaces are not in great supply. No one wants a landfill in his neighbourhood. Sometimes this landfill method of disposal has become quite expensive, if the garbage must be shipped to a distant landfill site. You can recall, Mr. Speaker, the discussion recently concerning the metropolitan area here wishing to export its garbage into the northern regions of this province.

Incineration of garbage always creates a residue which is now put into a landfill. One of the main problems with incineration, of course, is air pollution. According to Pollution Probe, at least four of Toronto's seven incinerators are operating in violation of the Air Pollution Control Act.

Therefore, it's easy to conclude that our present methods of garbage disposal represent a destruction of resources, accompanied by economic, environmental and possibly public health damage. A new method of garbage handling is needed that is not harmful to the environment and that at the same time conserves and recycles some of the reusable ingredients of garbage.

I have a proposal, Mr. Speaker, to which I hope the government will give serious consideration. The province should establish an Ontario waste disposal and reclamation commission that would operate on the same basis as Ontario Hydro. In other words, it would become a provincial authority or a provincial utility. This commission would be responsible for all waste disposal in the province, including sanitary landfill and incineration. However, before disposal, the garbage would be processed in a plant for the reclamation of paper, metals and glass. The commission could then market reclaimed materials to industry for recycling.

Many municipalities would find it extremely difficult to set up their own reclamation plant because of the great financial burden involved. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the province should have the responsibility of setting up these plants on a regional basis.

It is estimated that processing 200,000 tons of waste annually would make the operation of such a plant economically feasible. In regions and towns where waste collection procedures are uneconomical for local authorities, the commission would provide collection services as well. In more densely populated regions and municipalities, collection would continue to be provided by the local authorities, but disposal and reclamation would be provided by the commission.

As I mentioned previously, Mr. Speaker, resources are being wasted through burning and burying. Given the dwindling supply of natural resources, we should make every effort to conserve and recycle existing resources. I understand 40 to 50 per cent of all municipal garbage is paper. In spite of the projected shortages, urban centres in Canada are throwing away millions of tons annually. If paper is incinerated, it contributes to harmful air pollution, as complete combustion seldom, if ever, occurs. Paper is the principal source of harmful gases and particulates which can be produced by inefficient incineration of garbage. Paper recycling technology is well developed, but manufacturers and consumers must be educated about the desirability and benefits of recycling paper.

Mr. Speaker, glass represents about six per cent of municipal refuse, mostly in the form of glass containers. The increasing use of non-returnable bottles has greatly increased the amount of glass in our garbage. A ban on these bottles would go a long way to eliminating waste glass. As long as this is not done, we must continue, and will continue, to have unnecessarily large amounts of glass in our garbage.

Since metal is available in limited amounts, we must try to recycle existing supplies. Larger scale recycling of metals seems technologically feasible and financially beneficial. Disposal of metals in garbage is not dangerous with landfill, but the release of gas from metals during incineration is potentially a great health hazard.

By making reclamation plants operational, many of the environmental hazards I have mentioned can be eliminated. Such a plant, Mr. Speaker, has been built by the Black-Clawson Co. in Franklin, Ohio. Contrary to our systems, this plant operates at a profit instead of a loss.

I think, Mr. Speaker, this province could solve many of the problems of garbage disposal by establishing the Ontario waste disposal and reclamation commission. I do hope that my proposal will receive study and serious consideration by the government.

Mr. Speaker, I could make mention of the project in the city of Kingston that has been in operation since 1971. Pollution Probe in the area has provided a series of statistics and they have shown that the plant—even though it is heavily oriented to manual labour—can operate at a profit. The Black-Clawson Co., of Franklin, Ohio, that I mentioned previously, Mr. Speaker, operates only a 150-ton plant and it serves only 10,000 people. It processes garbage for $6 a ton. All sorting and screening is done mechanically, so that there is no handpicking whatsoever, Mr. Speaker. The Kingston operation uses a little more manpower than this and as a result is a little more expensive.

It is said by the Black-Clawson people that a 1,000-ton-a-day plant, which would cost about $10 million, would produce approximately $8,600 worth of reclaimed materials each and every day of its operation. That plant would be able to operate at $2.90 a ton of garbage.

The city of Toronto proposed a Kipling-Horner incinerator that originally was planned to cost $10 million. Now I understand that with the heat recovery units in the plant it will cost approximately $18 million to complete. The Black-Clawson plant in Franklin, Ohio, operates at $5.70 a ton profit, whereas the Toronto incinerator today operates at a loss of approximately $4 a ton. So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that there is an alternative to the present method; and that the recycling of reclaimed waste can be an economically viable operation.

There are other projects, such as the Hercules-Delaware project in the state of Delaware, that has been in operation since August of 1971. There is a Gainesville plant in Florida that was originally constructed in 1967. It is also an economically viable operation.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of waste disposal is not a local problem, it is a national problem. With the steadily increasing volume of waste, it is absolutely essential that government take a serious look at the proposition I have mentioned and implement it at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman) is not in the House at this time, because you can recall during—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue):
I am short, but not that short.

Mr. B. Newman: Oh yes he is.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): He is there.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, you recall that during the question period I asked him, concerning the Elizabeth Gardens—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member want me to return to my place to heckle?

Mr. B. Newman: That is quite all right, the minister can hear from there.

I asked the minister a question concerning the Elizabeth Gardens project in the city of Windsor and he said he would look into the whole condominium housing project in the community.

He has had an interim report submitted by Mr. Smith of his staff. I did meet Mr. Smith and he is a very congenial gentleman. He certainly let me know just exactly what has been done, what ministry has had the opportunity to examine.

In spite of all that and in spite of the fact that the minister is not having a probe but has checked into each of the complaints of each of the occupants in the project, I don't think that is going far enough. With that, Mr. Speaker, all we are doing is—checking complaints, but no checks have ever been implemented as to whether the specifications of the plans have been followed.

The latest information I received was from a Bell Telephone lineman who mentioned he went to drill a hole in one of the basement casement window frames and the pressure on the drill forced the whole frame into the home. That is not an isolated case. That is the second case in which an individual has removed the frame with the application of slight pressure.

I've also received complaints, Mr. Speaker, that the shrubbery and the gardening around the housing project was not up to specifications whatsoever. The trees ordered were far smaller than what were called for in the specifications.

There are so many faults in the project that I think the answer to the problem would be to have a complete probe of the whole operation right from the beginning to the end.

I will not read it into the record but may I bring to the minister's attention that on Thursday, March 29, the Windsor Daily Star had an editorial that was headed "No Ifs Ands Or Buts." To save time, Mr. Speaker, I will read only one paragraph, in all, of the article. It is quite a lengthy one and this is the last paragraph:

"All in all, the situation is such that a full investigation by impartial government investigators is mandatory. Mr. Grossman should stop hesitating and start it."

I think, Mr. Speaker, there is so much to learn from this—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What kind of hesitation is there in holding back $350,000?

Mr. B. Newman: Holding back the money does not necessarily mean that the inspectors are checking to see if the specifications for the construction have been followed at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If not, they won't get paid. They won't get their money.

Mr. B. Newman: The holdback is simply to see that the project is progressing and nothing else. After it has been completed—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, even though the minister may say that, it would still be worth his while, and it would be to the advantage of housing generally through the province, if he had a complete and thorough investigation of the whole operation of this condominium project. He would find errors in the construction field and he could apply this experience to other projects so that citizens buying homes in a project like this would know the homes are fully guaranteed, and would have a guarantee, say for a year's time, or their money would be cheerfully refunded, we hope, to them.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to see that the Premier (Mr. Davis) is in his seat, because the next topic I wanted to discuss and mention very briefly was the issue of daylight saving time.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): I thought it was his personality. That would have been interesting.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the problem of daylight saving time is nothing earth-shattering or anything of that sort, but communities have asked that daylight saving time be universal throughout the province. In addition to that, the fact that daylight saving time carries on until the last Sunday in October extends the time a little too long. By that time young children going to school are leaving home in the darkness and coming home in the darkness too, and I don't think it's right. I think a new look should be taken at daylight saving time by the province. It should probably end on either the first Sunday after Labour Day, or at the latest possibly on the last Sunday in September.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to talk for a short while concerning a rent supplement scheme. Year after year I have brought to the attention of the government the need for rent supplements, especially to senior citizens. The ministry has implemented such a programme. But let me illustrate to you, Mr. Speaker, the type of programme it has. I will speak for my own community because I am more familiar with it.

Of some 1,300 senior citizens who are looking for geared-to-income housing in the community, there are only 27 rent supplement programmes in the city. There are only 27 accommodations that under the rent supplement programme.

The problem with the rent supplement programme as implemented by the government is that an individual or a builder has to apply to the department to have his accommodations put under the rent supplement scheme. Many of the people living in accommodations today, and especially senior citizens, are satisfied with their accommodations. They don't want to be moved from where they live. The big problem is they cannot afford the rentals. The rentals are not abnormally high, but they are in a range that prevents them from leading the type of life of an individual who is able and fortunate enough to get geared-to-income senior citizens' housing.

Rather than building senior citizens' high-rise accommodation, I think the minister could curtail some of this building, if he provided rent supplement to the senior citizens in the accommodations in which they live right now.

The minister would say that the individual owning the accommodation is going to gouge the government as far as rentals are concerned. That type of individual is the exception and not the rule. The minister's staff could come along and check on these senior citizens. He could have his inspectors go around. They would not put the senior citizen who would be paying an abnormal amount of rent for the accommodation on a geared-to-income rent supplement programme. The ministry would build highrise or other accommodation for him.

There are a lot of senior citizens living in accommodations today where the rents are decent and are the type of rent that one would normally expect to pay for that accommodation. But the senior citizen cannot afford that at all, and the government should be supplementing his rentals.

Why should someone who is fortunate enough to get into geared-to-income rental be able to have a higher standard of living than another senior citizen who is in the unfortunate position that he cannot get into a highrise or other senior citizens' accommodation?

The government is discriminating against the individual who cannot find or cannot be placed in Ontario Housing. It can implement a rent subsidy programme for the senior citizen very easily. It would not disrupt the senior citizen. He is living in accommodation and among friends. There is a minimum of social problems as a result of that, whereas under the present scheme of coming along and warehousing a lot of them in a concrete box—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They just love it. Don't call it warehousing.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, some of them just love it; that's absolutely true. But the minister is not taking care of those other senior citizens for whom he cannot build housing accommodation in the foreseeable future. Why should that senior citizen be penalized and the other one be favoured? The government should treat them all alike. It can treat them all alike by providing them with a rent supplement right in the accommodation in which they live.

I don't think the inspectors from the Ontario Housing in the city of Windsor would have any difficulty going to the 1,300 senior citizens who have asked for housing accommodation, looking at the accommodation, finding out the rentals being charged, approaching the landlord and coming to some type of accommodation that would not be gouging, would not be excessive and would accommodate the senior citizen. The ministry wouldn't have to keep building senior citizen accommodations for that type of an individual.

I think there is a better answer than simply providing senior citizens' highrise, or other housing in a hurry. The minister can provide the accommodations over an extended period of time; but at the same time, with the rent supplement, he should be able to accommodate those many senior citizens who are not favoured and cannot get into Ontario Housing senior citizens' accommodations.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when the minister only has 27 subsidized rental units in the city of Windsor, he certainly is not being as vigorous and as active as he should be with the rent supplement scheme. He has 1,200 or 1,300 senior citizens waiting for accommodation; he has some 900 family requests for accommodation; so in all he has some 3,000 families looking for accommodation; and for all of them he has only 27 rent supplement accommodations.

That is just not good enough today, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister can be a little more vigorous. He can have his officials look into the scheme a little closer and come up with a better answer than he has. In the meantime, the minister's development of senior citizens' accommodation can carry on, but he would not have to rush to complete them.

He could possibly spread them throughout the community a little better. It isn't necessarily good to have them all concentrated in one area. I am not saying it is bad, but I am saying it isn't necessarily good. They say there is a better answer; and as I have mentioned earlier for those senior citizens who are satisfied with where they live but can't afford the rental that they have to pay, the rent subsidy programme can be the answer.

The way the programme is operating with this ministry is not the answer as yet. I have talked this over with ministry officials back in the city of Windsor and they certainly do see just exactly what I have mentioned. I would assume that they would just love to go into this in the way I have mentioned, but something seems to prevent them from doing just that back here in Toronto. As I mentioned, the rent subsidy would not only be for senior citizens. It could be for those on various benefit programmes through the Ministry of Community and Social Services, such as the mother's allowance or family benefits and the disabled person's allowance.

While I am on this senior citizen topic, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention that possibly another answer to the senior citizens programme could be a baby bonus in reverse established by the Ministry of Community and Social Services. There the ministry, rather than worrying about building senior citizens' accommodations, would pay a bonus geared-to-income to the children if they would accommodate their parents rather than put them in senior citizens' housing.

If you gave the family a bonus they could probably put on a room or so at the back of their present accommodation and they could take care of mother or dad, or both mother and dad. So this could eliminate a social problem, or minimize a social problem, it could provide accommodation for them and they would be with their children. And I think it would be, financially, a much cheaper operation than the one we have at present.

The task force that goes about the province, Mr. Speaker, has heard numerous individuals making presentations, requesting that the rent supplement style of programme be expanded, be put into operation in a more vigorous fashion. Likewise, I have also heard comments that they do like the family taking care of mother or dad, but the family hesitate to do that. I doubt if they would have the same amount of hesitancy if there was some financial consideration like a reverse style of baby bonus.

Back in my own community, while the two ministers are in their seats—that is the Minister of Revenue and the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle),—we happen to have four different action centres. We have the downtown community citizens organization; the east Windsor citizens organization; the Windsor West citizens organization; and the Ford Ferndale citizens organization. These organizations have action centres.

The downtown group does have accommodation that has been provided by the Ministry of Revenue, the housing branch, in cooperation with Ontario Housing and CMHC, and 7.5 per cent from the city, I understand. They have nice accommodation. The ministry is to be commended for putting this up. It serves a real purpose. It assists both of the ministries there.

In the accommodation they have a programme or a service to the people who live in the area, in addition to people who may live in the adjacent area, not necessarily living in Ontario Housing. The programme is counselling and simply relieving the various individuals of various problems—or attempting to solve problems—or making various government contacts for them. It is a sort of referral service. It is an action centre; a general attempt at problem-solving.

The centres are operating today on a LIP grant. That LIP grant will end, if I am not mistaken, at the end of May and then it is all over with.

The service that is provided in these four action centres is of value to the community. It has assisted Ontario Housing. It has minimized the social problems that were in the housing project. It has financially helped Ontario Housing. It has likewise helped the Ministry of Community and Social Services. I think between the two of them or one or the other, they should provide a continuing grant.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't have the money.

Mr. B. Newman: Some of the money the minister could save on the repairs—the extra repairs which are going to be put into the Elizabeth Gardens project would take care of all four of the centres.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): That's a practical suggestion. The minister just thought he didn't have the money.

Mr. B. Newman: The services these four centres perform for the people, Mr. Speaker, should not die simply because the LIP grant has expired. I think the Ministry of Community and Social Services and the Ministry of Revenue should get their heads together and provide to the organizations a continuing grant so that they can carry on the good work they have been carrying out until now.

To the Minister of Revenue, through you, Mr. Speaker, the programmes are under the guidance of a Mrs. Donna Gamble, who would be familiar to him as she is on the housing task force. He knows how capable she is in that respect, and she is equally capable in co-ordinating the four community centre programmes in the city of Windsor. I think financial assistance to that organization so that it can continue the programme is absolutely essential for the betterment of the community itself; and for the Ministry of Revenue and the Ministry of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to bring up a point on discrimination. This discrimination does not affect this government; it affects the senior government. However, this government is the government that should probably be looking into it as it is the one that has the Human Rights Code and Commission. When it comes to senior citizens, the single senior citizen under the new allowances will receive $170.14. Now be that man or woman its $170.14. The married couple will receive a total of $324.60. The man gets $170.14, the wife only gets $154.46. So we are discriminating there on account of marital status.

Not only is it discriminating, but that couple could go to legal aid, get legal aid and get separated or divorced. It would cost legal aid a substantial amount of money to process the divorce case and then they, as two single, divorced people, would each be getting $170.14. So the government is discriminating against married people by not providing each one of the married couples with the same amount of allowance.

My suggestion to the minister is that if the federal government will not come along and make the allowance even to both, then he should pick up the tab.

An hon. member: It is only money.

Mr. B. Newman: I refer now to the minister of Community and Social Services. If the Province of British Columbia can provide $200 income to an individual and $400 to a married couple, then the Province of Ontario, the richest province in Canada, could follow BC. It wouldn't take too much effort on this government's part to provide the same amount that the Province of British Columbia is providing to senior citizens.

It is not a big substantial amount as we once thought it was going to be. It would be the equivalent of $75.40 in all, and then they would have a $200 income each, or $400 total amount. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it isn't asking too much in the year of 1973 to guarantee each senior citizen at least $200 a month income.

Mr. Speaker, I had extensive comments to make concerning a whole series of topics, but for the sake of time I'm going to bypass some of them or shorten the length of my comments.

Back in February of this year I put a questionnaire to the good constituents in Windsor-Walkerville and the replies totalled 4,400. I would like to bring to the attention of the government four of the replies that have to do with the government, and I think that some type of action should be taken by the ministries involved. One of the questions was, should the driver's licence—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How many questions were on it?

Mr. B. Newman: I beg pardon?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How many questions were on it?

Mr. B. Newman: Ten questions on the questionnaire. I'm only going to read four.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read them all.

Mr. B. Newman: I know the minister is very interested, but if he wants to see me after I'm all through—

An hon. member: The member can draw pictures for him.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: Better put them on the record. Let's have them all. One or two of the other five might say something nice about the government. We'd like to hear it.

Mr. B. Newman: Some of them might be embarrassing to the government and I wouldn't want to do that.

Mrs. Campbell: Most of them aren't here anyway so we couldn't get any reaction.

Mr. B. Newman: One of the questions was: "Should the driver's licence include a recent picture of the driver?" And 76 per cent of those 4,400 who replied said they wanted the picture on. So, to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Got a lot more like that too!

Mr. B. Newman: —here is a suggestion that can be followed. Other states do this, but we in Ontario are not leaders, we are followers; and we are the slow-learner type of followers.

Mrs. Campbell: You can say that again.

Mr. B. Newman: A second question was: "Should Ontario operate its own lottery as do other provinces?"

Eighty-four per cent of the people said we should have a provincial lottery. Mr. Speaker, I think it behoves the government to look into this.

The third question was: "Should election expenses be limited and controlled by law?" Ninety per cent of the people replied that they wanted controls on election expenses; but strict controls, not the type of controls the people across there would like to impose. The government's controls would be on the two opposition parties but not on itself.

The last question would go to the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Education: "Should employees be allowed to negotiate conditions of work?" Of the people replying 74 per cent thought conditions of work should be a negotiable item. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) is as involved as the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) is when he discusses the Reville report and whether teachers should be given the right to negotiate conditions of work.

I won't go into any of the other questions because I think those four were a little more significant. The percentage of those answering and being so emphatic in their opinions was so great I thought I would bring it to the attention of the government, Mr. Speaker.

One of the other topics I wanted to bring up is the needs of elderly people. Elderly people are being neglected and have been neglected for too long a period of time, Mr. Speaker.

When we come to the elderly, we find that not only this government but governments throughout Canada don't pay attention to them to the extent they should. I'm going to read 10 different points under which government could come along and pay a little more attention to them.

One, the elderly are ignored when it comes to speedy relief from destructively high property taxes; this would prevent millions of older people from being literally taxed out of their homes.

Second, guarantees that the elderly may buy automobile insurance at reasonable rates consistent with the individual's ability to drive a car safely. Because the individual is elderly, even though he can drive a car safely the insurance rates are abnormally high.

Third, a suggestion to the government that some sort of inflation-proof bond or debenture be available so that the elderly who have the financial wherewithal would have a safe medium in which to invest some of their funds so that their buying power would not depreciate substantially with inflation.

A fourth should be the development of driver education courses for the elderly just as there are now for high school students; plus there should be cut-rate public transportation universally for elderly people throughout the province, especially travelling during off rush-hours. Also, the development of transportation services should be designed to accommodate the elderly. They shouldn't have the difficulty of having to climb 40 or 50 stairs in the subway when an escalator could provide much easier access to the subway for them.

A fifth point, Mr. Speaker, is there should be an upgrading of nutritional standards for foods most frequently consumed by older persons; there should be disclosure on these food labels of the nutrient content of the can, bottle or package.

Sixth: There should be a hot-meal programme implemented on a province-wide basis. This could be in co-operation with our present public school system so that the elderly would have a place to go and could help run the programme wherever possible.

Seventh: Adult education programmes could be geared primarily for consumer education and protection against the wide array of gyms, frauds and financial drains to which elderly consumers are now subjected.

An eighth point is there should be mid-career counselling and retraining programmes to help older workers avoid the disasters of occupational obsolescence and chronic joblessness, because there are large numbers of unemployed aged over 45.

The ninth is that there should be legal representation for the elderly individual who has been exploited in the marketplace. There should be special education protection programmes on consumer product safety laws affecting elderly consumers such as unsafe drugs and cosmetics; and better safeguards against misrepresentation and other problems always linked with the purchase of hearing aids, glasses and false teeth.

The tenth is there should be a formal research programme to study the special needs and problems of the elderly consumer, how he acts in the marketplace, the kinds of education protection programmes necessary and the laws he really needs.

I only bring the 10 items, Mr. Speaker. I could speak at much greater length on them, but I hesitate to do so because we know we'd like to get out of here before 4 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Speaker, there are two other items that I would like to bring up, and very briefly. One is on mobile housing. This government has vacillated on the mobile housing issue for too long a period of time. The member for the riding of Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), who was responsible for looking into the problem of mobile homes, hesitated to act with the dispatch that he should have—and as a result we find mobile homeowners in an extremely embarrassing position.

Now the mobile home tenants in the Lucier Estates Home Owners Association did present a report to the government task force looking into the housing situation. They made a series of recommendations that I think are worthy of reading into the record so that the government could look at it.

May I make a comment for the record, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Chatham-Kent is completely disinterested in the problems of the mobile homeowners. All he wants to do is sneer and make fun out of the difficulties with which they are confronted. That certainly doesn't speak too well for a member that at one time held the position of number two man in this government. If the rest of the minister are the way he is, Mr. Speaker, this government certainly is a real disgrace.

Mr. Speaker, the recommendations are as follows:

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Chatham-Kent): Why doesn't the member just table them?

Mr. B. Newman: All the member is asking me to do is to talk indefinitely, and I can easily do that.

Mr. McKeough: That's what the member is doing.

Mrs. Campbell: Go right ahead!

Mr. B. Newman: Where was the member earlier in the evening when other members spoke for an hour-and-a-half and almost two hours. He wasn't around. All of a sudden he has rested up and he comes in here and now he wants to yap.

Mr. McKeough: I was waiting breathlessly to hear the member.

Mr. B. Newman: Oh yes, that's right.

Mrs. Campbell: Read it in.

Mr. B. Newman: Oh, I intend to do so; whether he makes comments or not.

Mr. McKeough: He will, ad nauseam.

Mr. B. Newman: The recommendations of the Lucier Estates Home Owners Association, a group that have mobile homes in an area south of Windsor, are as follows:

1. We recommend that the Ontario government, along with the federal government, take a long, hard, intensive look into bringing into effect legislation mobile home dwellers desperately need, such as the Landlord and Tenant Act that would give them some type of protection. They want this immediately, not in the long distant future.

2. We recommend that Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. get involved in this by making low cost mortgages available to mobile home owners.

3. We recommend that before a park is to be set up, all plans must be submitted to the government for approval.

4. We recommend that the government either start their own parks or make government grants available to those wanting to provide a decent place for mobile home owners to live.

5. That all distributors in the business of selling these units must be government approved and meet the laws we hope are put into effect regarding the service and sale of mobile homes.

6. We recommend and acknowledge that rules and regulations are a necessity for the general well-being of a mobile home estate, however these rules and regulations should not be forced on the people but put to the majority of the residents to decide what rules they see fit to live under. After all, we are the people who are supposed to be living in a democracy and not a dictatorship.

7. We recommend that we should be entitled to full police protection as all other home owners are in all respects of the law.

8. We recommend that the government take a serious look in regard to rents charged and enforce some type of rent control.

9. We want to be treated as regular home owners, as we are not gypsies or nomads, which is what many people have the impression we are.

10. We would like to ask why the government seems to be dragging its feet in all of the above areas we have listed. It appears to us that at the present time the government seems to think if they ignore us we will go away.

11. We also would like to know what would happen to us if the community decided they didn't want us and put the 60-day trailer limit into effect. Where do we go? What do we do then?

12. What would happen to us, if the owner ever decided to sell his land to another individual or party and they decided they didn't want a mobile home park, but wanted to go into housing or apartments? Where would we go and what would we do?

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that these mobile home tenants are extremely concerned as to what would happen to them. They have received no direction from government. Government implemented a study back in 1971, but since then has been dragging its feet.

The last item I wanted to bring up is the problem of the gasoline retailers. I have discussed this and brought it up on the floor of the House years ago. There has been no action on the part of this government as far as the retail gas dealers of the province are concerned. It looks as if this government, has no intention of alleviating the problems of the gasoline dealers.

The gasoline dealers are in the most embarrassing position in that they have to obey just exactly what the gasoline distributor, the producer, says to them. They have no alternative but either to abide by that or close up shop.

They, have petitioned this government time and time again for some kind of action and are getting nowhere. I would like to read into the record just the few recommendations they have and a few suggestions they make.

They operate a business in which they are not free to set their own hours second they are not free to buy the gasoline they choose. Third, they are compelled to buy designated brands of miscellaneous items at prices that are not always competitive. Fourth, they are not free to advertise their own name; they're compelled to advertise the oil company; Fifth, they are compelled to pay for promotional advertising programmes and contests sponsored by oil companies. Sixth, they are compelled to accept unusual leases and contract charges or abandon the business.

However, the service station operators do happen to have two freedoms. They are: one, the freedom to do everything the oil company suggests; two, the freedom to go broke.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that the gasoline dealers are confronted with extremely unfair competition, unfair margins, unfair lease agreements, price discrimination and all types of promotional gimmicks. This government, in spite of looking into the problems of franchising, to date has done nothing with the report submitted to it in July, 1971.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is now 11:40, p.m. With the time I have available I wish to try in my own way to dispel some, but not all, of the myths that have left an unfair impression of the organized workers of this province and of this country. I, first, wish to paraphrase the following statement as a preface to my main remarks:

Every week 19 Canadians are killed on the job and, on an average day, 2,240 are injured. The total is even higher if we take into account those who are self-employed in agriculture, fishing, banking, trapping, and some service industries with fewer than four employees, and so on. The real death toll for 1971 is probably over 1,300. Again, in 1965, seven million man-days were lost on account of occupational accidents, which was four times the loss by strikes and lockouts.

We all are aware of the controversy around the operations of firms providing professional strike-breaking services to struck plants in Ontario. And I want to quote from Mr. T. M. Fielder, president of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce:

Whatever one thinks of some of the conduct of these firms which sell their services to a struck employer, it will be highly unfortunate if a municipal council resolution or a new law out of Queens Park is based on this aspect alone, which is really irrelevant to the fundamental issues.

I also want to quote from a statement by Harold J. Clawson, vice president of the Steel Co. of Canada:

The Ontario Federation of Labour is now asking various municipal councils to request the provincial government to pass laws prohibiting the use of so-called professional strike-breakers. Some councils have supported this position. I wonder if they know what they are doing. Let's make no mistake about it, what the OF of L wants is not just restrictions on professional strike-breakers, they want the law to prohibit any operation of a place of business during a strike.

Canadian unionists have been made the nation's economic whipping boys. They are blamed for "exorbitant" wage settlements that allegedly cause inflation, and for strikes that disrupt the economy and inconvenience the public. They have been accused of becoming too powerful, of pursuing their own "selfish" interests, to the detriment of the unorganized workers, the poor, and those on fixed incomes.

This is the way unions are portrayed in the news media. And the effect of this bad public image has been to convince many citizens, perhaps even the majority, that laws should be passed to curb unions' rights, and particularly the right to strike.

There are feelings, with such an anti-labour mood prevailing, that some politicians may be tempted to capitalize on that feeling by enacting or promising to enact legislation to shackle unions and reduce some of their hard-won rights.

At a time when everyone is seeking a scapegoat for our economic troubles, the unions are the likeliest and most vulnerable target. This attitude is becoming prevalent because few people know anything about union history, union structures, union methods. This ignorance is because of the inadequacies of our educational system, which teaches students virtually nothing of value about the labour movement. The textbooks glorify the business tycoons and the politicians of the past.

The one-sided press coverage of labour problems is another cause of labour's bad public image. Although 95 out of every 100 contract negotiations reach a settlement without any overt fuss or incident, the press concentrates on the other five that end in strikes—and especially on the relatively few that develop picket line troubles. The only time the average person reads or hears about unions is when they are on strike, and to him this represents the normal, everyday behaviour.

Organized wage and salary earners are the only group in our society who are obliged to justify and bargain for increased incomes. The manufacturer who wishes to raise his income merely adds another cent or two to the price of his product. The retailer adds his markup. The doctors and lawyers raise their fees. The landlord raises the rent. The banker raises interest rates.

All these increases are made unilaterally and arbitrarily, without reference to any regulation, laws, or other form of control. We are all aware of the collective bargaining procedures under the Labour Relations Act that organized workers must face, almost always in the public eye.

What kind of public image would doctors project if they were compelled to negotiate higher fees with their patients, and, failing agreement, refuse to treat them? Or landlords, if they had to negotiate rental hikes with their tenants, and, failing agreement, lock them out? Or retailers, if they had to negotiate all price increases with the consumer groups, and, failing agreement, refuse to sell them milk, bread, or staple foods? They would soon suffer the same decline in popularity that unions do every time a strike occurs.

It is fashionable these days to condemn strikes as barbaric and obsolete. These criticisms miss the point. Low wages, unstable working conditions and inadequate benefits are the real barbaric aspects of our economy, but they are far from obsolete. Until they are, the strike will remain as the only real weapon at labour's disposal to improve the worker's status.

Contrary to popular belief, no union is ever eager to stage a strike. Most unions, in fact, measure their success in any one year by the degree to which they have kept strikes to a minimum. When a strike is called, it is only as a last resort—after they have felt that the employer is most unreasonable and that they are left with no alternative.

The fact that only five per cent of labour disputes lead to a strike should be sufficient proof that unions, far from fomenting troubles, spend most of their time settling disputes before the strike stage is reached. But the press, the public and some politicians are not satisfied with a 95 per cent batting average.

Some demand nothing short of perfection in labour relations, even if that means outlawing strikes and settling wage levels by arbitrary methods. Any attempt to impose such a simple solution would, of course, produce chaos instead of better relations. Not only would illegal strikes multiply, but frustrated workers would resort to other perhaps even more damaging forms of protest—absenteeism, malingering, the slowdown and work-to-rule methods. I don't feel anyone would favour these alternatives.

If unions were even one-tenth as powerful as they are thought to be, they should have been able to redistribute the national income to a greater extent than they have so far. In fact, over the past 50 years, despite all the efforts of organized labour, the share of the national income that goes to wages and salaries has increased only a few percentage points. Although most people are better off today, much the same income gap remains between various groups of the population. This state of affairs could hardly exist if unions were now more powerful than the employers. The day to take such a suggestion seriously will be the day when a shop steward has the power to fire his boss.

The myth that union-won wage increases are the chief cause of inflation persists, despite conclusive evidence to the contrary. A report published last year by the influential Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development stated flatly that wage rates in Canada have lagged behind advances in production and profits. The OECD said that the recent strong acceleration of pay rates constituted simply a catching up with the past increases in output and corporate profits, which ran ahead of wages by about three years throughout the 1960s.

Even the Liberal government's now defunct Prices and Incomes Commission, which put most of the blame for inflation on Canada's labour unions, had a change of mind just before being phased out. Its chairman, Dr. John Young, admitted in his last report that "we do not attach particular significance to unions as a contributing force in inflation." This was a complete about-face from his anti-labour speeches during his tenure as commission chairman.

It may be appropriate to quote from another Liberal government document, the 1971 Senate report on growth, employment and price stability, which also exonerated the unions as the major cause of rising prices. Said the report:

The main reason why unions are characteristically allocated blame for inflation is that they go after income gains for their members so very much in public. Other groups are able to do the same thing more quietly, sometimes almost unnoticed by the public. But collective bargaining is, and probably always will be, one of the noisiest economic processes known to man; and this makes unions especially vulnerable to being designated as major social and economic scapegoats.

The labour movement is people who are constantly examining their responsibilities to people. The labour movement has assessed and is assessing its role and has opted for social unionism.

There has been, and still is, opposition to involving themselves in activities other than their own immediate and internal affairs. But labour has recognized that brotherhood demands an interest in their communities, their country and its people and their well-being; that the protection of their own hard-won gains demands a say in government where the rules are made and power lies; and that if, they are to remain a social force for good they must identify with the weak, the poor, the unorganized and the unfortunate.

Herein lies the fear of the establishment today, the fear so often expressed by spokesmen for the corporate giants, the chambers of commerce, manufacturers' associations, media editorials enacted upon by their political cronies in Canada—free enterprise Liberal and Conservative parties. The fear is that someday union members—ordinary working folk of all vocations—will realize their potential strength, will realize that they could elect a government that could give them a tax cut instead of big business.

They could legislate programmes and expenditures for many things that need to be done—jobs, environmental cleanups; things which directly create jobs—instead of huge handouts of public tax dollars to the corporate giants, in the pious hope that they might use some of it to create a job instead of eliminating jobs.

Their record to date, I think you will agree, has been lousy. This is a fear; this is why unions are under greater attack today than at any time since the battle to organize. It is a much more sophisticated attack that attempts to surround, capture and then enlist those who desperately need union organization and political help, against the one organization—the union movement—that does have a decent batting average on their behalf.

Those who decry organized labour, I'm personally convinced, don't really fear labour alone. The business and corporate world would see it as a workers fraternal club, just as they see the manufacturers' association and chamber of commerce as theirs. They probably don't even mind a few individual unionists getting involved politically, as long as it is with the establishment parties like the Liberal and Conservative, which they can control.

What scares the devil out of them is the thought working people might really challenge their hold on the economy and turn it to a people's society instead of a profits society. The people might organize with and join a political party that is prepared to make substantial changes in the current rules of the economic game they are playing.

This is why the attack on labour today; this is why attempts are made to highlight major contract gains and strikes—to imply that unions are greedy and willing to cause serious disruption to achieve their selfish aims; to loudly proclaim that unions won't cooperate to control wages so that inflation can be licked; that unions sticking up for people create all those bums who sit around because they don't want to work.

We've all heard the charges; the sneaky inferences and the pleas for control and the restraint on the big bad unions who are causing all the little people so much anguish.

Mr. Speaker, they do make mistakes and they should not wear any halo of absolute purity. But let me lay it on the line; there has never been such a bull roar tossed at the working people of Canada in 35 years as there has been in the past two years. It's deliberate and contrived deceit. It's intended to shake their confidence in themselves and in their frustrations; provoke them either into no outside action, or conversely into stupid acts of anarchy which could only aid the campaign of their enemies.

I don't mind urging all of them to take effective action on behalf of all the unfortunate people of this country. To mobilize their real power, their political power in coming elections. They must take heart in ending some of the double standards in our country. Why is labour and the NDP blamed for welfare bums when the huge corporations of this country are the ones getting the handouts from our tax dollars?

Twenty years ago corporations paid 28 per cent of all direct taxes collected by the government, and individuals paid 26.7—fairly equal. In 1973, individuals will pay 49.9 of all direct income taxes, and corporations only 12.2—most of which they will get back in government grants.

Surely this indicates clearly who is calling the shot and who qualifies as a welfare bum. It's not the producer or the unfortunate guy on welfare.

Why should a rich man holding two or more jobs be considered to have diversified holdings, while a worker with two jobs is moonlighting? Why should speculators be allowed to boost property values through phoney sales by $3,000, $4,000, $5,000, $6,000, $10,000 or $15,000 a lot before a house is ever built, when so many people need houses and when it results in prices and rents too high for hundreds of thousands of Canadians?

Why should public initiative be attacked by old parties and business politicians because it interferes with private enterprise? Aren't the private enterprise boys the very ones who are getting the public help from our taxes? Why should our tax dollars subsidize new automated plants for corporations that often result in fewer jobs for workers and more profit for business? What's fair about that?

How far do you think a factory worker would get if he asked for tax deferments and tried to pay no taxes while he fought his attachment in court? We can laugh at that, but isn't it exactly what the big corporations and the wealthy are getting away with, while lower and middle income people are made the scapegoats?

It is clear that labour is ready and willing to sit down as equals and discuss wages and the operation of essential services at the time of labour disputes. But they should make it equally obvious that the people want jobs and security—legitimate demands—not welfare; that they are ready to crack down on anyone who abuses welfare, corporate as well as individuals.

They should make it clear that what they want is honest tax reform and that they want effective consumer protection, essential health, education and housing services supplied on a cost basis with the speculator and profiteer consigned to the ashcan where they belong.

Give us a fair society, with people as the most important goal, and labour will more than play a responsible role. But let them not kid themselves any longer. If they want equity, justice and opportunity, they are going to have to fight for it! With the responsibility they have, the labour movement should be in the fight for justice for people.

I hope my efforts this evening, Mr. Speaker, will bring somewhat of a better understanding of the issues involved, regarding an important aspect of our social and economic development. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to enter the Throne debate.

The Speech from the Throne covered a rather large area of government involvement in the quality of life of the citizens of Ontario.

As an opposition member, I believe some of the proposals are good and can be accepted by many, but there are some that cannot be accepted without some strong reservation and debate.

I commend the government—even at this late date—on its announcement of a crack-down on the illegal use of drugs in Ontario and its intention to bring in strong measures for the protection of the citizens and the enforcement of programmes to combat drugs related to crime. This is a decision long overdue, for the drug problem in Ontario is at a critical level. I believe, as many citizens do, that both levels of government, provincial and federal, and our courts have been far too lenient in controlling drug abuse in Ontario.

My suggestion the other day, directed to the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr), that the government place bounties on drug pushers is nothing new. I have been told that other countries use a similar method of controlling drug pushers. I believe, as others do, that a drug pusher is one of the lowest creatures present in our society, the lowest form of an animal, and should be treated as such. The government has had bounties placed on animals such as the wolves; they had a price on their heads, and they almost became extinct. At one time wolves were considered a menace to our survival and to society as a whole. Drug pushers are killers. The province should put a price on the head of every drug pusher if we are to control drug abuse in Ontario.

The introduction of offtrack betting services in Ontario will no doubt bring in additional revenues to the province, and I suggest once again that the municipalities should share in that revenue through a special municipal tax programme that would provide additional income to the municipalities.

As the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) has stated, there was nothing mentioned in the Throne Speech concerning labour, except for one matter that leaves the impression that all labour in Ontario is dishonest, or labour is a poor citizen and is unworthy. Often statements by the government single out labour as an evil to our society; a poor attitude for the government to take. As to the remarks that an inquiry into organized crime in labour would be established in this session, we in the Liberal Party have asked the government to broaden its terms of reference to cover all organized crime in Ontario, an inquiry similar to one the Province of Quebec has initiated. No doubt organized crime in Ontario and Quebec are related.

Mr. Speaker, I was deeply concerned by the statement dealing with provincial growth of goods and services and the predicted increase to six per cent this year, as compared to an estimate of 5.5 per cent gain in 1972. The gross national product in Canada rose by 10.6 per cent in 1972, the largest advance in six years, reaching a total of almost $103 billion, value of all goods and services produced in Canada.

What a ridiculous way to measure our wealth in this country. The fantastic growth of wealth has put more money and profit into the hands of the banks and trust companies, adding further to inflation.

We Canadians perhaps have the highest lending rates compared to many countries. Just this week the Bank of Canada has taken steps to tighten up on lending, but then who suffers? The banks' best customers will receive the bank loans, small businesses and home buyers will find it harder to get loans and will be forced then to pay higher interest rates. The same conditions that existed in 1969 cannot be accepted or tolerated by the general public.

Action must be taken by the federal government and even the provinces to apply pressure to reduce the rates so that the average citizen can afford to purchase a home at a reasonable interest rate.

I have heard so much of the federal Conservative Party wanting to bring in price and wage controls, but never once including profits. This measure of price and wage control was used in the United States with little success, if any. Inflation is on the rampage in the United States and is present in Canada. With the accelerating boom in the economy, we in Ontario and Canada have failed to provide the necessary jobs for a healthy economy. There is not sufficient employment available and the right of every Canadian to share in that prosperity has been denied.

I quote from the Throne Speech:

... the average unemployment rate has declined from 5.2 per cent in 1971 to 4.8 per cent in 1972, and a record of 140,000 new jobs were created. ... unemployment in Ontario was 4.1 per cent in February of this year compared with 4.6 in February, 1972.

Yes, no doubt these are true; unemployment has declined, but not far enough. It has been said that in a healthy economy the level of unemployment should be around the three per cent level. The federal government and the provinces have many cost sharing schemes to create new employment on an ad hoc basis. This has certainly reduced unemployment in the early months of 1973 to 4.1 per cent with such programmes as initiative grants and others.

I refer to an article printed in the Evening Tribune, Thursday, Jan. 4, 1973:

The Niagara Parks Commission received a grant of $27,144 which will provide jobs for 20 labourers or 232 man weeks-work. The MP for Niagara Falls said that this grant is to aid in the area's high winter unemployment problems. Work to be done will include improvement of parkland, the Niagara shoreline, cleaning of ditches and culverts and other improvement jobs.

Mr. Speaker, this grant could create five permanent jobs for one year. No doubt the Niagara Parks Commission can well afford paying the total cost of this project. It is rather regrettable that a government agency such as the Niagara Parks Commission should have to bow to a federal government loan to do this work, particularly as the Niagara Parks Commission has the funds there to do it itself.

If both the federal government and the province can provide the capital for such programmes for a short period of three months of employment for many, and this government can come into this House and use the unemployment figures of 4.1 per cent, telling the public we have a healthy economy with full employment, this statement by the government is shameful. It is a precedent that has been followed year after year. It is a misleading statement that cannot be accepted or tolerated any longer by those citizens of this province who suffer under unemployment.

The people in Ontario want job security and believe that this is a right and the government must provide the leadership in creating that goal. We have seen many instances where industries have closed down with government doing little, if anything. I can recall the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) speaking here about a year or so ago with regard to the closing of the Dunlop Rubber plant in Toronto. I think much of it must have been caused by Hydro not purchasing their goods from a source close by, and perhaps the government should rap the knuckles of Ontario Hydro.

In the Canada-Japan Newsletter dated December, 1972, I noted that about 6,421 metric tons of preheater and superheater tubes were purchased in Japan. This is another matter that I cannot accept at this time, when there are industries here in Canada, particularly in Ontario, such as Babcock Wilcox at Galt and Combustion Engineering in Montreal, that are capable of manufacturing these tubes.

I can recall working for a company in the city of Port Colborne about 10 or 15 years ago, the former E. B. McGee Ltd., which used to fabricate preheater tubes for Ontario Hydro. At that time, I recall, Ontario Hydro had a government inspector there; and after every stage in the fabricating process he measured the material with a micrometer to see that it didn't distort too much in its roundness. The measurements were checked and the material was machined. I just wonder if Ontario Hydro has sent inspectors over to Japan to see what type of work it is going to get.

But the point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that I believe full employment could have been provided for about 36 men here in Canada or in Ontario. I think it is ridiculous that Ontario Hydro has the right to leave this country to purchase goods that can be produced here.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What about them hiring American firms to do their construction work?

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to bring to the attention of the House that I think the government should rap Ontario Hydro's knuckles very hard on this matter.

In other debates in the Legislature I have suggested measures I thought would create steady employment for many. If we are committed to the theme, "Keep Ontario Beautiful," then the government must employ environmental personnel on a full-time basis. I was very interested in the comments of the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) tonight, dealing with waste disposal; what he suggested would create jobs too, and I think this is a good idea.

The recycling of our waste, such as old automobiles and the millions of tons of metal scrap that clutter up our communities, as well as many other waste materials, can bring in revenue to offset some of the cost of employing environmental personnel.

I welcome the announcement that the government will introduce legislation which will ensure the preservation of the Niagara Escarpment. We in the opposition have been critical of the government for not having taken action earlier. I have always disagreed with the present government agencies in purchasing land in the Niagara Peninsula. At present, the Niagara Peninsula Conservation Authority is spending almost its entire budget in purchasing different site areas along the Niagara Escarpment. This should be a completely provincial project; all the costs should be borne by the province and not financed on a percentage assessment basis, as it applies now to the property owners in the Niagara region.

I also welcome the announcement that the Ontario government has given consideration to purchasing additional parklands in the St. Johns area, a very beautiful location in Niagara region. But I am rather disappointed with the Conservative government for not living up to one of its previous commitments, to purchase parklands west of Point Albino, in the town of Fort Erie. This announcement came by way of my provincial colleague from Welland, I believe, back in September 1968. Then followed further press releases stating that the government was considering the purchase of mini-parks along the lakeshore in the town of Fort Erie.

I regret that the government has not lived up to its previous commitment, for the time is now for the purchase of that parkland. Citizens in the region require a site for a new park; additional recreation area is a must. Beach access is needed, as well as land to be used by recreation vehicles such as snowmobiles, dune buggies and so forth. The citizens in the region have the energy to burn in their leisure time, and this is an opportunity for the government to fill that need.

The other consideration that the government must initiate is a programme for the construction of a new tourist information centre at the entrance to or in the vicinity of the Peace Bridge at Fort Erie, Ontario. The town of Fort Erie is one of the largest ports of entry into Canada. Thousands of tourists enter Canada through Buffalo, N.Y., to Fort Erie. I understand that after the completion of the road construction by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications sufficient land is available for a tourist centre just off the Queen Elizabeth Way, west of the Peace Bridge.

I have discussed this matter with a number of customs and immigration officers who would be most happy to see the completion of a new tourist centre. The officers inform me that it would speed up the flow of traffic. Often they lose time and hold up traffic in trying to direct or inform the tourist of the places of interest in the Province of Ontario.

I am sure that the minister responsible has received communications and information from the Fort Erie Chamber of Commerce suggesting the location of the new site for the centre. They have offered their services in providing personnel, so that the centre can be open all year, which would be a great advantage to the tourist industry of this province. Consideration should be given to this centre. I am sure it is one of top priority and the need is now.

There should be public washroom facilities in the centre. Consideration should also be given to including accommodation for a bus waiting room. I have been informed that the present bus service from Fort Erie and Buffalo to Toronto will be improved. There will be a bus leaving Fort Erie almost on an hourly basis. With the subsidies that the government provides in other communities in Ontario—for example, GO buses which are being paid for by every taxpayer in the province—surely consideration can be given to this request for a new tourist centre with waiting rooms for bus passengers.

Mr. Speaker, as for the decision of the government to take action for the preservation of physical resources in regard to land use, perhaps it is a little too late to start thinking of preserving our land. The wasteful uses of fast growing urban areas have reduced the rich, tillable soil and much of it has already disappeared through development core centres. One would almost believe by the action and statements made in the Throne Speech that we are living in Communist Russia.

One would question the government at this move. Would not only farmland but all land under the control of the government be an agricultural land reserve? I believe that a method of control must be found to protect our valuable farmlands for generations to come.

But are we going to ask the farmer to sacrifice his only asset? There must be a guarantee of compensation, and the government must assure him of a decent living. The government moving in this direction surely will implement a programme of sufficient funds to purchase farmlands.

The terms of reference of the select committee dealing with the Ontario Municipal Board did not include planning. I have noted, as other members of the committee found, that the greatest amount of public interest and the largest portion of its time were focused on questions about Ontario Municipal Board approvals concerning planning procedures. The committee recommended further investigation into the subject matter. I make reference to recommendation XXVII, which says:

The Legislature should appoint a committee to undertake a comprehensive review of the planning process in Ontario, or the government should provide some alternate method of conducting such a review.

I would hope that the government accepts this recommendation. In the discussion sessions that the committee dealt with at its hearings in Ontario, Winnipeg and Vancouver, one can conclude that a new Planning Act is needed in Ontario to include the retention of the basic rights of landowners in Ontario for the public good. If it is the desire of the government to move in this direction in preserving our prime agricultural lands for the public good, then the public must purchase the land. It is a matter for both provincial and federal government to share in that programme.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario must provide other measures to ensure a viable agricultural industry. I am interested in the report, Planning for Agriculture in Southern Ontario. There must be a policy directed to the need to decide the future agricultural use of the Niagara food belt and other tender fruit growing areas in Ontario. I quote from the report.

In order to provide the increased amount of food demanded in 1991 by a larger and richer population, the output of food must rise in Ontario. With the predicted increase in population of two per cent per year and a possible total increase to some 11.5 million or more by the year 1991, most policy makers are concerned with the amount of land needed by agriculture. The output for food must rise in Ontario or there must be larger purchases of food from other countries or our sales to other markets must be reduced.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that is a fair warning that the government must now decide on which course to follow—growing our food, or depending upon other markets perhaps at a price the consumer cannot afford. We have all seen the spiralling food costs that are present now. This province, and Canada as a whole, has little if any food surplus. The selling of all our grain—exporting most of it—has created a shortage of feed grain right in our own backyard. The demand is great and the price is high and who pays? The long-suffering consumer.

To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, Canada has no food bank or supply of food, such as canned goods, that we can turn to in case of a national emergency. We cannot even cope with the adverse weather conditions that prevail in the Province of Ontario, reducing farm productivity in the year 1972.

The idea of a food bank reserve to be set up in the Province of Ontario in the form of a Crown corporation or a holding company, I believe has potential. It would act as a guarantee for the fruit grower as a means of disposing of his surplus crop and as an insurance policy for the people of Ontario in case of shortage due to crop failure or in the case of a national disaster in the province—as an example, floods and drought.

Surplus crops are a constant worry to the farmer, not knowing if he will be able to sell them or just lose his investment by letting a surplus go to waste. In 1971, the fruit grower was faced with large surplus crops due to the lack of labour and processing facilities during the peak harvest.

If the government had a food bank set up with suitable storage facilities, such as a fast-frozen food plant, it could relieve some of the farmer's burden by buying up his surplus. This alone would create employment.

The harvest season for fruit runs for a short period and if the growers do not sell their crops by then the fruit just rots. For example, in 1971 the growers had an abundant crop.

When there is an over supply of fruit on the market, the government could step in and remove some of the excess fruit off the market and store it until such time as there is a shortage. It then could inject its supply into the market to help regulate the price of goods.

I have discussed this idea with persons who are more knowledgeable than myself and they have suggested that the plan has merit.

A food bank is being tried in the United States in the Mount Morency area by the sour cherry industry. The United States federal government takes the sour cherries off the market where they are in surplus, processes them and then releases them into the market when the market is able to absorb them. This was set up after consultation and agreement with the growers and processors.

Mr. Keith Matthie, secretary manager for the Ontario Crop Growers Marketing Board and secretary manager of the Ontario Tender Fruit Marketing Board, says it's a worthwhile plan in that it is helping an important industry and would be beneficial when the need arises for price regulation or as a result of a natural disaster. If the government has a supply to put into the market when there has been a poor season in the Niagara fruit belt, it could stop foreign processors from charging high prices.

I think this is one of the matters confronting the consumers today in the Province of Ontario—the cost of goods coming in from the United States and perhaps other countries, such as Australia.

The United States also has a grain bank. The government has set up a programme where surplus grains are stored until such a time when they are needed and can be absorbed into the market. The government decides how much grain will be stored at one time and when and how much will be released.

In the area of grain storage, Dr. D. N. Huntley, in the Ministry of Food and Agriculture, stated that starch food like grains can be dried to a level of 10 to 15 per cent moisture content; then they can be stored indefinitely as long as they are kept out of contact with insects.

Also included for indefinite storage are wheats, corn, barley and oats. He also agrees that it should be under government control and, like Mr. Matthie, he feels that it is a good mechanism for price regulation and a good tool to maintain a balance between supply and demand.

Someone should take the initiative in dealing with the problems that face the farmers in the Niagara fruit belt and other areas in the Province of Ontario—particularly Norfolk county and Essex county, I believe—in particular with regard to surplus crops. I suggest it should be the government of Ontario. If no action is taken by the government we can expect higher increases in food products and the consumer must pay for that cost.

Mr. Speaker, it will cost money but it will be government money well spent. It will provide farmers with better marketing, more favourable and stable food costs and a benefit to the consumer. The programme will create new employment but most important it will provide security in food supply to our consumers and be a benefit to all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the amendment put forth by my leader on March 26. I look to the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) to carry that battle further.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, before involving myself in the issues that I want to discuss, I want to express to you some concerns that I've had over the last few days about the onerous job the Speaker has to undertake in the Legislature. I want to convey to you, sir, the feeling I have that, in spite of occasional disagreements we might have, the job which you do is done fairly, impartially—I believe it—and I think that if we, and I include myself, conducted ourselves a little more prudently the job of the Speaker would perhaps be quite a bit easier.

I want, though, to say that it's not entirely the fault of the opposition. There are occasions—one might even be tempted to say many occasions—when it is the remarks of the ministers of the Crown which provoke many of us to the utterances which we occasionally hear in the Legislature. I want to say to you, sir—though you are not here—that in spite of the heated exchanges which we have on occasion, the feeling of this party in general is that you do an excellent job and we are delighted to support you in most instances.

Since February, 1971—since the beginning of the Davis regime—things have not been all that good. I can't help thinking, in looking back over the last two years, that there have been a number of occasions when the Premier (Mr. Davis) must wonder whether the job he inherited was really the job he anticipated getting or whether the job he got was really worth getting.

There have been occasions over the last two years when the antics of his own government and his own government members must have left him with a feeling of despair and a feeling of loneliness. I think at times he must have worried about the outcome of the public's view of his government.

We have seen in the last two years the departure of two of his most able opponents in the leadership race. We've seen the hon. Allan Lawrence make his way to Ottawa where he now claims that he ought to have the right to know and he claims it rather loudly. The statements we hear from Allan Lawrence now that he is in Ottawa are considerably different from the statements we heard from the same gentleman when he was here in the Legislature representing St. George.

He now seems to have a much more inquiring mind. He now seems to have a much more liberal attitude.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): The member should be careful how he phrases that.

Mr. Deans: He now seems to recognize that government's responsibility goes a little further than he thought it did while he sat in the government benches. I'm sure that in fact the move to Ottawa was not unwelcome to the Premier. I'm sure he got a little tired of peeking over his shoulder at the member for St. George to make sure he wasn't at that point slipping a knife between his ribs.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I don't think he worried about that. He had a pretty big bodyguard.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was the least of my worries.

Mr. Singer: Right.

Mr. Deans: We also saw the demise of the second closest. We saw the demise of the hon. member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough).

Hon. Mr. Davis: Don't count on it.

Mr. Deans: I am not counting on it, but I can't help thinking that the position he now has, one of mute testimony to the government's failures, is probably more adequate and more apt than the one which he had before, in which he appeared to be getting the government into more and more hot water the more he spoke.

We also saw the disappearance of Mr. MacNaughton, who I suspect was much stronger in the cabinet than perhaps many of us on this side of the Legislature recognized from time to time. In fact, I suspect that one of the great difficulties the Premier is going to have over the next two or three years will be replacing Mr. MacNaughton.

I think that during the time he was here, while he may not have appeared to wield a very big stick at times, he obviously did, because there's been nothing but chaos in the department since he left. I think his successor leaves a lot to be desired in his department and the way in which he carries out his responsibilities in the department which he presently has.

I can't help remembering the good old days—and that sounds kind of funny for someone of 5½ years' experience. I think back on the days of the former Premier when the very word "garbage" immediately brought to mind the present Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr). Or before the orders of the day when we could hardly wait for the now Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) to get up and proclaim whatever day of freedom it happened to be in some obscure little part of the world. We always waited for that testimony, which we got on every single day before the orders of the day when the now Solicitor General was the Provincial Secretary.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Will the member name one "obscure part of the world."

Mr. Deans: Many of the places were very obscure. We waited with bated breath—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Let him name one obscure part of the world.

Mr. Deans: —for him to rise to his feet and inform us of the liberation day—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Here we go again!

Mr. Deans: —in whatever part of the world he happened to have read about at that particular moment.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Will the member name one obscure place? Let him ask his friends to the left.

Mr. Deans: Lots of us wondered at times whether he was making those places up. We often used to wonder whether he was simply conjuring them up in his mind as he went along.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Let him name one.

Mr. Deans: On occasion we found it amusing, but always interesting.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That's the line the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) used to use, but he wised up.

Mr. Deans: I must say that in spite of the fact that we were, perhaps, amused by him from time to time, we miss those little things.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I thought he was asleep.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: I would like to ask the Premier to give that responsibility back to the Solicitor General so that he can take part in the proceedings of the House again; so that he can involve himself in the day-to-day activities; so that he has something useful to do with his time instead of sitting reading.

I can even remember that very funny day in the Legislature when the now Solicitor General got up to defend the new policy, of the Liquor Licence Board I believe it was. He was pointing out that yes, indeed, they were considering moving to plastic bottles for liquor, even though in fact there had never been any such suggestion made! But he couldn't think of an appropriate answer to the question because he hadn't heard the question.

Or the day when he was sitting here—whatever he was doing, I am not too sure—somebody leaned back and said: "You'd better answer that." He got to his feet and he'd forgotten the question period was over.

We miss those little exchanges in the House which always made the place more pleasant and more human. If possible, I'd like to see the minister get involved again; it would be entertaining, to say the least.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): That's not a caucus view!

Mr. MacDonald: We have great flexibility in our personal views.

Mr. Deans: This new government has had a lot of problems over the last two years, particularly over the last 1½ years. We have seen the members flounder a bit; we've seen them make fools of themselves a bit. I often wonder just what the public really thinks about the government of Ontario.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): The last election showed what the people thought.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): That was a year and a half ago.

Mr. Deans: I wonder if the public really remembers what has gone on in the Province of Ontario over the course of the last 1½ years. I want to help the public recollect some of the things that have, in fact, happened. In the process, I suppose, those of the members who are interested can share some of these little things with me.

I wonder how many of the public remember, for example, the exchange in the House over the Premier's flight down to the United States with his family; and his standing in his place and saying, well, that was the job of the Premier. After all, he was on duty 24 hours a day. It was his prerogative to take his family anywhere he pleased and to do it at public expense.

Do they remember the Provincial Secretary for Resources and Development (Mr. Lawrence) and his flight? And I'm still waiting to hear the results of the provincial secretary's trip to Cuba. I'm interested to find out exactly what in fact the provincial secretary found in Cuba, other than that the Cuban officials cut sugar cane on their week off.

In fact, I think the public, in looking over those two tiny things, might begin to wonder whether this government is as concerned about finances and expenditures as it says it is.

Perhaps they can remember—I'm sure everyone in the House can remember—the $6,000 automobile ordered by the Attorney General (Mr. Bales). It was invoiced in March 1971 but wasn't received until April 1971. In fact, it wasn't even invoiced properly and he didn't get it until June, 1971. In fact, the Attorney General's department seemed to be doing a bit of fancy footwork in trying to get the appropriation stretched over the extra period of time in order to use it up.

Or does the public recall the falsified certificates in the purchase of 11 cars for the OPP in March 1968, which didn't get paid for until April? Again, there was the invoicing problem of trying to make the appropriation stretch further than it really ought to have stretched, reflecting the tendency within the government to try to spend whatever they had in their appropriation, regardless of whether it was necessary or not.

Do they remember, in fact, all of the episodes that occurred during the very interesting investigation conducted by the public accounts committee?

I often wonder, as I think back over the last two years, whether the public can remember the hon. member for Kent, when he was in the Department of Municipal Affairs, spending about $38,000 just to refurbish his office?

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): The member for Chatham-Kent—Chatham-Kent!

An hon. member: How many dollars?

Mr. Deans: Thirty-eight thousand dollars.

An hon. member: It was $58,000.

Mr. Deans: Well, $58,000. That came out later. But the problem was not so much that he spent the money, which in itself was wrong, but that he didn't even have it charged to the proper departments; he didn't even charge it to the proper appropriations; and he ended up getting caught by the public accounts.

One wonders whether, in the whole process of government, there isn't just a tiny wee hint of graft—not a lot—in the way in which tenders are handled within the government? There was the purchase by the Department of Municipal Affairs of 35,000 binders in December 1970. It was authorized to make the purchase from one company, Office Specialty Ltd., but for some reason or another, perhaps because of a little far-out connection between one of the staff of the department and a gentleman who worked for Cambrian Stationery, at the last moment the whole thing was switched over to Cambrian Stationery, and the $95,000 was spent there instead of with the lowest tenderer.

Would the public be interested in recalling the four senior executives of the Department of Municipal Affairs who took a trip to New York at Olivetti's expense, and subsequently purchased the entire stock of the Olivetti warehouse here for about $100,000? In fact, they bought $254,000 worth of stock, but at that point they bought $100,000 worth from the warehouse, which they didn't even need and had no use for. I wonder if the public can recall that exchange in the Legislature, or the other things that have occurred in the mishandling of public funds.

I think the public might have a rather jaundiced view of the actions of the government if these things were to be brought to their attention again just so that they would be up to date on what is going on.

I wouldn't want to resurrect these kind of things too often, but I think it only fair that once in a while you remind the public of the kind of government that is in the Province of Ontario; and wonder whether maybe the Premier is even yet a little embarrassed over the involvement of the Attorney General and his friends in the purchase of the farmland out there by the Pickering site? Whether or not there is still a little tinge of embarrassment in the government that here was a minister of the Crown sitting in on the decision-making of the government in terms of what ought to be done in the area of Pickering, in the development of a new municipality, and here is this selfsame gentleman who has entered into a partnership of a sort and purchased rather extensive tracts of land for future retirement purposes?

Now the Attorney General, of course, did not act the same way as the member for Chatham-Kent when he was found out. The Attorney General donated the money to charity, as I recall. But that is really not the question. The question is whether or not you can have confidence in a government that doesn't see what is wrong with that kind of an operation. Or in the case of the member for Chatham-Kent, whether the public might be interested in thinking through again the whole episode which brought about his removal from the second or the third seat over to the last seat in the row, simply because he got involved in the approval of the plans—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): He got caught.

Mr. Deans: Yes, he not only got caught, he got involved in the approval of plans which in fact returned to him some personal gain.

Nobody suggests for a moment that he did this intentionally, but the fact of the matter is that a minister of the Crown has to be trusted implicitly. There can be no hint of this kind of undertaking by any minister of the Crown, and the fact of the matter is there should be no hint of it. Any minister who does engage in matters which reflect badly on the government has an obligation, not to make a donation to charity, not to simply move over to another seat, but to resign, to resign permanently, so that there will be no opportunity for the public to take a view of the government that is other than the most honourable view possible.

Or perhaps we might consider the provincial Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) in the provision of grants for himself. Members recall his decision to allocate to himself grants which, by our own admission are available to other people in the Province of Ontario; but one wonders whether it is right for any minister to ask any grant to himself, whether it is proper for any minister to do that kind of thing?

Or whether the public might have second thoughts about the appropriateness of the government's receipt of some $50,000 from Fidinam; whether in fact there isn't something wrong with a government that enters into contracts with a company and ends up receiving substantial donations from that company which, at least on the surface, appear to have been considered to be payment for favours rendered; whether the public might not wonder whether this is the kind of government they want governing them in the Province of Ontario?

I can't help thinking, and I was just thinking about it a little earlier this evening; I thought of my colleague, the member for York South, and the long time he spent in trying to bring to light the whole episode of the Melchers case and what really happened in the Melchers case; where the money finally came from that James McDowell received in the final analysis. I wonder what exactly did happen in the final analysis in that particular case, which had dragged on, waiting for some considerable time to go to court?

When you look at the government record—and this is only looking at the personal record of the government; this has nothing to do with the legislation which it has introduced, which I want to deal with in a minute or two—when you look at the government record you can't help wondering whether the people of Ontario have misplaced their trust; whether in fact the people in whom they have placed their trust have warranted that kind of trust?

Whether, for example, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) is right in hiring Mr. T. S. Jones, the vice-president of Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills Ltd., and Dryden Paper Co., as the chairman of the minister's new committee; whether that is an appropriate appointment at this time, recognizing the record of that company in the whole area of mercury pollution?

Or whether the government's attitude toward the reacquisition of the sand dunes which they gave away—which they gave away—whether the government's attitude toward the reacquisition is adequate?

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox): That is not so!

Mr. Lewis: Certainly it's so!

Mr. Deans: Whether it's proper to assess the value of those sand dunes at other than the value which was placed on them by the government and the company involved at the time that the sale was made?

Mr. Lewis: What about the profit made from it since? Why should we pay them any money on the profit they've made—all the profit they've made?

Mr. Deans: Surely if those sand dunes were worth a dollar a year for 75 years when they were allocated to that company, they're worth only a dollar a year now. And surely we, in the Province of Ontario, have the right to claim back from that company whatever was lost by way of sand taken out, minus whatever costs they put into it. And surely we have no need to go through this ridiculous charade of the Expropriation Act in order to determine a fair price, when in fact a fair price was determined some years ago in the matter of the signing of the lease.

Surely there is a fair price already established—that price was recognized by that company and this government. And a dollar a year is a fair price—and that's the compensation that should be paid.

Or whether the people—looking at those things and perhaps looking a little further—have a kind of confidence in the government when they consider the goings on in the Workmen's Compensation Board and the inquiry that took place; and the minister's necessity to appoint a committee to investigate the entire operation of the Workmen's Compensation Board? Whether the public, in looking at that together with the other things, doesn't have some serious reservations about this government's right to continue in office?

Whether the people of the province don't have some serious reservations about this government's commitment to providing the kind of solid, trustworthy government that you need to have in a province like this? There was a lot said at the Workmen's Compensation Board hearings, and much of it was not substantiated—but there are certain things that came through loud and clear.

One was that there was certainly an assessment against one of the major automobile manufacturers which was dropped by the Workmen's Compensation Board. And the investigation showed conclusively that there was no appreciable change in the safety conditions of the plant; that the internal operations of the Workmen's Compensation Board were slipshod; that there had been a deal arranged for the purchase of a car by the person making the final decision.

I expected, and I think every member of this caucus expected, that this government would have acted to remove that person from office since his competence was obviously in question; not only in question, but he had in fact been proven incompetent.

And yet, what happened? Absolutely nothing! Or was there any reprimand? Was there any reprimand about the attendance of one Bruce Jarvis Legge, the Commander of the Central Militia in the area, the past president of the Royal Canadian Military Institute and of the Empire Club of Canada, when he was accused of spending far too much time on military matters away from the Compensation Board and when the investigation proved conclusively that he had failed to sit in on WCB matters an adequate number of times? Was there any action taken by this government in that regard? No! Absolutely nothing! There was nothing done.

Even though the investigation had been conducted, and even though that investigation showed that the chairman of the board had not been attending to his duties full time, but he had in fact been devoting a considerable period of his time to matters other than those matters which required his full time attention at the Workmen's Compensation Board—primarily, military matters.

And I suggest that this reflects on this government, and this government's right to govern. All of these things reflect on it, because it shows an inability of this government to understand what it is that worries the people out there. What it is that worries the Workmen's Compensation Board recipient when he can't get a hearing, or when he can't get an answer; and the chairman of the board is tripping along in Australia, or tripping along in Japan, or having a nice time down in the southern states; or maybe just simply out on a military exercise making sure, in fact, that he isn't around the board to do the job that he's being paid to do.

And then we go from that to the whole matter of the Ministry of Health and the recent episodes in the Ministry of Health.

You can't help wondering about the adequacy of the present minister (Mr. Potter), when you take a look at the kind of allegations made by Dr. Kinloch; when you consider what was said by Dr. Kinloch and never refuted by this government about the reasons why he was fired; and when you consider the sense of commitment that Dr. Kinloch had shown in the department in terms of coming to grips with the escalating costs of medical services in the Province of Ontario. Yet we have the minister still sitting in his place and Dr. Kinloch far gone—removed entirely.

Here is a civil servant who had the public interest at heart, who wasn't afraid to come out and to make the kinds of statements that every civil servant in the Province of Ontario should be making when he knows that the matters of this province are not being properly dealt with. Yet we find the minister dealing so harshly with this employee, and this employee who is a senior civil servant being removed from his office.

We thought in the first instance that maybe the Kinloch affair was the first and the last, but now we find that the status of Dr. McNally is in question. Here is another civil servant who has worked day and night to establish the kind of ambulance service in the Province of Ontario that is acceptable and accepted throughout the province. He has gained the respect of the many diverse ambulance services which were available and were doing in some instances a good job and in some instances somewhat less of a good job. He has been able to weld together the kind of overall protection, at least through southern Ontario at this point, that was so necessary.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health for some reason which he fails to explain to the House, decides to remove him over all of the objections of all of the ambulance operators.

You seriously wonder whether, if the public reviewed those things, if they thought about the goings on in the Ministry of Health, if they went back through the land deals of the Attorney General and the former Minister of Municipal Affairs, if they considered the Fidinam affair, if they went back through all of the inadequacies in handling appropriations of the government departments, if they went through the hints of unfair practices in terms of dealing with tenders, if they took a look at all of these problems and all of the others that have emerged over the last two years since the Premier won the leadership of the Conservative Party, they really would have the kind of confidence in this government that the government of the Province of Ontario must have in order to pursue the policies that have to be pursued?

I can't help thinking that the scandals and near scandals that occurred in this government would be sufficient to rock the faith of any Conservative. I don't mind telling you in the confines of this chamber that I have had quite a number of Conservatives come to me and say to me: "You know I don't vote NDP"—this is them speaking—"but Ian I just don't trust that government any more."

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): In the peninsula!

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): But the member's first name, Ian?

Mr. Deans: They come to me and say that with scandal after scandal, with the mismanagement of public funds, with the inability of this government to respond to the needs of the people of the Province of Ontario—

Mr. Laughren: And their failure in the north.

Mr. Deans: —they just don't trust them any more.

An hon. member: Did they write the member's speech?

Mr. Deans: They say they're beginning to feel a sense of alienation from the government. The one they had under John Robarts was at least approachable. They are beginning now to think that maybe they can't get to the government any more to talk about their problems. Maybe there's not the kind of openness there used to be. These are Conservatives speaking. These are Conservatives speaking in Beamsville—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Where?

Mr. Deans: —and in Grimsby and Smithville.

Mr. Lewis: In Beamsville, in Smithville, in Grimsby; in Lincoln in short.

Mr. Deans: These are Conservatives speaking in St. Catharines.

Mr. Lewis: Mostly in Lincoln.

Mr. Deans: It's just incredible where you get these voices from. I travel a long distance out to Hamilton West and I hear people saying to me: "Boy, we thought that fellow there that we elected—what's his name was going to do a good job. But you know something, since he got appointed to the cabinet he's forgotten us. We have to call you, Ian, to get things done."

An hon. member: Tell us more about the rest.

Mr. Deans: They say he has just become like the rest of the cabinet ministers. They just don't seem to care any more.

That's the attitude that's beginning to be felt throughout the Province of Ontario. These aren't New Democrats; my goodness, no! These people are dyed-in-the-wool Conservatives.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member can count on his right hand the NDP supporters in Beamsville.

Mr. Lewis: I met with 50 farmers in Beamsville on Sunday who don't like the member for Lincoln very much as a member of that cabinet. They are all up in arms, all 50.

Hon. Mr. Welch: All members of the same family?

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. Foulds: Shades of William Lyon Mackenzie.

Mr. Lewis: It's all coming crumbling down, the little dynasty.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Scarborough West doesn't like its member too much.

Mr. Deans: These are Conservatives. If I were to tell the minister the names of the people I am thinking about he would be shocked. I won't do that. But I'm telling him that if I were to tell him, if I were to name the Conservatives in the peninsula who have come to me and said: "That's it, no more. I won't vote for them ever again."

Mr. Lewis: That's right. One of them starts with a "W".

An hon. member: Time after time!

Mr. Deans: One of them starts with an "R". There is no question that the people in the Province of Ontario have had it. They are fed up. I have got to tell the members that, it is not all that bad. The Premier still draws big crowds. I have got to give him credit. Let me say, when did members last see—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: Wait a minute! When did members last see so many old age pensioners on the front steps of the Parliament Buildings? When did they last see so many Workmen's Compensation Board recipients on the front steps of the Parliament Buildings? When did they last see so many mothers' allowance recipients on the front steps of the Parliament Buildings? This Premier draws big crowds!

He draws big crowds to Queen's Park and they are all coming down here to complain about the selfsame thing. They are coming to complain about this government's inability to understand the problems of the people of the Province of Ontario. They are coming down to complain of the unresponsiveness, the egotistical attitude and the absolute detachment of the government from the day-to-day problems of the people.

I can remember during the days of John Robarts—I have got to give him credit—one never saw John Robarts drawing those kinds of crowds.

An hon. member: The streets were safe.

Mr. Deans: One could walk outside any time. We never needed the OPP here.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The demonstration the other day looked like nothing.

Mr. Deans: I have to tell the Premier, Mr. Speaker, that if he set out two years ago to involve the public in government, he has succeeded. They are more involved on the front steps of the Parliament Buildings than they have ever been in the history of the government of the Province of Ontario. There are more people here in the Parliament Buildings of the Province of Ontario at any given time than there has ever been, and they are all here to complain. They are all here to complain, every single one! I'll tell members the kinds of things they are here to complain about.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): If the NDP take over, they will have guards at the door.

Mr. Martel: They are there now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Laughren: We will use a screening device to keep the minister out.

Mr. Deans: I want to tell the House I am glad the Minister of Revenue raised that, because it was a point I had almost forgotten. The other thing that always worried me when those poor old people had to trudge down here in the middle of the winter to beg the Premier to give them a hand, was what did we have? We had hundreds of OPP standing outside, keeping them out!

Let the members think about it. Do they know the government had Ontario Provincial Police standing on the front steps of the Parliament Buildings keeping those poor old people out in the cold?

Mr. Foulds: One of them was Norris Whitney.

Mr. Deans: One can't help wondering—but anyway one might excuse the government for some of these things. One might excuse the scandals. One might excuse them for the mismanagement. One might excuse them for refusing to be open and responsive. One might excuse them for failing to meet the people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Wentworth will never make it that way.

Mr. Deans: One might—but I am going to tell members there are certain things that the government cannot be excused over.

There is no excuse for the lack of action on the part of this government in dealing with escalating costs in the Province of Ontario. There is no excuse.

There is no reason this government couldn't have taken action to counteract escalating costs in the Province of Ontario. For years we have been asking the government of this province to bring in some kind of price review. We have asked over and over again, and the fact of the matter is that the government has sat back and done absolutely nothing.

Not only have they refused to deal with the inadequate income levels of the old age pensioners; not only have they refused to deal with the inadequate income levels of the Workmen's Compensation Board recipients; not only have they refused to deal with the inadequate income levels of the mother's allowance recipients, the general welfare assistance recipients; not only have they refused to bring the minimum wage up to a standard that will allow the people in the Province of Ontario to live with dignity; but they have then refused to deal with the escalating cost which is causing the tremendous price squeeze on those people.

I don't honestly know what the government has done in the last two years. I have been looking through all of the headlines and all of the proposed actions of the government of the Province of Ontario, and I can truthfully say that in the areas which most concern the people of this province, Mr. Speaker, there has been absolutely no action.

A lot of headlines. A lot of vague, veiled promises. But no action.

We in this province have been suffering considerably from the increased cost of living. The increased cost of living has forced many of those on fixed incomes to have to do without the necessities of life simply in order to survive. They have had to cut back on food. They have had to live in inadequate shelter, simply because this government has failed to recognize its responsibilities in providing for those on fixed incomes.

What has been done by the government to even investigate the rising costs?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Nothing!

Mr. Deans: What has been done by this government to even try to bring into line the exorbitant profits that are being made in the Province of Ontario?

Mr. Cassidy: Nothing!

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): They don't care!

Mr. Deans: What has been done by this government to even try to reapportion the tax burden in a more adequate and sensible way?

Some hon. members: Nothing!

Mr. Deans: And when you take a look you can't help feeling, as you read the headlines in the newspapers: "After-Tax Corporate Profits Up More Than 24 per cent in a Year." And yet the Workmen's Compensation Board pension recipients can't get an increase. Or they give a totally inadequate increase to the mother's allowance recipients; or they raise the minimum wage to $1.85.

Mr. Martel: That was a disgraceful exhibition.

Mr. Deans: Weston's profits were up 23 per cent. But what has the government done for the people of the Province of Ontario? What have they done to try to recapture some of this wealth that is obviously around the province and could be used to ease the burden on many of the people on fixed incomes? When you take a look at Dominion Stores—and it is interesting, because Dominion Stores are doing a lot of advertising these days—you find that year after year they are showing profits before taxes in excess of $20 million, year after year.

Mr. Singer: The day of the automobile is over.

Mr. Deans: And you find that the costs in the food areas, the costs in the health and personal care areas, in the recreation areas, are escalating to a point where the people of this province cannot afford to buy what they require on the fixed incomes that are established by this government. What about the cost of housing? My colleague from High Park (Mr. Shulman) raised only last week the inexcusable increases in the cost of housing in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Where is that colleague?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Is he going to be in for the vote?

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): He is delivering.

Mr. Deans: What has this government done to try to provide low cost housing? I don't mean housing for rent. I am talking about housing that is available for people to purchase. What has been done by this government?

Mr. Singer: Nothing; resign!

Mr. Deans: What has been done by this government, in actual fact, to provide the kind of low cost housing, even for people in the middle income groups? We have reached the point in the Province of Ontario where even at $10,000 a year it is impossible for a young couple starting out to even dream of owning a home.

You take a look at the number of homes that have been built in the Province of Ontario and you find the grand headlines of the 1971 budget, which showed some millions of dollars going to be spent on housing, have all gone puff into the air; that in fact the claims of this government in the period immediately prior to the last election, when they were desperately seeking votes in the Province of Ontario, never materialized. The housing needs in Metropolitan Toronto and in other centres across this province have escalated to the point where this government has failed to even live up to its promises and has created in those areas of the province the kind of housing shortages which are forcing people to live in ghettos. This is what is happening in the Province of Ontario.

And what is Ontario Housing Corp.'s answer to this? It goes out and builds the kind of barrack-like housing developments that in themselves create more problems than they solve. It goes out and develops the barrack-like, row-upon-row of housing developments that can be identified as Ontario Housing low-income housing from 10 miles away. And it raises the ire of every single citizen who lives in that area because those people know from bitter experience that you can't crowd that many people into one small area and expect the area to grow normally without providing additional services and this government has failed to provide those services.

What's happened in the area of senior citizen housing? The government claims that it has done more in senior citizen housing than any other province—probably more than all the other provinces combined. The unfortunate part is that it has more senior citizens; it has more people in the Province of Ontario. And it has more wealth in the Province of Ontario and it ought to be able to develop the kind of housing programmes right across this province that will ensure that no senior citizen need be paying $100 out of their income of $130 simply to survive—paying that much for rent.

This government could have implemented in years gone by an income supplement programme for senior citizens until such time as they were able to build the housing required; but it failed. And it failed not because it wasn't possible; it failed because of a lack of desire, because of a lack of concern—and that is what worries the people of the province. That's why the people of Lincoln, who previously voted Conservative, are now telling me they are not voting Conservative again.

That's why the people in Lincoln who previously voted for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development are telling me they no longer have faith in the government. It has nothing to do with the Provincial Secretary personally; they no longer have faith in the government.

They don't feel the government is responsive to their need. They don't feel that the government is prepared to go out on a limb a little bit and to try to provide some kind of basic income level for the senior citizens of the province—the people who built the province, the people who by their effort have provided this province with whatever it has today.

Then you turn from those people who were standing on the steps of the Parliament Building not a month ago and you consider the numbers of mother's allowance recipients who wandered through the halls immediately prior to Christmas and who were asking, begging, for an increase prior to Christmas. I think there is nothing more degrading than to have women forced to come into this Parliament Building and get down on their knees before the Premier of Ontario and beg him, beg him to assist them over Christmas.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What a Christmas that was.

Mr. Renwick: The Premier has got powerful support tonight.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: How is the Premier coming along with his introductory remarks?

Mr. Deans: And what happened in that instance is well known to the government.

Mr. Renwick: It is a devastating attack on the government; only the Premier can withstand it.

Mr. Deans: It wasn't a matter of providing more income for those people, it was simply that the government by its change in its rental rebate programme had eliminated a portion of their income immediately prior to Christmas; money they had been counting on and that they needed.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I remember that.

Mr. Deans: This government knew that full well. It's not the fact of the money; it's the fact that this government having had this brought to its attention was totally inadequate; they failed to comprehend the kind of hardship involved. It finally forced those people to have the kind of Christmas that Scrooge in "A Christmas Carol" is depicted as forcing on his people.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: That never happened when the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan) was Treasurer.

Mr. Renwick: No sir, that was a sunshine budget.

Mr. Deans: I can tell the House the people of this province were not happy.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They didn't have deficits in those days.

Mr. Deans: And then, in January, the government finally decided to grant an increase, and I'm going to tell the House what an increase it was.

I don't know how the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Brunelle) had the nerve to stand up in the Legislature and announce that as being an increase—recognizing that it had been more than two years since the previous increase, that what he had given wasn't even enough to meet the increase in the cost of living, and that what this government had done was to say to those people: "You no longer count in the stream of things in the Province of Ontario. If you can't make it on your own, don't come to us. We can't help you."

Oh, they can help other people with grants. They can make all kinds of $50 million mistakes in the Ministry of Health. They can make all kinds of errors in the way in which they calculate their appropriations. But they can't help the people in the Province of Ontario who need help the most.

It is not as if the government didn't know these things were going on; that no one had brought them to its attention and maybe it could be excused. The fact of the matter is we had people in this province—let me just tell the members about a lady; let me tell them about a lady who, after she had paid her rent, purchased food and had paid for hydro and the essentials in her home, without any spending money, without anything to provide for her children in addition to the necessities, out of her budget had a grand total left of $36 a year to provide for all the additional things that every member of this Legislature likes to provide for his or her family.

People like her came to the government and said: "We're being left with 10 or 15 cents on a daily basis and we can't allow our children to involve themselves in the normal day-to-day activities that every other child in their school enjoys—such as when the school is travelling to see the Premier smiling, or when the school is travelling to the Science Centre to see the Science Centre or coming down here to see the museum; my child can't go because I can't afford the $1.50 or the $2 required. My child comes home and says: 'Look, I would like to play hockey with the rest of the kids on the street'; but that child can't play because I only have 15 or 20 cents left over out of the budget that was established by the Province of Ontario and I can't provide even the necessities in order for the kid to take part." Then it begins to hurt.

There is no provision in Community and Social Services that can take care of those kinds of things. There is no opportunity for those women who have suffered considerably.

The Premier may say that, for some of them, they were partly responsible for the situation that they were in. But the one thing that we must never forget is that if they were responsible or the husbands were responsible, the one group of people who were not responsible in any sense is the children in the family.

If for no other reason than to provide for them, we have to make sure that there is an adequate income coming into every household in the Province of Ontario to ensure that those children will be able to grow up with at least the normal things that every child should be able to enjoy in the most affluent society in this hemisphere.

This is what worries me, because when these people come to this government, when these people come and document their case—lay it out before the government; show what kinds of incomes they have; show what their fixed costs are and show what they're forced to deprive their children of—the response is absolutely negative. When the government does deal with it, when it finally gets around to dealing with it, it gives the kinds of increases which in fact are an insult to the people involved.

These things are a worry to some of us. Maybe the government members don't care about those kinds of things.

Mr. Renwick: The Premier is worried; I can tell.

Mr. Deans: Maybe the government members don't really care whether or not these people are taken care of. But I happen to feel, as one individual, that I'm prepared to share a little bit more of whatever I've got in order to make sure that there are no children in this province who are being deprived in any sense of anything that can be provided. No cost factor involved is too great to make sure that those children can have at least the same as the other children in the block.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Would the member give up his trips to Nassau?

Mr. Deans: Yes. I'd gladly give it up. Does that answer the question? And I have given up a lot more—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Like the member for High Park.

Mr. Deans: But one can't help wondering, because the government's attitudes toward old age pensioners, workmen's compensation recipients, recipients of mother's allowances and the disabled in the province are vastly different from the government's attitude toward the corporations.

The government's attitude toward the corporations probably is best exemplified by the last budget of the Province of Ontario, which contained some substantial increases in the cost of liquor and beer in the Province of Ontario.

An hon. member: And cigarettes.

Mr. Deans: What worries me—and I don't care about the increase in the cost of liquor and beer—is that this government didn't tell the people of the province that one-third of the increase in the cost was being directed right back to the manufacturers; that this government was using the taxes of the Province of Ontario to increase the already exorbitant profits of the liquor and beer manufacturers in the Province; that the government was so tied in with these enterprises in the Province of Ontario that its attitude toward them was vastly different from its attitude toward the people of the province.

It seems that while others were standing on the front steps of the Parliament Buildings, begging for an audience with the Premier—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: On their knees!

Mr. Deans: —the heads of the various distilleries and breweries didn't have to stand on the front steps.

An hon. member: Oh no!

An hon. member: They snuck in the back door.

Mr. Deans: They didn't have to worry. They knew that all they had to do was pick up the phone and say: "Bill, it's time for an increase. You can hide it, Bill. You don't have to worry. All you have to do is increase the taxes. You'll get two-thirds, we'll get one-third and that will help us along. If you do that—well, Fidinam gave you $50,000—and you never can tell. Just do that for us and we'll be okay."

Mr. Renwick: The days of G. Howard Ferguson are back.

Mr. Deans: I can't help thinking that's how it happens, because I can see no evidence to the contrary. There was no justification for not having changed the arrangement between the distillers and the brewers and the people of the Province of Ontario.

There was no reason for increasing the cost in order to increase the profits of an extremely profitable enterprise in the Province of Ontario. There was no justification.

This government shows its biases by the way it deals with different sectors of the economy, and this particular bias shows that it is prepared to take whatever steps are necessary to shore up the corporate profits while refusing to deal adequately with the incomes of the province.

Then, of course, we have come through a series of meetings over regional government. We have come to a point in this Legislature where it's pretty hard to know who to believe. It's pretty difficult for me to know who it is among the three dealing with regional government—the Premier, the Treasurer (Mr. White) and the parliamentary assistant—that I'm supposed to believe when they are talking about Hamilton, Wentworth and Burlington in regional government.

This is another example of the way in which the government fails to understand the anxieties and concerns of the people of the Province of Ontario. Here we have about half a million people in a geographic area that is going to have its entire future reformed. And here we have people who are asking the Province of Ontario what it is they intend to do; they send their representatives to Queen's Park to meet the Treasurer, who says to them: "What would you say if we had a delay? Would you be able to work it out to come up with something that would be workable?" Immediately, to a man, the corporation of the city of Hamilton said: "Yes." We have reached an impasse in that area brought about by this government's stupidity.

With the kind of shoddy material that the government provided in January of this year to the people of the Hamilton-Wentworth area on the proposal for regional government, how could it expect that there would be any unanimity in the area at all.

Mr. Haggerty: We know they don't want regional government.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: How can it expect unanimity? We have the people coming in.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Renwick: No matter how the member feels we are supposed to sit here and listen.

Mr. Deans: They say to the government, "Here are three proposals. We have three alternatives available to us."

Mr. Haggerty: It is the city of Hamilton, isn't it?

Mr. Deans: The city of Hamilton says, "First of all—"

Mr. Haggerty: Are you really—

Mr. Deans: "—we want two-tier with Burlington included." I am going to talk about that in a moment.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): I think the member shouldn't.

Mr. Deans: The county of Wentworth says, "We want two-tier with Burlington included." Burlington says, "No." The Steele commission report, after having studied the matter fully—and I am not going to read all of these—

Mr. Singer: Read them!

Mr. Cassidy: Read a few of them.

Mr. Deans: I may. After having gone through all—

Mr. Cassidy: Give them some of their own medicine.

Mr. Deans: —of these documents over the course of four years—

Mr. Cassidy: They blew it. They blew it for political reasons; and that's all.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Go and read the Plunkett report.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: After having gone through all of these documents—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Has the member for Ottawa Centre read it?

Mr. Cassidy: Sure, I have. Two weeks ago.

Mr. Deans: Yes, I have read the Plunkett report.

Mr. Cassidy: All of the documents.

Mr. Deans: The Plunkett report, by the way, suggested a Peel and Halton region.

Mr. Foulds: A digest—

Mr. Deans: A Peel and Halton region—

Hon. Mr. Davis: With Burlington included!

Mr. Deans: —And the government didn't even follow that report. What I want to know is why did the government engage—

Mr. Cassidy: The government didn't follow the Plunkett report.

Mr. Renwick: Has the member read the recommendations?

Mr. Deans: Yes, I've read the recommendations.

Mr. Renwick: We have them all here.

Mr. Deans: We have on the one hand the Plunkett report saying Peel and Halton ought to go together; but no, that's not good enough for this government. We have on the other hand the Steele commission report saying that Wentworth, Hamilton and Burlington should go together. That's not good enough for this government! What is it that people have to do? What kind of reports do people—

Hon. Mr. Davis: That isn't what it said.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: —have to provide in order to convince this government that there is a need to establish a bigger region than the region which it is currently putting forward?

Let me get back to what I was going to say.

We have Hamilton saying they would accept two-tier with Burlington included. We have Wentworth saying they will accept two-tier with Burlington included. We have Hamilton saying that, as a second alternative, they will accept single-tier with all of Wentworth. We have Wentworth county saying that as the third alternative, they will accept two-tier with all of Hamilton provided there are arrangements made about adequate representation.

The only other thing they are unanimous about is that they would prefer not to proceed if the government cannot come down with something that can be workable and acceptable to both parties.

It is evident that the government is not going to get consensus on single-tier; and it is evident that it is not going to get consensus on two-tier unless Burlington is included. It is evident from the remarks of the hon. Treasurer last Friday that Burlington isn't going with Hamilton in spite of all of the evidence which is conclusively in favour of it being a part of the region.

The only alternative left, assuming the things which the government says are true—that it requires some kind of consensus in the area; that it requires participation in a more eager sense and doesn't want to drag people kicking and screaming into regional government—the only thing left open to the government is to agree to withhold the introduction of regional government for a short period of time until it can review another alternative. That alternative at this particular point is called the Winnipeg plan.

That may not be workable but there is one thing for sure: Neither of the plans which have been proposed by this government for the area is acceptable. There is no unanimity of thought; there is no opportunity for consensus. At this particular point in time to proceed would be going against what the Treasurer has said; what the Treasurer's predecessor said; and what his predecessor said about community acceptance.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: What about what the parliamentary assistant said?

Mr. Deans: We had the Treasurer. He sat down with Hamilton and he told them: "It seems as if it's going to be tough to get consensus. It looks as if we won't get one."

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Was that the meeting they asked the member to attend?

Mr. Deans: That was the meeting that I asked to attend because I was told it was on.

He said: "What would you say if we gave you, say, two years? Do you think you could sort it out?" They agreed. He put the same thing—if I read the press reports correctly—to Wentworth county, and they said that provided there was no annexation in the interim period, they also could agree to a period in which they might be able to work out some alternative programme. Yet when the question was asked of the Premier, whether or not he would consider such a delay, he said "no".

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deans: Now, there's something drastically wrong with the way in which this government operates.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I just don't want any misunderstanding. If the hon. member—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Wait, wait!

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would just like the hon. member to be accurate. That is not, in fact, what was said. I will just leave it very simply at that.

Mr. Foulds: That is not a point of order. If the hon. member disagrees, he can say so.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a point of order. I have been misquoted.

Mr. Cassidy: All right, so there will be a delay. Now is the Premier's chance so there will be a delay.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: That is one of those non points of order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Read it. Read exactly what was said.

Mr. Deans: I am going to be quite frank with the Premier, I'm eager to have him tell us whether or not he is going to accept it, because at this particular point in time the people of the city of Hamilton are planning to travel to Winnipeg to see how their programme works, and I understand that the parliamentary assistant is planning to travel to Winnipeg to see how it works.

Mr. Lewis: Aha, aha, to Mecca itself!

Mr. Deans: I even offered to go along and introduce him so that he wouldn't feel lonely, just to show how much I feel for the situation that he has been thrust into.

But I am going to tell the House that what was said by the Treasurer is vastly different from what was inferred by the Premier when he was asked—vastly different. On top of that, it is considerably different from the press reports of the Premier's statements in Brantford.

It is very difficult for the people in the area to have any sense of what's likely to occur. There is no justification for keeping a veil of secrecy around the plans. If the government doesn't intend to have any kind of delay in the implementation; say so, just say so. But, if the government feels that it is going to delay it, then say so again. It should say that it will delay it for a short period of time.

We all understand regional government is going to come into the area, and we all agree with the government that there is a need to have a form of regional government. But one of the most important criteria, as established by the hon. member from Chatham-Kent was community acceptance. And there is no community acceptance in the area.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Certainly sounds like the member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr. Deans: There is no community acceptance. Now if the government is not going to put Burlington in with the Hamilton-Wentworth region—and I am going to tell the House that there is adequate reason to believe that it should be in; there is within this report, and just for the matter of statistics—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: They don't like people who say that.

Mr. Deans: The report shows that 80 per cent of the people who live in Burlington and who work—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member doesn't listen to the people in Burlington.

Mr. Deans: Wait a minute—80 per cent of the people who live in Burlington and who are employed, are employed in the Hamilton-Wentworth-Burlington area. Say 38 per cent of the total work force of Burlington are employed in Burlington; that 42 per cent of the total work force of Burlington are employed in Hamilton—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Oh, that puts a new light on it.

Mr. Deans: —and that only 20 per cent of the total work force of Burlington are employed east of Burlington, and that includes Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Bullbrook: That Provincial Secretary for Justice has a great deal of influence. He really does.

Mr. Deans: And, beyond that, beyond that—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member know how many people in Mississauga are employed in Metropolitan Toronto? It is the same rationale.

Mr. Deans: It doesn't matter. Does the Premier want the rest of it? Does he want the numbers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sorry. I have read it very carefully.

Mr. Deans: He read it carefully, but what was the point of involving these people in drafting this kind of a report, of going in depth into all of the patterns of involvement of all of the people in the Hamilton-Wentworth-Burlington region, if the government, for the sake of political expediency, is simply going to throw it all out the window?

Can it possibly justify setting up something called a region in the county of Halton? Does it honestly believe that the county of Halton meets any of the criteria established either by the Smith committee or by this government?

Mr. Cassidy: Not one, no.

Mr. Deans: Does it honestly believe that the county of Halton in any way provides the kind of criteria that were established by the member for Chatham-Kent or by Charles MacNaughton? Does it believe for one minute that the kinds of things that were set out as being essential for regional government development can be found in the county of Halton?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure it can!

Mr. Deans: Oh come on! Does the Premier say that in honesty? Does he think that it makes any sense to have two totally inadequate regions which will be under severe economic pressure from the large areas beside them between Metropolitan Toronto and Hamilton-Wentworth?

Hon. Mr. Davis: So then there are two cities, Hamilton and Toronto. Is that what the member wants?

Mr. Deans: No, that is not what I am suggesting. What I am saying is that there is a great deal more orientation between Oakville and Mississauga; that Oakville in fact could well go into a region which would be sufficiently large when put together with Mississauga, and when put together with Brampton and Streetsville, that you could have a viable region between Metropolitan—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Caledon, Albion, Bolton?

Mr. Deans: I am not going through all the names. But if you establish one viable, large region between Metropolitan Toronto and metropolitan Burlington—if that is what you want to call it, I don't care—so that they would have a sufficiently large area at one end of the lake, the Hamilton-Wentworth-Burlington area to counterbalance the growth of Metropolitan Toronto; while having a buffer zone between which would in itself be self sufficient; that is how regional government should have been established.

There is nothing in the Halton county area that has changed as a result of the decision which the Premier handed down on that evening, in January at Mohawk College. What the Premier has in fact done is he has just simply said that the county council structure as it presently exists will continue with minor modifications, and that the county of Halton and the county of Peel will continue as they have always done. But in the meantime he has completely disregarded all of the concerns and all of the needs of the people for growth and for development in the whole Hamilton area; and that is the basic problem that confronts him.

Whether the Premier believes it or not—and he can sit and nod or smile or shake his head no, I don't really care—the fact of the matter is there isn't enough viability in the Halton region to sustain it against the kind of economic pressures from the other areas.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear; and that is the point!

Mr. Deans: And there isn't sufficient viability in the Peel region to sustain it against the pressures of Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member has got to be kidding.

Mr. Deans: I am not kidding; I am not kidding at all. The Premier can't sit there and tell me that the area of Peel—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The government just turned it over to the developers and made it an extension of Metro; that is what the Premier's regional government has done. He has just walked right into this and it is crumbling around his ears and he can't pull himself out of it. He can't even make an announcement of what his intentions are.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is that in Peel and Halton?

Mr. Lewis: Yes. Because the Premier is going to have to succumb on that too.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Wentworth has the floor. Please proceed.

Mr. Deans: All I say to the Premier is this, that with the kinds of pressure that develops in an area the size of Metropolitan Toronto, you have to have a tremendous diversity of economic opportunity in the area immediately adjacent to it; and you can't have that with Peel only. And you can't have an area like Burlington and Halton sufficiently viable when weighed up against the tremendous pressures which will be exerted by the Hamilton-Wentworth region.

Now why doesn't the government use common sense. Why doesn't it take the Burlington-Halton region and take out of it—I am not absolutely sure about the northern portion; I recognize that there may be some problems there—but why doesn't the government combine the area of Burlington-Halton to the Oakville line with the Hamilton-Wentworth region, and create a region sufficiently large to counterbalance the Metropolitan Toronto area?

In that region the government is providing every possible thing that could be required in order to make the Hamilton-Wentworth area viable. And I don't care whether the politicians in Burlington have threatened the Provincial Secretary for Justice or not; I don't care whether George Harrington has threatened him—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier needs a counterbalancing force to the provincial secretary.

Mr. Deans: The fact is that what the government is doing is going to be destructive. The government has moved from what was at one time an acceptable progressive concept of larger areas of administration for purposes of future growth, to a simple transferral to existing county boundaries and the transferral of a few of the responsibilities to the county council level. Well it was said some years ago, and it's worth repeating, that the county council system is out of date.

Mr. Haggerty: The member doesn't mean that?

Mr. Deans: It didn't work well before, and it isn't going to work any better simply because you transfer some of the responsibilities.

Mr. Haggerty: The member doesn't mean that?

Mr. Deans: I want to turn to one final subject before I close, because it too is a clear indication of this government's inability to deal adequately with the problems that confront the people, just as the problem of regional government is and just as the other questions that I've raised are. I want to talk to you for a moment about this government sitting for 20 years with a report—

Mr. Bullbrook: Ah, the lake levels!

Mr. Deans: Absolutely!

Mr. Bullbrook: Twenty years! The greatest inertia the government ever saw.

Mr. Deans: Sitting for 20 years with a report which, had the recommendations been implemented, would have saved us all of the grief that we've had over the last few months.

Mr. Haggerty: The member was on the municipal council.

Mr. Deans: Now, I want to tell you—I'm going to read parts of it, so you might as well relax—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: I'm going to tell you to begin with—just to set the mood, Mr. Speaker—that about four weeks ago I wrote to the Premier—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why doesn't the member just table the report?

Mr. Deans: —and I said to him—I'm not quoting exactly—that there was—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Deans: I'm going to tell the members that in a minute, too!

I wrote to the Premier and I said to him, "All of the information that I have from the inland waters people indicates that we're going to have severe flooding in the area that I represent. Who in your government is responsible for this aspect of government policy so that I can pursue it?"

Well, I waited two weeks. Then I thought, well, maybe I'd better drop him another note, maybe he didn't get the last one. So I wrote him another and I said to him: "Look, Mr. Premier, I'm awfully sorry to have to write you again. And while it doesn't really affect me directly, I've got some constituents standing up to their knees in water and they would like to hear from you. Who in your government should we contact about this matter?" And I still wait for an answer. I still haven't got one.

Now this, to begin with, is an indication of the—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Join the club!

Mr. Deans: —arrogance and high-handedness of the Premier's office. But ah well, he's a busy man. Maybe he can't answer me.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Well, he's got only 76 people working for him.

An hon. member: He's got 96.

Mr. Deans: But anyway, we then turn away from that, because every one of us who lives on Lake Ontario or on many of the other waterways in the Province of Ontario, was aware that the lake levels were rising, that the rising of the lake levels was going to result inevitably in flooding, that there had been considerable erosion over the last 12 to 18 months, that the people had been holding meetings continuously. I attended a meeting last September at the Beacon Hotel at which my friend from Lincoln was present.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Why doesn't the member go to church and ask God?

Mr. Deans: And that was one—that wasn't even the first of the meetings—that was one of a number of meetings which had been held during last summer to explain to the government that those people were concerned for their properties and that they wondered if there was any action likely to be taken by the government.

Mrs. Campbell: They've got their nerve!

Mr. Deans: Well, they went on. The government was made aware that lake levels were going to reach a point where flooding was going to take place. Nothing happened!

They were told that at the spring breakup there were going to be difficulties. Nothing happened! They were informed that there were going to be severe problems with the first spring storm. Nothing happened!

They were repeatedly told, time after time, by members of the Legislature, by citizens and by the inland waters people who were monitoring the lake levels, that there were likely to be severe problems arise in the lake areas and that it might not be a bad idea to think up a little programme that might be useful in trying to combat this. And nothing happened!

Okay. It all occurred. The lake levels rose just as it was predicted. The spring storms came, just as they were predicted, and then we were faced with the havoc and the wreck.

I don't know whether the Premier has been down by the lake—I don't know whether he has stood beside the people who have lived on that lake for a number of years, many of them living in homes that are not great palatial places. I'm not talking about the fancy mansions on the lakefront, I'm talking about the people who are living in normal, everyday houses; frame houses. People who've lived there for years and who stood and watched while everything they had worked for and everything they had saved for was being broken up, was being flooded out. And when they asked and begged for help it wasn't forthcoming.

Now the policy that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development brought in is totally inadequate. It's not that the money the government is offering is totally inadequate, it's the way in which those people have to get the money that's totally inadequate.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Mr. Deans: There is no way that a municipality can move quickly enough and can set up the kinds of committees required. Recognizing that the local municipal councillors are part-time, there's no way they can turn all of their attention—and that's what's needed at a time like this—to resolving the difficulties.

When the minister announced the 80-20 formula that was going to be available to municipalities for diking and for emergency repair work, I immediately asked him two questions. The first was this: Would he send out a letter to each municipality that he believes will be involved and inform them how they can get the money and what the money is to be used for?

I asked that 10 days ago. Do you know when the letter went out, Mr. Speaker? Do you know? This afternoon. The letter went out this afternoon to the municipalities. I am going to tell you that's pretty slipshod. That's not nearly good enough.

When the people were standing down by the lake yesterday, saying to their local council: "What can we do?" The local council said: "We don't know because we haven't received any word from Queen's Park." That was 10 days ago they were asked to do this.

The second thing I asked was this. I said: "Look, if the minister is going to make an arrangement for an 80-20 split, what possible difference can it make whether that 20 per cent is put up by the municipality or whether it is put up by the individual? If its for emergency repairs, diking, roadway, whatever it is, it shouldn't matter."

And it shouldn't matter. Does the government realize that the kinds of costs that it is now talking about on a dollar for dollar arrangement for repairs to properties that are damaged will be considerably higher after the next spring storm, which will occur within the next week, than the cost the government would have incurred had it made the money available on the 80-20 basis to build the kinds of dikes that are necessary simply to hold back the flood?

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): The member knows that's not true. Look at it in his own area. He knows what happened in his area; he knows what happened in my area.

Mr. Deans: With that interjection I will continue.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is right.

Mr. Deans: The Premier should just listen for a moment, because I don't think he is right.

There are two basic problems. One is the problem of erosion. That's for people who are living higher up on the bank and who in fact are having their homes undermined. That's a very difficult problem to solve and I admit that, but it can be solved, at least partially, at this point.

An hon. member: By moving the houses.

Mr. Deans: Not even by moving the houses.

Mr. Haggerty: They should never have built there in the first place.

Mr. Deans: We'll come to that in a moment too. That problem could be resolved.

But the other and more basic problem for most of the people I am talking about is simply a flooding problem. And what was required in those low areas where it was just a matter of the lake coming in was to build the kinds of thick dikes that would hold the lake back, and to do it before the damage occurred. And that's all I asked for.

All I asked the government to do was to make available sufficient funds so that we could hire some of the unemployed for $1.85, if that's all you could get, so that they could go down with sand and bags and build the kinds of retaining wall or the kinds of dikes that would hold back the flooding. And do you know something? The government failed again.

It failed to recognize the needs of the people of the Province of Ontario. It completely failed to understand that just that action alone would have saved it money in the long run and would have shown the concern of the government of Ontario for the people of the province.

This is why the people in Lincoln are walking around saying that they are not going to vote for the Conservative government again. This is why these rather influential Tories are talking about shafting the Premier and getting him out of here. I'm telling you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. W. Newman: Look, 17,000 sandbags were washed away yesterday and the member knows it.

Mr. Singer: Why did the member for Wentworth wash away all those sandbags?

Mr. W. Newman: Yes, they were washed away. Check it out.

Mr. Deans: Now I want to tell you something, Mr. Speaker. I want to just tell you about Mr. Walter Giles, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Natural Resources, in a quote from today's Globe and Mail. He says he placed some of the blame on lakefront municipalities that have over the years approved building subdivisions on property that should have been designated as floodland.

I am going to transfer that blame because that blame belongs to this government. That blame belongs to them, not to those municipalities. I don't know whether they have read this report, but I am going to suggest to the government to take a look at it, because in the summary of recommendations in this report, it talks about exactly the problem that man was talking about. I will read them all because they are all important, and none of them has been done.

Recommendation No. 1 says there should be a study of the lake currents, so that appropriate action can be taken and so that agreements can be entered into to protect certain areas. It says that there should be changes in the dredging and the beach operations, so that there wouldn't be the taking away of much of the sand, which in fact itself acts as a safeguard against the kind of erosion and the kind of damage that have occurred.

No. 6 says [and I quote]:

Wherever on the shoreline of the Great Lakes in Ontario land is subject to such erosion or inundation as in the judgement of the Ministry of Planning and Development makes it unsuitable for private development, the minister be empowered to restrict or prohibit the use of such land until suitable protective works have been installed.

That was a recommendation made in 1953, and that was a recommendation which this government should have followed. That is a recommendation which, I am sure, those people who are currently studying today's problem will make again. That is a recommendation which, had the government followed it, would have been of great benefit to many of the people who are currently there, because they wouldn't have been able to build there.

Mr. W. Newman: How many?

Mr. Deans: There would have been an adequate opportunity to assess whether or not there had been protective measures taken. Another recommendation was:

Whenever on the shoreline of the Great Lakes in Ontario the use of land is restricted or prohibited because of the threat of erosion or inundation, the municipality, or the valley conservation authority if such has been established in the area in which such land is situated, be empowered to acquire these lands for park, recreation or protective purposes; and that power be given to municipalities and authority to expropriate such lands; and that suitable legislation be provided.

Not only do they need suitable legislation, they need money. There is no point in saying they can buy land. There is no point in saying they can expropriate the land, because they don't have the kind of funding at the municipal level to do that kind of thing.

What we needed was a little bit of action by this government over the last 20 years. But even more than that, recognizing the immediacy of the problem, we needed a little bit of action by this government over the last two years.

There are a lot of places where the blame can be placed and I am placing the immediate blame for some of it—a big portion of the flooding—squarely on the Premier's doorstep, because he had adequate warning. It would have been possible with a very limited expenditure to provide protection for a great many of the people who needed it.

The protection that is being asked for isn't a matter of protecting private property. Where I am talking about I was standing up to my knees in water until 1 o'clock yesterday morning, and I was up again at 4 o'clock trying to get additional help for people so they could sandbag the place. I am telling the government that the protection that it is being asked to provide is protection against the future erosion of the Queen Elizabeth Way, because that's what's going to happen.

There are places along that lakefront where there have been 15 and 20 feet of property taken away just in this one series of storms. If the government doesn't take some action now it will be forced in the future to take action simply to protect the highway. If it continues to erode at the rate it is eroding today that's the next thing that will be under pressure.

The government has a choice. It can either protect the property that presently exists, or it can wait until it goes into a dollar-for-dollar arrangement with the local people to rebuild or to relocate or to provide for damage to their properties; or it can take the steps now to try to stop it where it presently is.

Mr. Laughren: Get the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) to be a one-man task force.

Mr. Deans: I suggest to the government that the last choice is a much more acceptable way to deal with this kind of a problem than either of the other two. I am not going to read this report into the record, obviously, but I want to tell the government that this is good light bedtime reading for them. For goodness sake, we don't need any more studies of Lake Ontario. That study there in itself provides all of the information needed in order to do the job that has to be done but which should be done between now and the month of July when the lake will have risen by another 18 inches at least.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Chatham-Kent): Oh come on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a little hyperbole.

Mr. Deans: All I suggest to my colleagues who are saying, "Come off it," is that on their way home to Welland they drop into the Canada Centre for Inland Waters and check the charts. I looked at the charts; and I am saying that with normal precipitation between now and the end of July, and without any real heat, which they are not predicting, there is a good possibility of an 18-inch increase in the lake level.

I am suggesting that if we don't do diking in those lower areas now, we will inevitably spend many millions of dollars more than we now are prepared to pay those people in compensation. Don't take the risk of doing that. For goodness' sake, go and help them.

The provincial secretary said to me: "You can't hold back Lake Ontario." I want to remind him that they have held back the ocean in Holland for years. And if we can't hold back Lake Ontario, then there is something wrong with the engineering expertise in this government and in this province.

Mr. W. Newman: It's a little different situation.

Mr. Lewis: I hope the members opposite have absorbed this presentation during the last half hour, because it speaks to the problem very eloquently.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the member suggesting the other half was not relevant?

Mr. Lewis: No, I am not. I am suggesting the Premier really listen to this.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would agree.

Mr. Deans: What's wrong with this government is simply that it's not listening. And it is not only not listening to the people who are standing on the steps of the Parliament Buildings, it is not even listening to the people who supported it. That is what is going to cause the government a great deal of grief in the future; the very people upon whom it will be calling for support in the near future are the people who are crying the loudest at this point.

Frankly, I don't want to see the government back there. But by the same token I am not sufficiently selfish to deny those people what they need simply to get this government out of office. I would much prefer that it provided for them and stayed forever, than that it didn't meet their needs and was defeated. And that perhaps is my own personal view.

Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the mood that I think I have established—I hope I have—I want to say to you that this government has in fact failed in many different areas to meet the needs that were established over the last two years. This government has failed miserably to provide any kind of leadership in the Province of Ontario.

Other than by headline and by vague reference, this government has failed to deal with the problems that affect the majority of people in the Province of Ontario. The Throne Speech contains little in the way of innovative programmes and is very much a restatement of the government's policies. It is a restatement that includes, just in passing again, a promise that it is going to save the Niagara Escarpment. This statement in fact was made by the Hon. John Robarts in 1970, and in years prior to that by his predecessors. The fact that the government has said once again that it is going to take steps to save the Escarpment is in fact contained in a statement made by the Hon. John Robarts on May 6, 1970; so it isn't new. He didn't do it then; the Premier hasn't done it since; and I predict he won't do it now.

Mr. Lewis: He certainly won't!

Mr. Deans: That is what's wrong with this government. It doesn't seem to understand that people are getting sick and tired of promises with no action. For that reason I was pleased to second the amendment to the amendment made by my leader, which we believe will provide a greater opportunity in the Province of Ontario for the people who most desperately need assistance, guidance, leadership and financing; in other words, the people who rely to a great extent on the wisdom of the government for their day-to-day operations. We believe that what we have offered is a much more sensible approach to dealing with these problems than what the government has done.

Mr. W. Newman: That was pretty weak.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Before I get into the thrust of my remarks let me, through you, address a comment to the Premier (Mr. Davis). I wonder if the Premier would agree with me that any intelligently-run organization—and I would hope that he would think the Legislature is an intelligently-run organization—would not knock itself out by forcing a sitting to 10 minutes to 2 o'clock in the morning, having started the session earlier at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and having gone through all the shenanigans about committees and non-committees and so on.

So, not by any way of plea or anything else but merely as a word of sanity, could I ask the Premier, through you, sir, if I move the adjournment, would he and his party vote in favour of that motion? The Premier sits and smiles and says "no." All right, fine, let the record—

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I had some discussions with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. F. Nixon) myself. There were discussions earlier; there was an understanding that this debate would take place tonight and would be concluded and part of this was done to accommodate the members of the opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was!

Mr. Singer: So be it, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am certainly in favour of finishing tonight.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, let me say this: I suggest that the way the business of this House is ordered, by the Premier's direction and in his presence, is a matter of ridiculous nonsense and that all of the people of Ontario should be aware of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I suggest to you, sir, that there was no reason this House could not have sat last evening to carry on with the Throne debate as was suggested. I suggest there is absolutely no reason the government of Ontario should expect 117 members to sit here until 2 o'clock or 2:30 or 3 o'clock in the morning—

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Or 4:30.

Mr. Singer:—having commenced their work in the early hours of the day before, and expect any intelligent debate to take place and any intelligent response to come from the government.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): Sit down.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, one must conclude that, in view of the method by which the government carries on, it is waging a programme of attrition and duress against the opposition whereby it wants to stifle, at every possible opportunity, reasonable debate in reasonable hours and in a reasonable manner.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Let me say, sir. The best indication of that approach is the appointment of the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Winkler) as the leader of the House. We had a great debate over the dinner hour on whether his action was venal or just stupid; whether he was able to tell us from day to day and understood what the business of the House was going to be, or whether he was, in fact, playing games. Listen as I might, since this hon. gentleman has been appointed House leader I have never yet been able to figure out from his controverted and convoluted answers to questions about what the order of business might be, what it is actually going to be.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): He knows where we are going. We know where we are going.

Mr. Singer: All right. Mr. Speaker, could I draw to the attention of the hon. member who last interjected that the people of Huron know where the government is going; and the people of St. George know where it is going!

An hon. member: Right down the drain!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Might I ask you, sir—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, might I rise on a point of order?

Mr. Singer: Oh, rise on a point of order.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): He wants to tell the member whether he was venal or stupid.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I would like to raise the point, Mr. Speaker, that last evening at 6 o'clock there was a very minimal number of speakers on the list. It could have been accommodated very easily today.

An hon. member: No, that was this afternoon on the estimates.

An hon. member: What is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It's in regard to the business of the House. I want to say further that at 10:30 tonight it was not the government that asked that the business be continued. We didn't interfere. Had we interfered, we possibly might have had the vote then. We are now accommodating the opposition. Let there be no mistake about that.

An hon. member: At 10:30, we might have had the vote?

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Singer: Has he got a point of order? We will be here a long time, I guess, if this is going to go on. A long time.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the hon. member for Port Arthur would repeat what he was attempting to say. I couldn't hear a word.

Mr. Foulds: According to standing rule 3, extension of House business beyond 10:30 must be made by government motion. There was no government motion at 10:30.

Mr. Speaker: But there was unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, if I may continue.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Go back to Port Arthur.

Mr. Singer: I had hoped, when the hon. Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet rose in his place he would tell us whether he was being a little stupid, but unfortunately that was not his point of order.

What puzzles me, is the kind of nonsense that went on in this House today in contravention of the rules in relation to the estimates of the Justice department. What puzzles me is that notwithstanding the very clear provision of rule 86(d) which provides that the estimates committee cannot sit until after the budget has been introduced, we have this document, which is a very comprehensive document, tabled in the House two days ago—it's two days ago now—which covers expenditures of large sums of money, and that the hon. House leader waited until 6 o'clock to tell those members who were in the House at that point that it was his intention to attempt to proceed with the estimates of the Justice galaxy the following afternoon.

I think that is absolutely and completely unreasonable, arbitrary and stupid, if not venal.

Mr. Lewis: No, no. That was venal.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Irresponsible.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is not correct and the member knows it.

Mr. Singer: And irresponsible, as my colleague from York Centre said.

Now, having done all that, Mr. Speaker; having encouraged the kind of ruckus that took place early this afternoon; having known—I'm not offended; the House leader knew I was not going to be here from the hours of 2 to about 4:30. I told him in the presence of his leader and he heard me yesterday afternoon. He knows I'm a Justice critic for our party.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He also heard the member say we would finish tonight.

An hon. member: It's not tonight; it's tomorrow morning.

Mr. Singer: He attempted to bull this thing through this afternoon. Finally—well, I don't know what great wisdom descended upon his mind or whether he read the rules of the House, but he finally gave way a bit and called off the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr). But that wasn't enough, because downstairs another show was going on. The hon. member for St. George, in her great wisdom—

Mrs. Campbell: St. David.

Mr. Singer: St. David, I'm sorry.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm St. George.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member for St. David (Mrs. Scrivener), in her great wisdom, attempted to carry on estimates of the Attorney General down below while this debate was supposedly taking place upstairs.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Singer: Now, I think that is absolutely inexcusable and indefensible, and I think it's high time that the Premier took a hand and brought some order and intelligence to this House. That's not the end, Mr. Speaker, that's not the end.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member is wrong and he knows it.

An hon. member: They couldn't run a hot dog stand, those people over there.

Mr. Lewis: In St. David's case, it was neither venal nor stupid, just vapid.

Mr. Singer: I accept the interjection from the hon. leader of the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, that's not the end of it. After I returned to the House this afternoon, I went and spoke to the Provincial Secretary for Justice and said: "Could you tell me what is now going to happen? Is it true, as I have had indicated to me by some of my colleagues, that Friday, upstairs, we're going to have you performing, and downstairs the Solicitor General?" He said: "Yes." I then went to the House leader and said: "Is it true what the Provincial Secretary for Justice tells me?" He said: "Oh no."

Mr. Speaker, I don't know whence we get our advice as to what the order of business is going to be.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: If the member listened he would know.

Mr. Singer: Surely, in the presence of the Premier, who has sat here for several hours tonight—which is unusual for him—he can bring some order and intelligence and common sense to the workings of this House.

Surely, it would make sense that when the government brings a package before us of Justice estimates, over which its ministers have laboured many hours, as well as its civil servants, that it can at least extend the courtesy to the members of the opposition that we have a reasonable time to examine what is going on, so that the critics who deal with these subjects can deal with them one by one as they come along, and not play the stupid games directed apparently by the hon. House leader or by the Provincial Secretary for Justice. I don't know who figures these things out that apparently something's going to go on up here in relation to Justice; something is going to go on ordered by the hon. member for St. David; that they are going to split the opposition and ram these estimates through without any opportunity—

Mr. W. Newman: But it won't help the member anyway. He won't know what to do anyway.

Mr. Singer:—for the opposition members to properly present reasoned and sensible and logical criticism.

Mr. Foulds: The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) has crawled out of the depths of his reservoir.

Mr. Singer: Now I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is part and parcel of what is going on. When I look over this new seating plan and I note the responsibility that is assigned to the hon. member for Grey South and that is described in this seating plan as that of Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet, I feel sorry for all of the people of Ontario if he manages the Management Board of Cabinet or chairs it in a way in which he has tried to run the affairs of the House.

Mr. W. Newman: Thank God we have got him.

Mr. Singer: It's complete and absolute chaos.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Best House leader they have ever had.

Mr. Singer: And I would think, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come that the leader, the Premier of the province, should take hold of his colleagues and bring some common sense, some orderliness—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Doesn't sound like the member at all.

Mr. Singer:—and some sanity to the performance in this House.

Mr. Lawlor: Resign.

Mr. Singer: And there is no sanity at all, Mr. Speaker, when we are forced to carry on an important debate like this at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. W. Newman: Why doesn't the member carry on and stop talking?

An hon. member: Carry it on without talking.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Why doesn't the member shut up when he is talking?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Quit playing cheap politics.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Last week it was worthy of the House leader.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Thank you.

Mr. Lawlor: The member for Downsview is very seldom right, but this time he is.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ontario South is not untypical of the arrogant, overbearing, intolerant approach taken by so many government members—not all of them, but so many of them.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: But he can't touch the member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: The fact is that despite trying to attach a label to itself as the government that listens, it doesn't want to listen, it doesn't want to hear a debate, it doesn't want to conduct its business in reasonable and logical fashion, in fairness, within reasonable hours. It doesn't want to hear the kind of criticism that comes forward—but no amount of bulldozing is going to wipe away the message sent to it by the voters of Huron and by the voters of St. George.

Mr. W. Newman: Why doesn't the member say something?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member for Downsview will have everybody sore.

Mr. Singer: Now look, Mr. Speaker, who they ran in those two ridings. Look who they ran. A fellow named Roy McMurtry. Roy McMurtry, tipped by the papers as an obvious cabinet minister and a potential new leader. The big blue machine was going to put him through.

Well, the big blue machine emerged as the big black and blue machine when the whole thing was over. And they didn't put him through anywhere except out of politics.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Through the wringer.

Mr. Singer: And in Huron, who would have expected that that good, comfortable Tory stronghold—30 years in the Tory party; Charlie MacNaughton had held it; no one would ever challenge anything Charlie had said—was ever going to desert the Tory government?

But what happened? They got a fellow-executive assistant I think to Charlie MacNaughton. Did the Premier take him back in government employ since he lost, or is he through too?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not yet.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Not yet! Has Hansard got that? Not yet!

Mr. Singer: Southcott was his name and he was the knight in shining armour. He mounted a white charger and rode around Huron saying: "I might move back if I'm elected." Well, the government didn't think that was too arrogant, but the people of Huron thought it was too arrogant—

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Singer:—and so they sent us the new member from Huron.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Where is he?

Mr. S. B. Handleman (Carleton): Why isn't he here?

Mr. Singer: And I may say, Mr. Speaker—
Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that you have had the opportunity with me of listening to the maiden speeches of the hon. member for St. George and of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Riddell), who took part in this debate; and I'm sure you will agree with me that those were two outstanding speeches and as good as has ever been delivered in this House. And I tell you, sir, that I don't think there can be any doubt that as soon as this government is prepared either to call a general election or to create another by-election opportunity, that the same kind of candidate is going to appear for the Liberal Party and the same kind of result is going to occur.

An hon. member: Which one of the members is ready to try?

Mr. W. Newman: Why doesn't the member for Downsview resign and call a by-election?

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Speaker, lest my good friends on my left feel a little left out, let me say this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: —that since the by-elections have come and gone, one should have a very careful look at the results achieved by the NDP.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Singer: In Huron, I think, they got 10 per cent of the vote, in St. George, 20 per cent of the vote. Their great promises, sounded by the press, of how well they could organize and how strong their candidates were, fell to nothing.

Mr. Stokes: Both those ridings were Tory and they haven't changed.

Mr. Singer: It's had an effect, Mr. Speaker, on their morale.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: We see, hardly as often as we see the Premier—

Mr. Stokes: Both of them were Tory. They haven't changed.

Mr. Singer: —the leader of the NDP. He doesn't seem to like the House in the new atmosphere. We seldom see, Mr. Speaker, too many members occupying the NDP benches. We seldom hear their contributions to debate.

Mr. Foulds: Just 19, not too many.

Mr. Singer: I wonder what has happened to the long, strong voice of the bureau chief of the Globe and Mail who, after three or four days here, wrote such an intelligent assessment of what goes on in this Legislature.

Mr. Stokes: There are more NDP members here right now than there are Liberals. The member can count them.

Mr. Singer: It took him only a few days to realize that the Premier was great; that the NDP were the opposition and that we were absolutely nothing. Well, he has deserted that kind of talk and he feels content now—

Mr. W. Newman: After this he will change his mind.

Mr. Singer: —psychopath that he is, to write regular pieces extolling the wonders of the Premier; extolling the other day the wonders of the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough). I would be the last one—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Hurrah.

Mr. Singer: —to decry the merits or ability of the member for Chatham-Kent, but I just wonder where that bureau chief of the Globe and Mail is—

Interjection by hon. member.

Mr. Singer: —when debates like this go on. There isn't a single Globe and Mail reporter up there now. Where was he when the very important debate went on—

Mr. W. Newman: He has gone.

Mr. Foulds: He left when the member for Downsview started talking.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: —where all of them were when the important debate went on relating to the Ministry of Government Services.

Mr. Lewis: The galleries were full when the member started.

Mr. Singer: I am sure they were—and I have driven them all out! I am sorry but this is my penchant. I drive the press out constantly. Perhaps either the bureau chief—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: It was that earlier speech he made.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: —of the Globe who can only write about the Premier and the member for Chatham-Kent or some of his associates, could have the opportunity in due course to read the Hansard transcript and perhaps wonder why they don't cover other things that go on in this House.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on! Don't be so sensitive.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Why they don't comment, for instance, about the ordering of the business.

Mr. W. Newman: Why should they waste their time?

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Revenue): They work unending hours.

Mr. Singer: Why they didn't comment, for instance, about what I thought was one of the best debates I've heard in this House—the debate on the Ministry of Government Services bill. Why they didn't comment on the vote on the end of that debate. I thought it was unusual, Mr. Speaker, that after that debate—it was a good hard debate and points were made on all sides—the government was able to muster only 37 of its 76 members to bring them in to vote.

Mr. Reid: There has been some lousy writing.

Mr. Singer: I thought that was a very interesting thing. Those people who write in that paper extol the wonders and the wisdoms of the government, but they didn't bring that to the attention of the public?

Mr. Reid: Something has to be said.

Mr. Singer: Now, I could go on at some considerable length.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: They knew the true story, that is why.

Mr. Singer: Oh, yes, they knew the true story. That is right.

An hon. member: This is unbelievable!

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I didn't speak to them.

Mr. Singer: They got it from the hon. member for Grey South who, in his orderly and logical fashion, explained to them what is important that goes on in this House and what is unimportant. I am certain no member of the press writes a word for his newspaper unless he first consults the hon. member for Grey South.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I am very sure!

Mr. Singer: Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Reid: That's why they are such lousy writers.

Mr. Singer: If there were, as the hon. member for Scarborough West points out, some more people occupying those seats, I did have a lot more remarks about the press and its approach. I wonder, for instance, why the Star has as columnists such eminent and impartial people as Walter Pitman.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Impartial!

Mr. Singer: Why the Sun, for instance, deals with the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman), as a columnist—

Mr. Lewis: What is the member talking about? Does he mean that a newspaper can't hire a columnist of a particular political persuasion?

Mr. Singer: No, I'm not saying they can't hire any columnist they want, but in the great cry of impartiality that they have—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The writers in the Star supported the member on Spadina.

Mr. Singer: —one has to wonder out loud, Mr. Speaker, why the three Toronto papers, in any event, when they turn to the various columnists that they do hire, seem to hire people who have pretty substantial political biases.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, most columnists do.

Mr. Foulds: Take it down.

Mr. Singer: All right, there is Pitman, NDP, and Fraser Kelly, who is something less than unflattering to the government, as it is.

The Globe really doesn't need anybody. It has its bureau leader who is a sufficient apologist for the government at all times. Last Saturday there were two columns; the Premier on the front page, and the Premier on page 8.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: The Sun, Mr. Speaker, has Douglas Fisher, Lubor Zink—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member has a persecution complex tonight.

Mr. Singer: —the hon. member for High Park, and Peter Worthington, who wrote a wonderful column not too long ago saying, "What is really wrong with Senator McCarthy?" Now that kind of impartial journalism—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Lewis: Does the member want Norman Webster to write something about him? Is that what this is all about?

Mr. Singer: No, I don't think so, I don't think he's going to write anything nice about me. But I thought maybe he could spend enough time in this House to have some idea of what is going on so he could write about the affairs of the House.

Mr. Lewis: It speaks for the sanity of the press gallery that they are not here; it says something about us that we are.

Mr. W. Newman: Would the member for Downsview like to hold the reins while I shovel for a while?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it's going to be a long night and I have lots of patience. If the hon. members over there want to interject let them feel free. If the hon. member from Ontario South wants to get up and make a small speech, please do. I've got lots of time and lots of patience, since obviously we are going on. The quickest way to let me conclude my remarks will be to let me finish without interruption.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, order.

Mr. Singer: If the hon. members don't see any point in that then let them go on and interrupt. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a personal remark or two about an event that is pending within the Liberal Party. And when I say it is a personal remark I may be speaking—

Mr. W. Newman: He is running for leader, that's it.

An hon. member: Federally or provincially?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Who would have imagined he would announce it at 2 o'clock in the morning!

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): He is supporting the member for St. George.

Mr. Singer: I may be speaking, Mr. Speaker, for many members of our caucus, and I may be speaking for many members of the Liberal Party of Ontario, and many people who will be delegates at the leadership convention. But what I do want to say is this, sir, I believe—and I think I am speaking for many, many people—that the leadership given to our party by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. R. F. Nixon) in the years that he has been our leader, and the representation in the years that he has been the member for Brant, have been outstanding and worthy of the highest commendation by all the people of Ontario.

We have had, Mr. Speaker, many discussions—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is trying to close the door on the member for Brant!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Lawlor: Is the member going to run or not?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes or no?

Mr. Singer: Just be patient and the members will see what I am going to do in a minute.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Hurry up and drop the other shoe.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, we have had many discussions among ourselves about some indications that the hon. member for Brant has made in relation to his political future, and let me say, again very personally, that I would like him to stay on, and I think most of the members of the Liberal Party would like him to stay on as leader. And notwithstanding anything else that may be said about that subject, it is my opinion, sir, that this is the time of the the hon. member for Brant, and that at the next election, if the hon.

member for Brant continues to lead the Liberal Party he will then be the Premier of the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, we won't go that far!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): There doesn't seem such general agreement on that!

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Speaker, let me get to another phase of the remarks that I intended to make.

Mr. W. Newman: Be careful—the member for St. George is going to get after the member for Downsview pretty soon!

Mr. Singer: We have heard a great deal about the government that listens. We have heard a great deal about dialogue and communication with the public. The other day, in some reading I was doing, I came across this quotation:

The time is now come in which every Englishman expects to be informed of his national affairs, and in which he has a right to have that expectation gratified. For whatever may be urged by ministers, or those whom vanity or interest makes the followers of ministers, concerning the necessity of confidence in our governors and the presumption of prying with profane eyes into the recesses of policy, it is evident that this reverence can be claimed by counsels yet unexecuted and projects suspended in deliberation; but when a design has ended in miscarriage or success, when every eye and every ear is witness to general discontent or general satisfaction, it is then a proper time to disentangle confusion and to illustrate obscurity; to show by what causes every event was produced and in what efforts it is likely to terminate; to lay down with distinct particularity what rumour always huddles in general exclamation or perplexes in ingested narrative; to show when happiness or calamity is derived and whence it may be expected; and honestly to lay before the people what inquiry can gather of the past and conjecture can estimate of the future.

Mr. Lewis: Pithy and succinct.

Mr. Singer: Well, thank you very much, the hon. member for Scarborough West.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, it was of some significance that these remarks were made by Dr. Samuel Johnson some 200 years ago and were addressed to the Parliament of England. I think they are most applicable and pertinent to what goes on in this House.

It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that the parliamentary tradition which we apparently have arrived at, notwithstanding the inane nonsense that comes now from the secretary who is falling asleep, is supposedly to involve an exchange of information and supposedly to involve a responsibility on the part of government to give information about facts, such as Dr. Johnson outlined, and not to avoid, constantly and continuously, legitimate requests for information, which this government persists in doing.

Let me give you some examples. There have been many, many requests by my leader that the proposals made in relation to the Hydro building be tabled in the House so they can be examined. Those have never, in fact, been answered. They are still not tabled as of 2:20 o'clock, a.m., on April 11.

How many times, Mr. Speaker, have we asked, as the result of our own investigations and further spurred on as a result of the revelations made by the auditor, for details about the log books of the government's fleet of airplanes? Yet they are still not tabled. We are promised from time to time that a statement will be forthcoming. We have never had a succinct answer. We get an obscure reference from the minister that he said something a year or two ago which says, "If you will only direct me to specific information, I will give you a reply."

That same kind of technique is used by the Minister of Revenue. I asked him in an exchange of correspondence, as I read in the House last December, for access to the minutes of the Ontario Housing Corp., so that I could satisfy myself as to certain information that had come to my attention before making charges in public based solely on rumour. Again that information is not coming. What, in fact, both those ministers have been saying—the Minister of Revenue and the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier)—is, "If you can zero in and tell us one single incident that is suspicious, we might give you our predigested analysis of the question that you are asking." But, Mr. Speaker, where it has come to our attention that we have some concern, surely it makes good common sense that the Minister of Natural Resources or the Minister of Revenue would make available those documents rather than hide them. Because every time this government hides another piece of information, every time it refuses to answer a question, that much more is it denying this Parliament its rights. That much more is it classing itself as arrogant and uncaring and not a government that talks to people or listens to people.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko) for details about the inquiry into the intelligence operation of the Ontario Police Commission, and other than a very brief statement, he will give us no details. He won't tell us why Mr. Thurston suddenly departed from this regime and has gone up to Ottawa, at Ontario government expense, to serve in an innocuous job for the Law Reform Commission of Canada. He refuses to discuss the activities of Gary Ralph—his sudden appearance in the Ontario Police Commission and his sudden departure.

Again, Mr. Speaker, those matters having come and gone and the government having taken action and found something wrong—because Thurston didn't leave because he was a great fellow and Ralph didn't leave because he was a great fellow; they both left under a cloud—surely, Mr. Speaker, the time has come that the government level with us and level with the people of Ontario and tell us what is going on.

I asked the Solicitor General, a couple of weeks ago now, about certain incidents that took place in the Ottawa police force and other than his giving his promise to look into it, no answer has in fact been forthcoming. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we in this Legislature and the people of Ottawa and the people of Ontario are entitled to that kind of an answer.

I have asked the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker, about the observance by the Metropolitan Toronto police of section 160 of the Canadian Criminal Code when they descended and seized certain books, which the Provincial Secretary for Justice said that the police had labelled as obscene. I'm not quite sure of the manner in which he arrived at that conclusion.

I don't know if the Solicitor General has looked at section 160 and the various subsections that are there, but if he has, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure he would agree with me that there are four or five steps that must be taken. I think it is a matter of urgent public importance that the answers be given as to whether or not the Metropolitan Toronto police have observed the law.

Now, do we get any answer from the Solicitor General? No, we don't get any answer from the Solicitor General.

I asked the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) a couple of weeks ago—

Mr. W. Newman: Don't worry, we'll vote for the member for leader.

Mr. Singer: I asked the Minister of Health the other day, Mr. Speaker, if he would make available to us a report called "Comparative Information Relating to Health Costs in Ontario and Other Jurisdictions," which came out of his ministry in November, 1972. His answer was "Yes," and that was the last that was heard of it. He has never come forward and made that publication available to us, although he promised that he would in the House. He must know that that document, which contains very valuable information in connection with the whole provision of health services and their costs is in the possession of many members of the working press.

So the minister gets rid of that one by saying, "Sure I'll make it available," but he never follows it up. Nor do any of them, Mr. Speaker.

And this goes on and on and on, and culminates in the ultimate nonsense that is taking place right here tonight, when at 2:30 in the morning we are still debating the Throne debate. No logical and sensible group of men and women would ever allow themselves to get into this position, unless by the arbitrary and senseless direction of the Premier who wants to thrust his great power upon the opposition, just to prove who is the boss.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be worth a minute or two, wondering about what has happened to the great government reorganization.

The secretaries of the various departments: We have the Provincial Secretary for Justice and just what he does, I have no idea.

Mrs. Campbell: Does he know?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: I would love him to rise in his place, Mr. Speaker, and tell us about law reform. What has he done recently? What has he done ever since he took over that position, to introduce of his own initiative any single piece of law reform to the Province of Ontario? I would like him to tell us, Mr. Speaker, why he can't familiarize himself with a matter that he initiated the day he was pounding the table and saying, "I'm not going to be the policeman. We're going to sue for $25 million." Why couldn't he bother to inform himself about as simple a thing as whether or not there had been a statement of claim or a statement of defence in the Dow action?

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what he does, and why he is asking in the estimates for a very large sum of money to keep him doing nothing.

With all the fields available for law reform—divorce, bail, family courts and so on—I wonder why we haven't heard one single word from the Provincial Secretary for Justice as to what kind of thinking is going on. There is a Law Reform Commission that makes reports, but nothing is ever referred to by the Provincial Secretary for Justice in relation to any of those suggestions. Nor have we seen one single bit of initiative since he took over that job.

I think the Provincial Secretary has some ability, but I think he is being absolutely wasted; he has been hived off into a corner where he has no responsibility. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, he carried with him a gentleman who I think is one of the ablest civil servants in the employ of the government of Ontario, the former Deputy Attorney General, who is now Deputy Provincial Secretary for Justice. And in case anyone gets the idea that Mr. Dick has been complaining to me, that is absolutely untrue. But I think it is a terrible waste of the talent of that very able man; he is parked away in a little office down here with absolutely nothing to do and has no responsibility, and the people of Ontario don't get the benefit of his knowledge, experience and intelligence. Is that any way to run a government?

Mr. Speaker, I wonder also about my hon. friend from Carleton East. He is the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

Mr. W. Newman: He knows what's going on.

Mr. Singer: Now I have a very close personal friendship with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, and I have a very high respect for him. But I think it is a crying shame that he also has been hived off. One would have thought, in looking at the words "resources development," that perhaps some responsibility could have been assigned to this hon. minister in relation to energy—

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): One would have thought so; I agree with that. They had to find something for him to do.

Mr. Singer: —and in relation to the problems that the Premier is experiencing with his friend, the Premier of Alberta. But no, we are not allowed to hear a single word from the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development about the discussions that are going on in Ontario and in Alberta.

But let me go back to my friend, the Provincial Secretary for Justice. He tried to make some kind of a fist about the constitutional issue. But there was no one here in the House; and he fubbed it, as he does with most things, because he's got no real responsibility. Why shouldn't a man with the capability and intelligence of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development have been given that kind of responsibility?

When this House wants to talk about a very serious crisis that faces this province and the whole of Canada, Mr. Speaker, why should it be forced to wait for the occasional presence of the Premier? And I say "occasional" advisedly and deliberately. He isn't here very often.

The hon. member for Chatham-Kent has been muzzled. By the rules of the House he is not allowed to be questioned; and if he was questioned, which I am sure you wouldn't allow, Mr. Speaker, he wouldn't be allowed to answer us. He sits there, and I suppose he's doing a great job—Webster said so—but we don't get to know about it unless we get some kind of an inkling on the occasional attendance of the Premier. Again, Mr. Speaker, that's no way to run a government or a province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What questions has the hon. member asked about energy?

Mr. Singer: Again, this is flaunting the power of government in the face of the opposition and in the face of all the people of Ontario.

Mr. W. Newman: The member's lucky the parliamentary assistant can't talk, or he'd be in big trouble.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Lean back, Bill. Lean back.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, one wonders why, when we raised this question a little earlier, the Premier found it a great surprise that the hon. member for Chatham-Kent was not allowed to be questioned and to give answers. If the Premier was so shocked and surprised, why has he not done something about it in the few days since he has become aware of the situation?

Is the hon. member for Chatham-Kent going to be the spokesman for natural gas or isn't he? If he's going to be the spokesman, why don't they let him speak in the House? Or why don't they use the abundant talent of the hon. member for Carleton East (Mr. Lawrence)?

Mr. W. Newman: The member for Downsview is the gas spokesman!

Mr. Singer: Why don't they let him do something instead of worrying himself into a tizzy about the various things he tries to do and don't turn out to be very much, because he isn't given any responsibility?

Then there's the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch). He's billed next in this great debate and probably we'll get out of here by 3 or 3:30. He is going to make his rah-rah McMaster University speech that he has made on many occasions. Everything is going to be great, and the Liberals are bad and the NDP are worse, and everybody loves the Premier. We have heard that speech from him many times over the past several years.

But what, Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Lincoln do? What are his responsibilities? What great policy statements does he get up and make? What kind of thinking is he doing? What is there in his activities that justifies the kind of expenditure that his office is engaged in? What, Mr. Speaker, is the excuse for parking talent like that, and talent like that—and a little more questionable over there—in corners where you can't use them? Put those fellows to work.

Mr. Speaker, it is really a disgraceful thing the way the Premier has gathered unto himself power. He doesn't consult with his people. He doesn't talk to them at all. The day he announced that great decision which created his image—he was going to stop Spadina—it was as big a surprise to his colleagues as it was to many other people in the House. It wasn't discussed in their cabinet and it wasn't discussed in their caucus.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What is the member talking about?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who is he kidding?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, that is the way it was run. It was fascinating to watch, the day the Premier turned over and said there would be disclosure of election donations. He had neglected to inform his own members, who were about to engage in debate in the House, that he had changed his mind. So we had the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Gilbertson), who had a speech prepared. The hon. member for Algoma wasn't given quite enough notice to be able to change his speech, so he made a speech against what the Premier had said a few hours earlier.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): I spoke my own mind.

Mr. Singer: We had the hon. member for York West (Mr. MacBeth), who is a little more adaptable and a little quicker. He had a great ringing speech to support the Premier's previous decision. He took out all the nasty things that he was going to say and tried to adopt his speech. He didn't do it very well, even though he is a man of substantial talent.

But this is the way this government is run, Mr. Speaker. The Premier runs it, not out of his hip pocket but out of his office, with the largest staff that any Premier has ever had—over 100 people with the largest budget any Premier has ever had for his own personal service.

With all of those people running around, I wonder why, if the Premier is convinced that all of the innate wisdom of this government lies only with him, why doesn't he just stay in here and tell us from time to time what is going on? When he leaves his colleagues to answer for him; when he leaves the Provincial Secretary for Justice to explain something about the constitutionality of the actions in Alberta; when he leaves the hon. Minister of Health here to try to explain what happened to the $55 million, or even the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White) who tells us it wasn't lost, it is just postponed, one has to wonder really about the kind of capability that goes on.

Mr. W. Newman: The member is talking himself out of the leadership.

Mr. Singer: I was going to say a word or two toward the provincial Treasurer. When I listen to him, I get impressed with the Peter principle. The Peter principle, as you know, Mr. Speaker, is that a man is promoted to one step beyond his ability, and I am afraid that is what's happened to the hon. provincial Treasurer.

An hon. member: He went three beyond his capabilities.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): I hope they don't make the member for Downsview a judge.

Mr. Singer: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, for some reason best known to those people who wrote the COGP report, and for some reason that apparently continues to be implemented by the Premier, they have given to the member for London South two of the greatest responsibilities that this government has. One is to do the budgeting, and he is doing that very badly; he is doing his explanations very badly. The other, uniquely enough, is the responsibility for municipal affairs.

I had a look in the Parliamentary Guide today to see what great municipal experience the hon. member for London South had. Notwithstanding the great municipal experience that so many of the Premier's members had, the member for London South has never served for one minute on any other elected body than this one.

Mr. Speaker, with all of the municipal problems besetting the people of the Province of Ontario, out of the lesson that should have been learned in Huron, surely the municipal affairs of the province are important enough that their direction and guidance and the expression of government principle should be reflected by one minister who hopefully has had a little elected municipal experience? One would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Rhodes), a very successful mayor, could have been given a position right then—

Mr. Reid: And a good Liberal!

Mr. Singer: —as Minister of Municipal Affairs. One would have thought, Mr. Speaker, when they were branching out into this kind of experiment that the Premier would have looked for someone with a little knowledge and a little experience in what they were doing. I'm afraid, Mr. Speaker, as you review this front bench, one must come to the conclusion that where he has people of ability the Premier parks them in little cubbyholes where they can't operate. Where he doesn't want a minister who is going to bother him, he puts him in a portfolio with a big name on it, and really the Premier runs it when he is around to give directions.

Mr. Reid: How many Treasurers have we had lately?

Mr. Singer: And this again, Mr. Speaker, is no way to run a government.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): How did the member for Downsview make the front benches?

Mr. Singer: I'm glad the hon. member for Scarborough Centre interjected because I was hoping to say something about him.

I listened to him the other night, Mr. Speaker, on the CBC television free time broadcast, and I was most impressed, as was my colleague from York-Forest Hill (Mr. Givens), with his very sage pronouncement that the day of the automobile has gone.

Mr. Drea: Everybody knows that.

Mr. Singer: I thought that was very impressive, particularly, Mr. Speaker, since earlier that afternoon I had gone around several car dealers trying to buy a car for myself, and at least two of them I waited for about 20 minutes trying to get a salesman even to speak to me. I didn't get the impression from the various dealers I visited that the day of the automobile had gone. They were just so busy and their business was so successful that I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the hon. member from Scarborough begins to think before he talks.

I happened to read the New York Times financial section on Sunday, and I read a two-page article there that indicated—with graphs and charts and so on that might appeal even to the member for Scarborough Centre—quite clearly that the automobile industry is in the midst of its biggest and greatest boom in its history. So I have tried to correlate the advanced thinking of the member for Scarborough Centre that the day of the automobile has gone with what is actually happening.

I tried to correlate that with the destruction that the Premier has wrought on portions of Metropolitan Toronto in the northwest sector. I am not going to make the Spadina speech at this time, I'll make it again later, but I say it is absolute and deliberate destruction.

I wondered too, where the member for Scarborough Centre came off in suggesting that Ontario had a new idea, that it was going to do its own research and experimentation in Ontario—and guess who the researchers are? Kraus-Maffei from Germany and Hawker Siddeley from England. The one that was closest to Ontario—Ford—dropped out. The member for Scarborough Centre really has to stretch a point to say, with the great conviction he displayed on television, that that really indicates that we are doing something in Ontario and for Ontario.

Even when you begin to analyse the kiddycar ride at the exhibition which might be under way at the end of 1974; even when you analyse those fascinating diagrams that the Minister of Transportation and Communications released in connection with dial-a-bus; and when you stop wondering about how dial-a-buses are going to get from where they start out on to Bathurst St., out on to Dufferin St., out on to Keele St., and take anybody anywhere—where are they going to take them? They are going to take them to another bus that is going to fight its way down Bathurst St. What kind of real answer is it going to be? Dial-a-bus is apparently going to start—maybe—in November. And if it can't start in November, 1974, maybe it will start in April, 1975.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Premier, having ruined the ability to communicate in a reasonable way by road transportation and by a system of rapid transportation, really feels that he has done anything for the people of Metropolitan Toronto in this image-creating effort that he indulged in on the eve of the last election. I don't think he did.

Mr. Speaker, look at the mess in Health. We can go on about that at great length and I know that my colleagues will.

I do want to talk for a moment or two about the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) and some of the very fascinating comments that he has delivered himself of over the past few days. I mentioned in the question period a few days ago, or tried to elicit the information, why the minister thought he was getting a snow job from the board of education of the borough of North York. He said it was because they had meetings and told the people their view of what was going on in their education budget. I asked the minister why he hadn't sent his own people to those meetings. He said it really wasn't seemly that civil servants arrive and appear and talk at those meetings.

Somehow, Mr. Speaker, some 7,000 people came to those 15 meetings in the borough of North York. Those 7,000 people didn't come because they loved the hon. Minister of Education. They came because they were very unhappy with the hon. Minister of Education. You know I've listened to the hon. Minister of Education on television for the last three nights as he has attempted to explain away what he is attempting to do, and when all else has gone he says, "Well, nobody really gave me any information, you know". He uses that "you know." I don't know why he uses that "you know" phrase every other sentence but that is the way he puts it.

Let me read to you some of the views of a trustee of the board of education of the borough of North York which I think should be a part of the record. I think that the Minister of Education should begin to study what is going on and not try to explain away these things by saying, "It was a snow job. Nobody had an opportunity to talk. Nobody has given me the kind of figures." Listen to what this trustee says:

The present ceilings on school board spending are part of a three-year programme of restriction by the provincial Department of Education to reduce the spending of local school boards. [He gives some of the history of it.] This year the boards in Metro find that the imposed ceilings cannot be set without seriously undermining the quality of education built up over two decades. Metro, as a whole, must reduce its budget by $25 million. North York must reduce its budget by $6 million. The shortage prevails after government has allowed us an increase of three per cent in our elementary per pupil cost and two per cent in our secondary per pupil cost.

He goes on to talk about the cuts that have already been made by cutting back on non-instructional areas, the instructional staff cuts that have already been made, the effect on maintenance, and that sort of thing. He outlines at very substantial length:

—the services that have been built up with government approval, with approval of the Premier and his predecessor John Robarts, because when they were Ministers of Education in their respective time the sky was the limit. Nothing was too good for our students. Suddenly almost overnight down comes the axe.

And the Minister of Education says he has no facts and figures. Well, the facts and figures are there. He knows that they are there and he knows what has happened.

I can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure most people can appreciate the fact, that there are only so many provincial dollars to go around. I can appreciate that the educational share of the total provincial budget, which we will hear about on Thursday—today—in a few hours—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Tomorrow. Today is Wednesday.

Mr. Singer: Today is Wednesday. I've lost track.

All right, the educational share can only be spread so far. But what puzzles me, Mr. Speaker, is in an area—

Mr. Bullbrook: Why does the government do this? It is their fault. Why do we sit so late?

Mr. Singer:—like the borough of North York, if the trustees feel it is—

Mr. Bullbrook: They do it all the time. Remember we talked about it.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): We could have sat last night.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): The member for Samia wants to say something.

Mr. Singer:—important and necessary to levy over and above what the Minister of Education tells them, why they are denied that privilege. If those democratically elected trustees who have their responsibility to keep up a certain grade and level and calibre of education, if they believe that they should be able to levy more money and collect it from the taxpayers who presumably are going to support them, why should the minister want to interfere with that democratic right?

I'm not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that there be a larger share of the provincial education budget directed to North York or to Metropolitan Toronto. The government gives us only 33 per cent now. But why limit the tax-collecting ability? Why interfere with the municipal autonomy?

Has the government not learned a lesson from Huron? Why does it keep on telling the elected officials of boards of education and the elected officials of municipalities that they can't do this and they can't do that because big daddy knows best? Why does the Minister of Education convene meetings to discuss these things and invite only Tories?

Is that a government that listens? Is that a government that's concerned? Does all of the wisdom of the Province of Ontario reside in the backbench Tories who come from Metropolitan Toronto?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I'm sure there are lots of "hear, hears" about that but I don't think anybody believes it. It indicates the arrogance and the lack of desire to listen and the lack of concern about the democratic process that this government has.

Mr. Speaker, I've got many, many more pages. The hour is late enough for me. I am going to conclude my remarks at this point with the urgent suggestion to the Premier that he pay some attention to some of the criticisms—not necessarily mine—to some of the criticisms that have been made in this debate.

When we make a plea for an orderly running of the House, for a reasonable communication of information, for reasonably prompt answers to our questions, which are important in the public mind, for responsible ministers who will take their place in this House day after day and answer our questions which not only are we entitled to ask, but it's our duty to ask.

Mrs. Campbell: They don't know that.

Mr. Singer: Why does the government play games with us? Why does it have that clown, the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet, playing this continual game with us about ordering the business of the House—because it's disorder and the only reason we're here until 10 to 3 is because this whole House is in disorder. The only reason we had the fuss about the Justice estimates is because the whole House is in disorder.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of the House to support the amendment moved by my hon. leader, and since the amendment to the amendment is put first, we will support the amendment to the amendment.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): Mr. Speaker, in winding up the debate for the government this evening, or rather this morning, I will not detain the House unduly.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): The minister can sit down now.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Splendid speech.

Hon. Mr. Welch: But there are one or two observations which, of course, I would like to make in connection with the conduct of of this debate. Indeed, it becomes very obvious to anyone on this side of the House, as they have listened to the contributions to this debate from the opposition side of the House—

Mrs. Campbell: When? They haven't been here.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—or indeed have read the debates in Hansard—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): I'm glad he added that.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—that there are very few positive contributions that have been made with respect to the alternatives. Indeed, as one has listened to the windup debate this evening—

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): He obviously hasn't read any of the debates.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—one could really come to the conclusion that there is a great—

Mr. Renwick: That is a ridiculous statement and he knows it.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): That is a pious pontification. The minister never read any of the speeches, except he heard some on the intercom.

Mr. Renwick: Has the minister listened to the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren)?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I'm going to be—

Mr. Renwick: No, he didn't; nor the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds).

Mr. Bullbrook: During the speeches here there wasn't a minister in the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: May I say to the foggy-voiced member who has just spoken, I'm going to be making reference to the member for Nickel Belt.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Renwick: Nor the member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes). Stop that nonsense. Don't make a fool of this House. What a fatuous remark.

Mr. Bullbrook: What a charade the minister puts on.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

An hon. member: Oh boy. They've all been into the booze.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: It decries the minister and his government.

Mr. Bullbrook: He doesn't even do the credit to the House to sit here and listen.

Mr. Renwick: That is cheap. From the minister as a member of this government that is rotten.

Mr. Bullbrook: Has he read every speech?

Mr. Reid: Nothing else to do.

An hon. member: He said he did.

Mr. Bullbrook: And he says he read every speech. That is a lie to the House, an absolute lie to the House.

An hon. member: Seventy-five per cent.

Mr. Bullbrook: And he said he read every speech.

Mr. Renwick: Did you read all the speeches from this House?

An hon. member: He said he did.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the minister is lying when he says he has read every speech and that there was no possible contribution by the members.

Some hon. members: Withdraw.

Mr. Renwick: I'm not going to listen to that crap any more.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, all hon. members know that it's—

An hon. member: Do you know what he said to you right now?

Mr. Bullbrook: He shouldn't say it. He didn't sit here except for three speeches.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bullbrook: He lied to the House that he read the rest.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Sarnia come to attention, please. Order.

Mr. Bullbrook: I'm not going to come to attention. What do you think this is—a military camp?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The member will regret that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members know full well that they may not call another hon. member a liar or accuse him of lying. I think it's only fair to request that they withdraw their statements.

I don't believe that any hon. member—

Mr. Bullbrook: Speaking then if I may—

An hon. member: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: No, you may not while I am on my feet.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, you asked me to withdraw, Mr. Speaker. I'll get up now and speak to you—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please remain silent while I am on my feet.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Speaker: Now I suggest to the hon. members who accused another hon. minister of lying they should withdraw the comments, because this is certainly not permitted in any Parliament.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Let me say this if I may.

An hon. member: Oh no!

Mr. Bullbrook: I could say this, that the Provincial Secretary for Social Development—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. I have directed him to withdraw the remark.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, may I say to you, sir, that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will please withdraw the remark.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I say to you, sir?

Mr. Speaker: No! The hon. member will please withdraw the remark for the last time.

An hon. member: Let's be fair about this.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, sir, would you permit me—

Mr. Speaker: No, I will not permit any comment on it. The Speaker's comments are not debatable.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I direct the hon. member for the last time to withdraw the remark.

Mr. Bullbrook: Having regard to the position that you occupy, Mr. Speaker, and the respect that I have for it, I withdraw my remark.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his co-operation. Now the hon. member for Riverdale, who also made the same allegation.

Mr. Renwick: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly withdraw my remarks. I would just hope that the Provincial Secretary for Social Development—whatever he is—would at some point after the session is over, in fact read the statements that are made by my colleagues—the member for Port Arthur—

An hon. member: All of them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Renwick: —the member for Nickel Belt, and then correct his statement in this House that there were no statements of consequence made by the hon. members in this assembly.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: It is undermining the—

An hon. member: The member is undermining his leader. His leader is embarrassed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please be seated?

Mr. Renwick: It is a shocking—

Mr. Speaker: For the last time, will the hon. member please be seated?

Mr. Renwick: It is a shocking remark.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please be seated?

The hon. minister.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): I listened to those speeches and I say, hear, hear.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I listened to Thunder Bay; I listened to Wentworth (Mr. Deans).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —and I say to the member for Lincoln, hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. Solicitor General please remain silent?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): The minister hasn't got enough intelligence to know a good speech. He hasn't got enough intelligence.

An hon. member: Call him a liar.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: He has read all the speeches?

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): We wouldn't be into this if the government ran the House correctly.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, having simply gone through my introductory sentence, I will now get on with the speech.

Mr. Bullbrook: And having read all the speeches.

Mr. Reid: I hope there is a little more thought to the rest of it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I don't want any more of that nonsense about imputing any motives—and I'll show the members before this speech is over with—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—just exactly what I have read.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now just wait. Just sit back and wait and see.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Provincial Secretary read every speech?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member's comments and—

Mr. Bullbrook: The Provincial Secretary read every speech?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—his behaviour are not becoming—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

May I remind the hon. members of the provisions of rule 10, which provide that I may adjourn the House without motion at any time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should retract that? Will the hon. minister proceed?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Bring some intelligence to the government if they can't bring their own.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): He wouldn't dare. The Speaker wouldn't dare carry out a threat like that. Mr. Speaker hasn't got the guts to see that through.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: You are backing off already; you are intimidated.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, you will have recalled that one of my earlier remarks this evening had to do with the bankruptcy of positive ideas and alternatives that were placed before this House during the course of this debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Which one?

Mr. Cassidy: The first or the second?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I want to underline that.

Mr. Renwick: Pardon? Come on, call it off.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I do at this time want to make at least one exception, to which the member for Riverdale very correctly draws my attention.

Mr. Lewis: That's exactly right.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If he had allowed me to proceed, as I hope he will now, I will make some reference to that now—

Mr. Renwick: I doubt very much whether I will.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—though I had planned to do it a little later on in the course of these remarks.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the minister needn't be quite so coy about it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: One of the exceptions, of course, was the contribution to the Speech from the Throne made by—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is just being coy now.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—the hon. member for Nickel Belt. As the members who were here or who have read the speech will recall, he raised the issue during the course of his address—

Mr. MacDonald: Where has the minister been for the last three hours?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—of the need for some programme of guidelines for a firmer equality of opportunity for women in the world of employment.

Mr. Lewis: He was stronger than that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would like, on the basis of the comments which the hon. member made at that time—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister didn't get a very good précis of it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —to make some comments with respect to a government response in this connection.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Welch: During the Throne Speech debate last week—

Mr. Bullbrook: Is this the 4X again?

Hon. Mr. Welch: —the issue was raised about what this government is or isn't doing to equalize employment opportunity for women in this province.

Mr. Bullbrook: The minister knows about 4X, doesn't he?

Hon. Mr. Welch: This was another instance where the member's leader, I assume, having read the speech himself in that connection—

Mr. Lewis: I was here when it was delivered.

Interjections by hon members.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister was not here nor were the rest of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —then came into the House to ask a series of questions with respect to that particular programme.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Let the members opposite hop along and sit down.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: They haven't been here when we've talked about it.

Mr. Cassidy: Tell the minister he should be in the House to listen.

Mr. Renwick: The minister is on a sticky wicket tonight.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Surely the leader of the NDP knew, as had been said by me several times, that a very complete study was under way within our secretariat, a study which—

Mr. Renwick: He didn't know.

Mr. Cassidy: A muddy study.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —has produced new government policies with a great deal more teeth and meaning than the distasteful quota system indirectly advocated by the opposition last week.

Mr. Renwick: The minister is really on the defensive tonight.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order about the quotas.

Mr. Speaker: A point of order.

An hon. member: Which one of their leaders was the minister speaking about?

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, the quota system was advocated directly by the provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Renwick: Not by this party.

Mr. Lewis: This party said to the government that it wanted no quota system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. Campbell: The minister wasn't in the House.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can only hope that the member's voice will wear out soon, and then we'll make some progress.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): The government is sensitive, vulnerable and guilty and it knows it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This study within our secretariat, soon to be published detailing government policy, is a full and a complete report. It is detailed—

Mr. Cassidy: The royal commission reported four years ago.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —and it is definitive enough to demand its presentation on a special occasion so that it can indeed elicit the type of full discussion and debate that will be necessary.

Mr. Cassidy: Which will then be interred.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The policy is the result of a year's work by the secretariat—

Mr. Renwick: A year's work!

Hon. Mr. Welch: —and involves a lot more than just—

Mr. Renwick: The result of a year's work. The party has been governing for 30 years.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —counting female names in departments or asking ministers with respect to the composition of boards.

I want to remind the House, as the members will know—the member for Nickel Belt, of course, will know because of his research in connection with his contribution to the debate on the Speech from the Throne—there were 167 recommendations in the report of the royal commission on the status of women. We have spent several months studying these particular recommendations in detail and relating them to the many existing policies and programmes of this particular government. As will be detailed when the full policy paper is announced later this month, many of the recommendations in the royal commission report have been achieved already.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is now one—

Mr. Laughren: Why not the two resolutions? Just two?

Hon. Mr. Welch: They have been achieved within provincial programmes and policies.

Mr. Lewis: The minister appointed the task force on early childhood education. Would he like to tell us its composition?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, that's right.

Mr. Lewis: It didn't help, though, did it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Just give me time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. W. Newman: It didn't help the members a bit, did it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Having said that, let me say that tonight, as part of this particular discussion, I think we should perhaps indicate some of the solid proposals which will be incorporated as part of the larger policy paper dealing with the status of women.

The member for Nickel Belt, commenting on the report on the status of women, suggested government grants to get more women into certain fields of employment. But I would suggest to him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that this really doesn't deal with some of the basic problems, especially as they might even relate to the civil service of this particular province.

Among our findings, in studying the recommendations of the royal commission report and how to apply these particular recommendations in Ontario, was that we needed better machinery in the Ontario government to co-ordinate provincial policies and programmes affecting women and to improve opportunities for women in the government service. An equal opportunity programme for women will, in fact, be established in the Ontario public service. Ministers, deputy ministers and government agencies will be asked to expedite the application of detailed directives on equalizing employment opportunities for women in the provincial civil service.

Mr. Renwick: We are talking about equality for women, not equal opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The full details of this particular plan will be contained, Mr. Speaker, in our policy paper to which I have already made reference. One aim clearly will be to oversee recruitment literature, to see, of course, that in keeping with the comments already made, it is, in fact, encouraging the development of this particular programme.

Mr. Speaker, to further monitor this programme the Management Board of Cabinet will create a senior position to be known as co-ordinator of women's programmes, and this person will serve as a member of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Renwick: Oh great.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh no!

Hon. Mr. Welch: Without such co-ordination in any new programme, I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there could be duplication, poor priority setting and a very weakened impact. Today, women's needs are really very general and therefore ought not to be put within the control of any one particular minister. I hope that you would agree as well that an agency of civil servants alone to co-ordinate the new programme wouldn't really meet the expressed desire for citizen involvement which the various women's groups have in fact been making.

Cabinet has also determined, Mr. Speaker, that a permanent body to be known as the Status of Women Council will be appointed, comprising both members of the public and people from various government ministries. The public appointees to the Status of Women Council, which will be announced shortly, will be carefully selected and appointed for definite terms to convey the interests and concerns of the public. Of course a permanent member of this council will be the co-ordinator of women's programmes for the Ontario public service.

The council will be chaired by a person drawn from the public representation. The aim of this particular council will be to advise on implementing the policies which we will outline in the policy paper to which I have made reference. They will also co-ordinate government programmes for women, being the link between the residents of the province and the government, and their meetings with specific groups will seek out more detailed opinion. The council, of course, will act as a catalyst and indeed will provide an opportunity for this type of dialogue.

Mr. Lewis: The minister knows the request is for equality, not segregation. There's a difference. There's a difference, you know.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I make reference to that at this particular point as some type of a positive response to what I thought was a very positive contribution to the Throne debate from the member for Nickel Belt. We will have an opportunity of discussing this policy in some detail once we have all this information before us.

The hon. member for Downsview, Mr. Speaker, has made some reference to the reorganization of the government—

Mr. Cassidy: What about those other questions about women?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—and, of course, I would understand because of his seniority in this House and his long standing as a member of this House that he would have ample opportunity, in the course of the estimates discussions, to ask all of us who have these new responsibilities in the policy fields specific questions with respect to our activities and our functions and the discharge of our responsibilities. The Legislature will be asked to vote money for the various secretariats—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is what worries us.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would assume that if the hon. member is really interested in finding out something about the new structure of government he will ask very pointed and very detailed questions of the policy ministers when their estimates are before the House. It might be very interesting indeed if, in fact, he took that much interest in the reorganization rather than making the vast generalizations he makes about this. Perhaps, during the course of such a discussion, we might finally use this as an opportunity to explain to him the restructuring of the government as set out in committee report No. 3. Indeed, he might be that much better informed.

Mr. Singer: I have read the reports, but what does the minister do?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps when the estimates of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development are before the House we will have an opportunity to go into that in some detail. The member will see the difference between an operating minister and a policy minister. Indeed, the hon. member will know, too, as a member of this House that not all of his work is necessarily done while he occupies his particular seat in the Legislature.

Mr. Singer: We would like to hear the odd statement of policy from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Welch: There are other responsibilities in connection with this riding.

Mr. Singer: We would like to hear from the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr) on law reform.

Hon. Mr. Welch: In connection with some other remarks which have been made by the hon. members there has been a great deal of interest shown in the policy field with which I am connected. Indeed, the motions that have been introduced by both the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. F. Nixon) and the member for Scarborough West have made some reference to health costs which have some interest with respect to that policy field.

This is really not the occasion to go into all the details because we have had ample opportunity to discuss this in the question period and in other contributions that have been made to this particular subject.

Mr. Singer: That is some discussion in the question period. We get no answers.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Minister of Health (Mr. Potter) will announce the control mechanisms for health costs when the results of current studies of health costs and services are assessed and are put into operational terms.

I think it is fair enough to say at this time, Mr. Speaker, that the government is concerned about the rising health costs which hit the medical consumer; which hit the premium payer; and, of course, which hit the taxpayer of this province. Through guidelines for hospital spending and bed capacity scales, we are trying, as the members of this House know, to control health costs where they can be most humanely controlled.

I would suggest to the hon. members that, in all fairness, we don't want to be drawn into the excesses of the health care systems of either the United Kingdom or the United States. The British have relative freedom from worry about direct personal health expenses but I would remind the members of this House that they don't have the free choice of physicians and specialists.

Americans have very lavish hospitals and they have top quality doctors, if they can pay for them. But any study of the situation in the United States will point out to members that decent United States health insurance schemes are virtually unavailable to one-third of the population—the poor and the disadvantaged—because of the cost.

Mr. Renwick: Come on, we don't buy it. We are a grown-up country on our own!

Hon. Mr. Welch: The member's conduct is most unbecoming to him!

Mr. Renwick: We are an independent country with our own decisions to make.

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is right. Let's just pick it up from there.

Mr. Renwick: That is right, and let's make them.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Renwick: Let's not have any more of this nonsense of comparisons between the United Kingdom and the United States. This is Canada and the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, would, in fact, give one moment's consideration to the matter of putting things in perspective he would understand why members are invited to make the comparisons.

Mr. Renwick: The comparisons are totally invalid and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Any study of what is going on in the jurisdiction to the south of us makes us very pleased that this particular—

Mr. Renwick: The comparisons are totally invalid and the minister knows it.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Welch:—government and its predecessor governments, assisted by all members of this House, have been able to build a hospital plan that we can be very proud of. Let's not overlook that!

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the hon. minister would complete his remarks without replying to the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I thought that was the thrust of the debate to which the member for Downsview referred.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Go back to the script.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If I may make some remarks not related to the interjection—

Mr. Speaker: Well, the debate across the floor of the House is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, may I share this with you then, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: If you will, please.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The point is that today, when we have all this preoccupation with rising health costs, I hope we keep in mind the accomplishments of this government and its predecessor governments which have resulted from the co-operative effort in this House, in building a hospital system in this province that makes it possible for all of our people to have access to this type of care.

Mr. Renwick: Because of the pressure from this party!

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Sit down!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Do all of our people have access?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We can look to other jurisdictions not very far from us, where thousands of people are personally bankrupt because they can't pay their charges—

Mr. Cassidy: How many people in this province lack necessities because of family health plans?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—and hundreds of people are sent home from hospitals because they can't pay their deposit. We don't have that in Ontario, because we have built a solid system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: Let's not have any more of this colonial mentality.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This is why the Minister of Health, and all of us in the Social Development policy field—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —have stressed the de-institutionalization of health care to let people be cared for more efficiently and, indeed, often more humanely and intimately—

Mr. Reid: Well, isn't that nice!

Hon. Mr. Welch: —and certainly at less cost, by using home care and nursing home programmes.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, poppycock!

Hon. Mr. Welch: Of course, we've got to keep in mind—

Mr. Lewis: It doesn't mean anything.

Mr. Renwick: It's preposterous!

Hon. Mr. Welch: —that we are looking at alternatives to the present system; but in doing so let's not forget the positive work that has been accomplished on the part of the people of this particular party. The very basic fact to remember is that the government support money, which was to relieve individuals of the burden of extraordinary medical costs, had to be dedicated first toward the highest costs—the intensive-care hospital costs.

Inevitably there was a disincentive, if you just think about it for a moment, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you are; there was a disinclination for the public to use lower-cost services as long as the higher-cost facilities were available.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the Minister of Health would agree that an imbalance developed, and quite naturally we're focussing our attention on that imbalance.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Another thing we should face, Mr. Speaker—and I know that you're just waiting on the edge of your seat for this next one—is that this system of public financial support for a full health service is still relatively new.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister may speak through me; he needn't speak to me.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, Mr. Speaker, the last time I did that I got in trouble because I was then getting involved with an interjection.

Mr. Speaker: That's a different thing.

Mr. Singer: Oh, the minister has such a tough time!

Mr. Reid: He thinks he's back at McMaster.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): At least he's fair.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, underlying our moves to control health and hospital costs are the aims of guaranteeing opportunity of access to effective health care for all of our people, while ensuring a decent and a competent medical service, and avoiding the risk of personal bankruptcy or excessive premiums or taxes. And I repeat, for emphasis, that our health care system competes with the best anywhere.

Mr. Lewis: Of course!

Mr. Cassidy: Then why is there so much wrong with it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It applies a moderating hand to both doctors' and hospitals' costs at a time when both such costs are getting beyond people's reach in much of the western world, at least where such services are available. I'm quite satisfied that in the development of these particular guidelines, the Minister of Health will be able to satisfy this House with respect to those controls.

Mr. Singer: That doesn't wash any more.

Mr. Lewis: But development of the guidelines will be a meagre advance of the programme.

Mr. Bullbrook: The minister is really bombing tonight.

Mr. Lewis: He's not bombing; but since he became the policy minister something's happened to him.

An hon. member: Drop the bomb on them!

Mr. Reid: He tries using his brain and it won't work.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I thought we might take a look at the two motions that are before us—

Mr. Singer: Yes. Good luck.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—and perhaps on that basis proceed to invite the House to divide and support the government, to which some reference has been made. I was particularly interested to hear the hon. member for Wentworth say, "I wonder what the public really thinks about the government of Ontario." I guess the hon. member for Wentworth has a very short memory because I think not too long ago—

Mr. Reid: How about March 15?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—the people of this particular province showed exactly what they thought about the government of this province, and they only have to take a look at what is here to establish that fact.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The ides of March.

An hon. member: That's my line.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, you can't have a by-election unless there's a vacancy.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: What the government should be saying is what it means. It should be saying, "We are in trouble and we are going to try to bail ourselves out."

Hon. Mr. Welch: This government is not in trouble.

Mr. Deans: Sure it's in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I want to tell the House that one of the greatest insurance policies this government and this party has to remain in office for almost an indefinite period of time is the members opposite, and their philosophy, and the lack of effective opposition over there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: And that's just the second and the third reason. The first reason is the leadership of the Premier. When you put these three things together, and you have a party that is both progressive and conservative and is responsive to the needs of the people, I tell the House we'll take the opposition anywhere, anytime.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, I think the government should resign!

Mr. Singer: I bet the minister would wow them at McMaster.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh, it goes over big in Smithville still.

Mr. Lewis: Right, right, and it is not bad at the St. Catharines high school.

An hon. member: And right here.

Hon. Mr. Welch: And if people like the hon. member for Downsview really went out and saw what Ontario was like outside of that particular riding, he would see why this party is in power: good solid people—

An hon. member: He just confines himself to the Spadina Expressway.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let's take a look at these two motions that are before us.

Mr. Bullbrook: Does the minister remember the ides of Charlie MacNaughton?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Pardon?

Mr. Bullbrook: The ides of Charlie MacNaughton.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Look, I wouldn't put too much strength on a couple of by-elections. Let's not get carried away with a couple of by-elections.

Mr. Singer: Tell us about Roy McMurtry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I want to take this opportunity of welcoming the two new members into the House. I think it was a great day when they walked in and indeed the contributions—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I can hardly hear myself speak.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: At least we allowed the opposition to listen to themselves, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: There's no end to the benefits that the government bestows.

Mrs. Campbell: This government has changed all its policies in accordance with what we said in the campaigns.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. George is certainly a great expert on change, there's no question about that. I want to suggest to you, Mr.

Speaker, that when this party changes any of its particular points of view it's in response to sensitivity with respect to people. It's not a case of opportunism just to get votes.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: After all, if the members really study the philosophy of this particular party they will find that it's a philosophy that is very responsive to the changing needs of the people of this particular province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, if I could get back to the two motions that are at present before us. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has put a motion before us which has four general areas of interest and concern. I want to talk to them.

Mr. Bullbrook: Did the minister have time to read it with all of the other speeches that he read?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I did. Actually, Mr. Speaker, as you will know, on this reorganization—

Mr. Bullbrook: He read all these speeches?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—we have a great deal of time.

Mr. Bullbrook: He read all the other speeches? He never lies to the House?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is the member trying to suggest that I am lying to the House? Is he trying to suggest that I am lying to the House?

Mr. Singer: No, he wouldn't suggest anything like that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: Certainly it is a lie. He knows it is a lie.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): At the very most it is hyperbole.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition made some reference in his motion to the financing of our health programme, and I have already made some reference to that during the course of these particular remarks. He has made some comments with respect—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—to the public hospitals, and used the word "redundancy" during the course of that particular motion. I would like to remind him, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I don't know of any hospitals in this province that have been declared redundant.

Mr. Singer: No, he sent the Minister of Health to Huron to tell them that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, if the member wants to make some reference to that, the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Riddell) during his maiden speech, which I thought was, from the standpoint of its delivery—and I want to be very careful of what I say—a valid first contribution, said something during the course of his particular remarks which the member for Downsview just reminded me of.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I am glad of that. I wouldn't want the minister to forget these things.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He said that he was accused, and his party was accused, of creating issues that didn't exist. I will remind you of one of those issues that didn't exist. Forty-eight hours before election day when the Liberal caucus was all gathered around in Goderich—

Mr. Singer: Yes. Remind me.

Hon. Mr. Welch:—it had the lack of principle to announce to the people of that riding that this minister was going to close down all kinds of community hospitals in Huron.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reid: That is a lie.

Hon. Mr. Welch: And that was just typical of the sort of desperate tactics that the Liberals used to actually distort the facts during the campaign.

Mr. Deans: If the minister wants to talk about a distortion of facts he should talk to the Treasurer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Every television station and radio station talked about it. I invited them to return to deny that we were going to close down community hospitals.

Mr. Singer: Could I ask the minister a question?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No.

Mr. Singer: Oh, no. He doesn't want to hear the facts. Brave fellow.

Mr. Reid: What happened to the cut and thrust?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Then there is some reference made, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): He is a sore loser.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those fellows opposite are sore winners.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We were gentlemen.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, he denied it.

Mr. Singer: The press walked out on him.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Does the member know why?

Mr. Singer: He wouldn't answer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Minister of Health had to call a press conference to deny that silly story that the Liberal caucus brought into the riding of Huron, and the member knows that.

Mr. Reid: The Tories should have had the member running around passing out government cheques.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Absolutely irresponsible. We could list them all, so that when we talk about creating issues that didn't exist let me say there were plenty of them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If we don't have some order I am going to adjourn the House for half an hour.

Mr. MacDonald: That should have been done hours ago.

Hon. Mr. Welch: And finally, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the motion of the hon. Leader of the Opposition, some reference was made during the course of that motion to fiscal extravagance and mismanagement and strong words such as this and—

Mr. Reid: Has the minister read the auditor's report?

Hon. Mr. Welch:—and all I want to point out to you is if the hon. Leader of the Opposition is as accurate with respect to that particular accusation as he was with respect to predicting the provincial deficit, then of course I would remind the House that he was out about 100 per cent with respect to his calculations there, although we have had some evidence of his inability to use arithmetic and no wonder he pleads for a math curriculum.

Mr. Reid: Tell us about the auditor's report. Discuss the auditor's report.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bullbrook: Is he going to talk about the auditor's report tonight?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Singer: They used to tell us there was nothing wrong over there. No, nothing wrong. Eighty points of criticism by the auditor.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. member for Scarborough West, of course, during the course of his particular motion exceeds the Leader of the Opposition by about six particular points. The answers to these, of course, perhaps could be summarized this way: He talks in terms of the increase with respect to the pensions for the elderly, and I would suggest to him that since his father is running the government of Canada he might have a word with him by telephone and suggest that something might be done about that.

Mr. Lewis: Well, he has helped to increase pensions for people in Ontario more than the provincial secretary.

Mr. Bullbrook: He is worse than the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He talks of housing and I think that this government has amply demonstrated—and the Minister of Revenue has during the course of the last several days made the records quite clear—with respect to what positive steps this government has taken on housing.

Mr. Cassidy: That is nonsense.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): What about resource policies?

Mr. Lewis: That is the worst programme.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This is an interesting one. In the course of that particular motion he talks about—listen to this. He talks in that motion, Mr. Speaker, about “its failure,” and he is referring to us when he says this:

—its failure to exercise its stewardship over the resources of Ontario and to ensure the maximum return to the people through public ownership, control and intervention.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what the leader of the NDP is asking us to do when he uses words like that? He is asking us to reverse the results of the election of the fall of 1971; because the people of Ontario gave him their answer at that time.

Mr. Lewis: The Provincial Secretary heard the member for Sudbury East deny it.

Mr. Renwick: If he had heard the speech he would have told us about it.

Mr. Cassidy: Did he read the speech of the member for Nickel Belt?

Hon. Mr. Welch: And on we go through these particular points, Mr. Speaker, which have led me, after very careful study, to have absolute confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party of this province, led by the hon. Premier; and I am going to vote against both of these particular amendments.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am going to support the main motion and I invite all members of the House at 3:29 a.m. to join me in saving this government and therefore allowing it the opportunity to continue to serve the people of this particular province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The Throne Speech debate now being concluded, I shall call for the vote as follows:

Mrs. Scrivener moves, seconded by Mr. Turner, that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, PC, CD, QC, LLD, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario.

May it please Your Honour: We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. R. F. Nixon moves, seconded by Mr. Singer that the following words be added to the motion:

This House condemns the government:

1. For its failure to bring order and efficiency to the financing of our health insurance programmes.

2. For its costly lack of planning in providing hospital and other public facilities at great expense, which are now by ministerial decision declared to be redundant.

3. For proceeding with the imposition of high cost, democratically remote regional governments without pausing for an assessment of the usefulness and cost of the ones already in operation.

4. For fiscal extravagance, mismanagement and lack of financial control leading the Treasurer to threaten higher income taxes, that would cancel the federal tax reduction initiative so necessary to bolster our economy.

Mr. Lewis moves, seconded by Mr. Deans, that this House further condemns the government:

1. For its failure even to recognize that soaring prices are making it difficult for families and pensioners to make ends meet and maintain good nutrition.

2. For its failure to bring our pensioners up to a minimum income of $200 a month.

3. For its failure to deal adequately with the exorbitant increases in housing costs in the Province of Ontario.

4. For its failure to provide adequate public low-cost housing.

5. For its willingness to subsidize private speculative development with public funds in the building of houses.

6. For its failure to develop an integrated energy policy which would ensure adequate supplies for Ontario residents and industry at reasonable prices.

7. For its failure to exercise its stewardship over the resources of Ontario and to ensure the maximum return to the people through public ownership, control and intervention.

8. For its failure to reorganize the delivery of health services to the people so as to ensure accessibility to comprehensive health care at a reasonable cost.

9. For its failure to provide an adequate financial base for regional government to enable them to obtain true autonomy and carry out their functions.

10. For its failure to correct the imbalance in development between the Metropolitan Toronto region and the rest of the province by creating a provincial plan for Ontario; and as a first step by decentralizing the new Hydro headquarters and the new provincial office complex to another region of Ontario.

Mr. W. Newman: Thank God for the free enterprise system.

Mr. Reid: God bless mommy, daddy and the Premier.

Mr. Bullbrook: God bless the Premier, Jerry Moog and Fort Lauderdale.

We now vote on the amendment moved by Mr. R. F. Nixon. Is it agreeable that the same vote be accepted?

I declare the amendment lost.

The vote, now, is on the motion made by Mrs. Scrivener. Will we take the same vote on that?

Hon. Mr. White: Let's make it unanimous.

Mr. Speaker: Same vote as recorded reversed?

Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I think the hon. member for Downsview had better resign.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendments lost. I declare the motion carried.

RESOLVED: That a humble address be presented to the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario:

May it please Your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech which Your Honour hath addressed to us.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, before the motion for adjournment, could the House leader advise us if it is the intention of the House that we proceed with the private bills committee at 10 o'clock this morning, some six hours from now?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, as I have said on other occasions, when the committees are constituted I endeavour not to interfere with their business, and I'm informed that the counsel has been informed and requested to be present this morning.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the House leader another question? Does he really think it's fair to the members of this House that this kind of procedure be carried on?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I can only repeat what I said before, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to have as guests with us today, in both galleries, students from Sir Mackenzie Bowell Public School of Belleville. At 3 o'clock this afternoon we will be joined by students from Barbados hosted by the Kitchener-Waterloo Collegiate and Vocational School.

Statements by the ministry.

TORONTO DOWNTOWN HOUSING

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. members will be aware of the situation with respect to Ontario Housing Corp. and the city of Toronto regarding the Sherbourne-Dundas block and will appreciate that speed was imperative because of the unusual circumstances involved.

We are pleased to advise the members that last Monday, April 9, negotiations were completed for an agreement between the city and OHC. The agreement was approved at a specially convened meeting of the OHC board of directors last Tuesday, April 10; Management Board of Cabinet approved it on the same date, and the cabinet gave approval yesterday. City council approved it at 2 o'clock this morning and Mayor Crombie, I'm pleased to say, signed the memorandum of agreement this morning at 11 o'clock.

At the same time I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to express my thanks to Mayor Crombie, his staff and city council for the dispatch with which they proceeded; also, I would like to give credit to the staff of OHC, which on some nights worked almost all night to get this thing prepared.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Especially Ald. Jaffary.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It's nice that Mayor Crombie bailed the government out on that one.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's statements like that which really delay things.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEARING IN PICKERING

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement I would like to make in connection with the Pickering hearings of the Environmental Hearing Board. I would like to read a letter which I received from the chairman a short time ago, dated April 12.

Some controversy has recently arisen with respect to the statement of Mr. Thomas A. Beckett, solicitor for the Group Against Garbage, and the affidavit of Miss Barbara Murray filed with the hearing board on April 11, 1973.

My own recollection of the conversation with Miss Murray is that on Wednesday, April 4, 1973, shortly after the conclusion of that day's proceedings before the board, a young lady, whom I do not recall having met on any previous occasion, introduced herself to me as Barbara Murray from Harriston. She did tell me that she had been part of the group known as DDT (Derail Dumps Today) formed in the township of Minto to oppose the establishment of a Metropolitan Toronto landfill site in that township.

In response to some remarks which she made about these matters, I told her that each hearing was different, and that the function of the board was merely to hold a hearing and to report thereon to the executive director, who considers the application after he has received and considered the report of the board.

In order to illustrate considerations which might arise during a hearing, I told her that the township of Minto was located inland on a height of land at the headwaters of three small streams, and that this was one difference between a possible site in Minto township and the proposed sites in Pickering and Port Hope, were located close to Lake Ontario, a large body of water, since the discharge of treated waste must be related to the volume of water into which it may eventually be discharged.

I did not tell Miss Murray that the Minto proposal would never be approved. No application for approval of a landfill site in Minto township has ever, to my knowledge, been filed by Metropolitan Toronto, and there has never accordingly been any Minto proposal to be considered. I did not tell Miss Murray that Lake Ontario was of sufficient size and oxygen content to handle the bacteria in the treated leachate effluent piped to it or that the Port Hope and Pickering sites met this requirement and were acceptable to me and should be approved. Nor did I tell Miss Murray that I would recommend approval of the Metropolitan Toronto application.

My conversation with Miss Murray was very brief, lasting only a very few minutes and the—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Very brief! It takes four pages to summarize that conversation.

Hon. Mr. Auld: To continue:

—the information which I gave her was intended simply as an illustration of one of the many matters which could arise during a hearing.

The function of the hearing board as defined by statute is merely to conduct a hearing and to report thereon to the executive director of the air and land pollution control division of the ministry. The executive director then considers the report of the board as one factor in making his decision to grant or deny an application for a certificate of approval.

Although I continued to hear the representations with respect to the application for the balance of the day after Mr. Beckett had filed his submissions, I now feel that in view of the publicity which my conversation with Miss Murray has been given, it might be said that justice would not appear to have been done if I were to continue to participate in the hearing and the preparation of the report of the board. I am therefore hereby advising you that I will not participate any further in these proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, I might just add to that that the other two members of the board, who include the vice-chairman, and who had been on the hearings in Pickering, will continue them. The chairman will not take any part in the discussions of the board on the report of the members of the board who are conducting the hearing, until such time as they have completed their report to the director.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) shouldn't be chairman of that board.

WELFARE MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated some weeks ago, we are meeting with other provinces and the federal government for three days, from April 25 to April 27, at a welfare ministers' conference at which we shall begin a serious review of our social income security system in Canada.

Studies have been proceeding for some time in the various provinces, including our own, looking at various approaches that should be taken in revamping our income security programmes. What we have today is a conglomeration of programmes, both in the social assistance and in the taxation fields.

With Canada's present social security programmes thus fragmented, there are only so many ways the programmes we have can be fixed and patched every time a new need appears. Therefore, we need to devise a more integrated approach in this area. With such a major overhaul of the system under consideration, we have decided not to make major changes in our programme at this time. We are confining ourselves to statements to the existing system.

Last December, I announced adjustments in the scale of rates we paid to persons on family benefits. The family benefits programme, as opposed to general welfare assistance, is designed to serve persons who require assistance for a longer period of time. We recognize that there are persons on general welfare assistance who are unable to work because of basic disabilities. These persons, who have been referred to as permanently unemployable, are, therefore, being transferred to the family benefits programme. We estimate that this transfer will involve about 12,000 persons in the province.

We met with larger municipalities late in March—a few weeks ago. They have assured us of their co-operation in the orderly transfer of these permanently unemployable persons from general welfare assistance to family benefits over a four-month period, commencing this month. We have also asked the municipalities to look at persons now in receipt of assistance who may qualify. It will, therefore, not be necessary for the individual person in receipt of general welfare assistance to take the initiative in being transferred to the family benefits programme. We will, however, continue to accept direct referrals from persons not in receipt of general welfare assistance and who feel that they may qualify as persons permanently unemployable.

We plan also, Mr. Speaker, to increase the shelter portion of allowances being received by all persons on general welfare assistance to the same level as those who are in receipt of family benefits. For a single person, this means increasing the existing rate of $47 to a maximum of $57 per month. For a couple, or a family—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): That's not too much.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —the maximum increase will be $15 per month. Where actual costs of shelter are less than these maximums, we will continue to pay the actual shelter costs. This change is being made—

Mr. Haggerty: The minister can't get by on that.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Shame! That's a disgrace.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —simply in recognition of the fact that the shelter needs of persons on temporary assistance are similar—

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Not much change in that.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —to those on long-term assistance, such as family benefits.

Mr. Lewis: So is their need for food and clothing.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: At the recent federal-provincial meeting, Mr. Speaker, held on Feb. 2 last in Ottawa, I made it perfectly clear—

Mr. Lewis: They eat too, like other people.

Mr. Martel: Does the minister think the cost of food hasn't increased in the last three years.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —that Ontario desires a complete rationalization of the income security area prior to any major alteration in any specific segment.

Mr. Lewis: In the meantime, this government starves them.

Mr. Martel: The government should be ashamed of itself.

Mr. Haggerty: The minister has tears in his eyes.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): That's one way of cutting down the rolls.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: No one can dispute that a great many of our senior citizens have an urgent need for increased income.

Mr. Laughren: Here it comes.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: But at the same time, Mr. Speaker, this is also true of those who are under 65 years of age—

Mr. Renwick: That's right!

Mr. Lewis: Absolutely!

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —such as the handicapped. That's why we believe that efforts to achieve co-ordination and integration of the whole social security system—

Mr. Renwick: They can't live in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —cannot be delayed any longer. Programmes are too fragmented and there are too many disparities.

As you are aware, since the conference in February, the federal government has announced an adjustment to the old age security, increasing the basic amount of a monthly pension that may be paid to any person to $100 per month. A single person formerly was receiving $82.88.

Mr. Lewis: No help from this government.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Now, with the combined old age security and the guaranteed income supplement, the allowance for a single person aged 65 and over has increased from $150 to $170.14 per month and for a couple from $285 to $324.60 per month.

Mr. Haggerty: What is this government's programme?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In Ontario, Mr. Speaker, some persons who are recipients of old age security are also receiving provincial benefits. These persons form two groups: one, those living in their own community; and, two, persons who are residents of institutions.

Those living in the community, who receive old age security and who also receive general welfare assistance or family benefits allowance, do so because they are in need in that they have a spouse or other dependants. Such a couple, or family, will be allowed to retain the recent increase in old age security and, thus, will enjoy a higher income.

With respect to residents of institutions, those receiving old age security will be permitted to retain up to $35 for their comforts. This represents an increase of $10 per month from the present $25 comfort allowance.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): About time.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Similarly, recipients of public assistance who reside in institutions—those who are not receiving the old age security pension—will also have their comfort allowance increased up to $35 per month.

Mr. Lewis: What happens to the rest of them?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: In conclusion, I would like to reiterate that we see these adjustments as being in the nature of temporary measures, pending our overall review of income security with the—

Mr. Martel: They starve in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —federal authorities and the other provinces.

Mr. Martell: It's a disgrace and the minister knows it.

WATERLOO LUTHERAN UNIVERSITY

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, I would like to acquaint the House with the proposals made to Waterloo Lutheran University last evening.

Responding to a request from Waterloo Lutheran University, the Ontario government has approved a recommendation from the Committee on University Affairs that the university become a public, non-denominational institution.

At present, church-related institutions at the university level may receive 50 per cent of operating formula support from the province. If Waterloo Lutheran University accepts the conditions qualifying for full funding, beginning in 1973-1974 operating grants will be adjusted over a period of years. At the end of that period, the dollar support for the new institution will reach the level provided to all provincially assisted universities under formula financing.

For Waterloo Lutheran to qualify for full formula support, a number of conditions will have to be met:

1. The institution cannot be affiliated with any religious denomination, in fact or name;

2. There can be no religious test for students or staff, and no compulsory religious subjects;

3. A new governing board, representative of the community, is to be established;

4. The capital assets of Waterloo Lutheran University are to be transferred to the new institution without the requirement of purchase but subject to negotiations regarding any compensation that might be deemed appropriate;

5. Enrolment in the new institution is to be limited initially to the present level;

6. Dr. Frank Peters, president of Waterloo Lutheran, is to confer with Dr. Matthews, president of the University of Waterloo, and a joint committee is to be established to ensure that the combined resources of the neighbouring universities are used to maximum advantage.

If Waterloo Lutheran's proposed change of status receives the approval of the Eastern Canada synod of the Lutheran Church in America, the ministry will establish a coordinating committee of ministry officials and representatives of the university to work out the details, including revision of the Waterloo Lutheran Act, 1967.

We are also indicating at this time that we are continuing our studies of recommendations from the Committee on University Affairs suggesting possible alternatives to the present arrangement for funding other church-related institutions. These, unlike Waterloo Lutheran University, are academically affiliated to provincially assisted universities.

I might say that we met last night with the chairman of the board and the president, and we acquainted them with our response. We heard from them this morning to this effect: that they were very pleased with our letter; the guidelines are clear, and they know the government's position. A number of points are open for negotiation and they have already made arrangements for a negotiating team consisting of representatives from the government, the church, and the university to meet next Wednesday at Queen's Park.

Dr Peters goes on to say:

I feel confident that those details which are the direct concern of the Eastern Canada synod of the Lutheran Church in America will be clarified in time for the synodical convention in June.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

ENVIRONMENTAL HEARING IN PICKERING

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of the Environment pertaining to the hearing of the Environmental Hearing Board and the withdrawal of the chairman, the member for Wellington-Dufferin:

Why would the minister leave the member for Wellington-Dufferin to continue as chairman of that board when it appears that wherever the hearings are going to be, and on almost any subject, there is bound to be some kind of a conflict of interest by virtue of the chairman's responsibility to his own constituency and by virtue of the fact that he is a member of this assembly, where the statutes are passed and the regulations are approved? Would the minister not move in his usual diplomatic way to replace the chairman and put in someone who does not have these built-in conflicts?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that there has been a case of any specific conflict of interest. I recall saying to the Leader of the Opposition last spring, when the papers were reporting that the CPR proposed to make an application for a site in the hon. member's riding, that if in fact that happened—although it didn't—I would ensure that the vice-chairman would conduct the hearings because there could well be a conflict of interest. There has been no other occasion when there was any appearance of conflict of interest.

In this case, the chairman quite properly took a course similar to that of a judge who, if someone questions his impartiality, doesn't argue whether or not he is impartial. He simply says somebody else should handle it, and I think that is the proper thing to do.

This had nothing to do with conflict of interest. It was an interpretation, apparently, that someone put on a conversation with the chairman which, as I read the papers, gave the impression that the board or the chairman had made up his mind about what he was going to recommend to the executive director.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: By way of supplementary, wouldn't there be a conflict—perhaps not the type that grabs the headlines—in the mind of the chairman who is aware that someone is proposing that garbage be dumped in the township in his area, in this case Minto township, when he is sitting on a hearing as to whether it should be dumped in Pickering? Whether or not there is a real conflict, there might be seen to be a conflict in the minds of those people who are desperately opposed to having a certificate of approval granted relating to Pickering or any other township.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I would say that that would apply to any member on the board. Obviously every member of the board has to live somewhere in Ontario.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Wouldn't the minister recognize that the present chairman, being the provincial representative for the constituency of Wellington-Dufferin, has a special responsibility to deal in the best interests, above all others, of those people who have elected him and who look to him for special concern and special representation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that we are looking at the setup and the operations of the board in relation to some of the things that were in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the minister recognize that he is seriously undermining public confidence in the Environmental Hearing Board, and as long as the member for Wellington-Dufferin is its chairman that will continue?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I don't agree with that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, if the minister feels that it is so important to the welfare of the province that the member for Wellington-Dufferin continue as chairman of the board, wouldn't the minister agree that, discretion being the better part of valour, he should ask the member for Wellington-Dufferin to resign his seat in the House? If the minister wants him on the board, put him on the board; if he wants him in the House, let him resign from the board.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Well, we will see if there is an answer to that one first.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Have a by-election.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I didn't really detect a question.

Mr. Singer: Yes; I said wouldn't the minister agree—that is how I started it.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that a chairman of a commission who does not have enough understanding of the need for public confidence should resign or at least withdraw from his position as chairman of a hearing when anyone casts any doubt whatsoever on his impartiality at a hearing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I think the chairman took the proper course in this particular instance.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He could have taken one more step, though.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As he indicated in his letter to me, which I read to the House a few moments ago, he does not agree with all the substance of the affidavit but I don't think there is any point in arguing about that at this point in time. As he says, if there has been damage done it has already been done, so he feels he should dissociate himself and I think he is right.

Mr. Deacon: He should have done it yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have another question of the same minister, Mr. Speaker, pertaining to the same hearing.

Is he aware that a representative of his ministry and another representative of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs have appeared at this hearing recommending the approval of Metro Toronto's plan to create a 1,500-acre sanitary landfill site; if they have appeared as has been alleged, does this mean that the government policy is to establish a landfill site in that locale?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen the transcript of the proceedings that have taken place this week. I understand, though, that in the normal course of events a representative from TEIGA would be involved. My understanding is that this was to indicate that there was apparently no objection from the planning people as to this particular location. It had nothing to do, of course, with the technical matters.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Since the representatives of two of the ministries have appeared favouring the application, surely this could be an influence on the decision?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think, and I stand to be corrected when I have seen the transcript, but my understanding is that neither the representative of my ministry—who was there, really, to answer technical questions of the board—nor TEIGA's representative, from the planning point of view recommended the site or sites. They simply said they had no objections to it as far as the technical planning aspect is concerned.

OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware that the Deputy Attorney General has filed a report in which he gives the opinion that the action of the Minister of Health in connection with the $55 million in health care premiums is in fact illegal?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): I was not aware of it, Mr. Speaker, and so I can make no comment at this time.

Mr. Lewis: Since it is a fictitious sum anyway they are just going to ignore the whole matter from here on.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Is the member against it?

Mr. Lewis: If the government wants to abolish premiums go ahead, we will support them.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Scarborough West have further question?

HAPPY VALLEY RELOCATION

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of the Environment: Now that the minister has decided to relocate the residents of Happy Valley, how are the costs to be apportioned among the government of Ontario, the regional government of Sudbury, Falconbridge—the company primarily responsible for the whole situation—and the residents themselves?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question at the moment.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: But isn't this a matter in which the company has the major responsibility, and shouldn't the company accept that responsibility, otherwise it may be very detrimental to the province in terms of dollars?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would point out that there were many other considerations to this decision to move the community other than those associated with the air pollution count.

For example all indications are that this would be a very difficult area to service—should it become necessary—with sewer and water facilities. Indications are that from an overall good planning point of view and saving the community tax dollars in the long run, in consideration of all these factors, the move is advisable.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Laughren: My question concerns the air pollution problem, which is at the root of this matter. If the reading exceeds 32 for 60 consecutive hours, Mr. Speaker, how many times is that considered to be for going over the permitted level?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I would assume that it is only one time.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That's why I said that I think the total—the 245—referred to total hours during that period, rather than total days.

Mr. Martel: Further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the regional municipality of Sudbury has submitted a letter to the residents asking them to provide all the financial statements of their own personal position, doesn't the minister agree that that is an incorrect position for the municipality to take; in view of the fact that the people did not create the problem, and that their own financial position has nothing to do with that problem?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I can't comment on that because I haven't seen the letter and I'm not aware of the reasoning behind it. I'm sure the hon. member will keep me informed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Sudbury East has written the minister a letter. I have a copy.

WCB AND OLRB EXCLUSION FROM ACT

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Provincial Secretary for Justice, Mr. Speaker? Is it the intention of the Justice secretariat in general to continue the exclusion of the Workmen's Compensation Board and the Ontario Labour Relations Board from the provisions of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act beyond April 17, 1973?

Mr. Singer: Does the member really expect him to know that?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Mr. Speaker, this of course will be finally decided by the particular ministry, which would be the Minister of Labour, and the cabinet. It is my understanding now that the Workmen's Compensation Board or the Workmen's Compensation Act will be excluded, the extension will be continued—

Mr. Lewis: That's definite?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes. However, I don't believe any decision has been made yet as far as the Labour Relations Act is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Can I ask by way of supplementary—and a quick redirection to the Minister of Labour—will a statement on its effect on the Ontario Labour Relations Act be made on or before April 17?

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, this is a matter of government policy, and as soon as this policy has been determined I will be pleased to make a statement.

Mr. Lewis: We certainly welcome the announcement about the Workmen's Compensation Board.

BUDGET 'LEAK'

Mr. Lewis: Can I ask the Premier a question: In the best British parliamentary tradition, for which he has reverence, will he consider requesting the resignation of the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White) for the extraordinary leak in the primary point to be made in today's budget; a leak which preceded the budget and which has very serious implications for the economic community?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I read or heard—and I'm not sure which—a very close colleague of the leader of the New Democratic Party making certain predictions, if that is the source of the so-called leak I think it is fair to state that I am very confident that there have been no discussions between the provincial Treasurer of this province and the financial critic of the New Democratic Party. As a result of that very obvious assurance, there is just no intention of even considering the resignation of the provincial Treasurer—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: For those reasons?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —because of the guesses given by the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. Lewis: Well, the Premier could replace him with the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter). Might I ask just one further question—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am still waiting to hear anxiously at 4 o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: We'll see whether the prediction of the member for York South is right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Now he calls it a prediction; I thought it was a leak?

Mr. Singer: Why not ask the member for York South to resign because he gave away this secret information?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I presume a lot of members bought furniture in the last 24 hours and benefited from the two per cent.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Mr. Lewis: Can I ask the Minister of Education whether he is now aware that the task force on early childhood education consists of six persons, only one of whom is a woman?

How does that reconcile itself with the speech made by his colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mr. Welch)—under whose secretariat this task force was in fact recommended—with his grand protestations in the House the other night that he and the government had taken to heart the provisions of the committee on the status of women and that we would see that emerge in government appointments? How can this be reconciled?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I don't know that it has to be reconciled. I think my friend will have to ask the Provincial Secretary for Social Development about the task force. He appointed the task force and we appointed our member on the task force. I think he'll have to direct questions concerning it to my colleague. But certainly his statement of policy, whatever may have been the case in the past—it may have been that we erred a bit in certain areas there; that may have happened in the past, and I'm not prepared to admit that it did happen—

Mr. Cassidy: We wouldn't expect the minister to do that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —if it did, my colleague's statement of policy stands as our course for the future.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General has the answer to a question previously asked.

SUSPENSION OF OTTAWA POLICEMAN

Hon. J. Yaremko (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview has asked the question:

Is the Solicitor General aware of the difficulty existing on the police force in Ottawa which resulted in the disciplining by suspension of a member of that police force who was a member of the anti-theft bicycle squad? Has the minister looked into, or would he look into, the advisability of laying criminal charges in this case and not just dealing with it by a private police disciplinary hearing?

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): We got an answer to that in the Ottawa Journal two weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why did the member for Downsview ask it?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It came after the question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It's a pity the hon. member didn't give a copy of the Ottawa Journal to his friends. Don't they talk to each other in caucus?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What caucus? Can you imagine those people over there agreeing to anything?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the minister has exceeded his time.

Mr. Speaker: Almost.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If the hon. member had listened to the Throne Speech contribution of the member for Downsview—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Will the minister answer the question please.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I have apprised myself of the situation to which the hon. member has referred. Four men of varying ranks were charged under the Police Act and each convicted. Punishment was imposed in all four cases and in each case the punishment was confirmed by the Board of Commissioners of Police for the city of Ottawa.

Concerning the second part of the question—that is, the matter of laying criminal charges—that was considered by the force and the opinion of a solicitor was sought. It was the solicitor's advice not to proceed with criminal charges.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, before the minister gets into another question: Would the minister not agree that theft by a police officer of a bicycle should be dealt with in a more realistic fashion than in a secret disciplinary hearing?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity of reviewing the whole file and I was satisfied that this was a matter of internal discipline. It was dealt with properly there. It was confirmed by the Board of Commissioners of Police. Advice was sought from a solicitor and given. In the light of all that, I am satisfied that there is nothing further that the ministry should do in this regard.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, wouldn't the Solicitor General agree that there could be nothing worse for the administration of justice than to have a policeman who engages in theft? Shouldn't the Solicitor General do something about that, rather than encourage private hearings?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has stated one fact. I have not gone into the details of the charges that were laid.

Mr. Singer: That is what it is all about.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have reviewed the file and I am satisfied that what has been done has been in accordance with the procedures that have been laid down. This is not to say that theft charges or any other charges could not have been laid under the Criminal Code.

I am satisfied on review of the matter that the thing has been properly dealt with by those who have been given the responsibility of dealing with the matter.

REMOVAL OF BOOKS FROM CIRCULATION

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member also asked this question: "Could the Solicitor General advise us whether or not the various steps set out in section 160 of the Criminal Code have been followed—" and I quote his words—"subsequent to the seizure by the Metropolitan Toronto police of the books written by—" I can never say her first name—"Miss Hollander—"

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Give her her title.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —commonly known as 'the Happy Hooker.'"

Mr. Roy: Commonly known as Holly Baby.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I think the hon. members will know who I'm talking about.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Yes, we got it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The answer to the hon. member's question is twofold. First, the Metropolitan Toronto police force has not seized any of the books written by Miss Hollander; and secondly, no information for the forfeiture of the books has been laid under section 160 of the Criminal Code—

Mr. Haggerty: Did the minister autograph her book?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —therefore the section for seizure does not have to be followed.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: If the police did not seize those books as the press seem to indicate pretty positively, what exactly was the role that the Metropolitan Toronto police did play? Did they in fact prohibit the sale of those books in some of the stores, and if so how?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the Metropolitan Toronto police have adopted a practice I believe which has been accepted to some degree in the business. When the Toronto police get complaints from sources, they express an opinion to the distributors and then the distributors are perfectly clear: They can continue selling the books, and therefore await an information being laid, and section 160 being carried out; or they can exercise a judgement based on an opinion given to them, and withdraw the books from sale.

Mr. Singer: One more supplementary: Did the police cart away some of those books?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: My advice is that no books were seized.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

Mr. Ruston: The member for High Park stole them.

An hon. member: How many has he got left?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Ruston: Don't answer his question. He should be charged. Collect his sales tax.

Mr. C. E. McIlveen (Oshawa): Here is the happy hooker himself.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, if no books were seized, can the minister explain the books that were taken from Lichtman's News Depot on York St., across from the Globe and Mail, a receipt for which was signed by detective Fenton?

Mr. Lewis: That's interesting.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether what the hon. member has described is a question of seizure or not. They may have used it as a way of getting rid of them.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on!

Mr. Martel: They are giving them away?

Mr. Shulman: Is the minister denying that these books were seized from that book store?

Mr. Singer: He did deny it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of that particular—

Mr. Singer: Oh no, he denied it. Now he is changing his answer.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I said so far as I know—

Mr. Singer: He said no book were seized. That is what he said.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —they haven't seized any books. Now if the proprietor saw fit to deliver up his books.

Mr. Singer: The minister is deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Shulman: The police deliberately walked in and took them.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

Mr. Singer: The minister is deliberately misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Never!

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Downsview should not make such a statement. I direct him to withdraw the statement.

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Mr. Speaker: I direct the hon. member for Downsview to withdraw the statement.

Mr. Singer: Which statement, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: That the hon. minister is deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I only take it from his own words. He told me—

Mr. Speaker: I heard him say it. The hon. member for Downsview will please withdraw the statement.

Mr. Bullbrook: How can he?

Mr. Singer: I cannot, Mr. Speaker; if the hon. minister has made two contradictory statements—

Mr. Speaker: I ask the hon. member, and give him this opportunity to withdraw the statement.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot withdraw the statement because the minister has contradicted himself twice in three minutes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Now which one of the minister's answers is right?

Mr. Lewis: He will go to any length not to have to hear.

Mr. Speaker: For the last time I ask the hon. member for Downsview to withdraw a statement which is definitely, positively against the rules of propriety in any Parliament. He may not accuse another hon. member of deliberately misleading the House. I ask him to withdraw the statement.

Mr. Lewis: Well, with one exception.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would surely think that there must be an exception when the minister has proved in two consecutive answers that he has given two kinds of information. In one case he says it didn't happen—and two minutes later he says it did. One of those statements is wrong and one of those statements was deliberately misleading. That is all I said.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister is either venal or stupid.

An hon. member: Sit down.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of order; first of all the point of order raised by the leader of the NDP. It shows the kind of indecision there is in that party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Speaking to the point of order raised by the member for Downsview.

Mr. Bullbrook: He didn't raise any point of order.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The member for Scarborough West called it a point of order.

Mr. Singer: The Speaker raised the point of order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes, with respect to the withdrawal, the member of Downsview is on the horns of a dilemma—he has been there before.

Mr. Singer: No, I'm not. The minister is.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The minister has made one statement; the member for High Park has contradicted him. So the member has to make a choice.

Mr. Lewis: It is impossible!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I suggest to the hon. member that two members of the Supreme Court have ruled upon the way he speaks the truth. No Supreme Court judge has ruled upon me.

Mr. Shulman: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: There is only one member of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Shulman: On the point of order raised by my leader, I wish to point out to the minister that it is a very difficult decision to make.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): It wasn't a point of order at all.

Mr. Speaker: The point before the House is simply the exchange that took place between the hon. minister and other members of the House. The hon. member for Downsview said that the hon. minister deliberately misled the House.

The hon. minister did say that he was advised as to certain things—

Mr. Lewis: I don't think that is true.

Mr. Speaker:—and in my estimation there was no deliberation on the part of the hon. minister to have misled the House.

Mr. Cassidy: He is wrong, but he didn't mean to be wrong.

Mr. Speaker: I do believe that the hon. member for Downsview should withdraw the statement that the minister deliberately misled the House.

Mr. Shulman: He is just ignorant!

Mr. Lewis: And I withdraw "venal". I have come to a conclusion.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, at your suggestion I will withdraw the phrase "deliberately misled the House." But I would say, sir, that if you could explain to me how a minister—

Mr. McIlveen: That is nothing.

Mr. G. Nixon (Dovercourt): He's going to miss the budget speech.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Just change it to "misled" without "deliberately."

Mr. Singer: I would say, sir, would you please carefully consult the edition of Hansard that will follow this debate and advise me in due course how a minister can give two absolutely conflicting answers and still not mislead the House.

Mr. Reilly: The member does it all the time.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: And it's not by being venal.

Mr. Speaker: I will be very pleased to do that. I might only comment that such statements may well be made in the House from time to time but not deliberately—there is a great difference.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, ministers do make mistakes?

Mr. Speaker: To the hon. member for St. George, yes.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa East.

ACTION OF FORMER MINISTER OF HEALTH

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Lawrence).

Apparently he was Minister of Health at the time that the Ontario Health Insurance Commission made a decision on the non-collection of OHIP premiums, and apparently he was aware of this decision. Would he not agree that his incompetence as Minister of Health was exceeded only by his lack of legal knowledge and that maybe he should turn in his badge as a lawyer to the Law Society?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski: (Renfrew South): What a smart aleck! What a punk!

Mr. Martel: He is not even putting his feet on the desk.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

POLLUTION CONTROLS FOR MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, perhaps with an assist from his seat-mate, the Minister of the Environment:

In view of Washington's action in postponing effective pollution controls on motor cars until 1976, and in view of the fact that such controls must be on motor vehicles sold in California in 1975, will the minister mandate the same pollution controls on motor vehicles for Ontario as those in California for the model year 1975? Or if he hasn't that power, will he and his seat-mate make very strong representations to Ottawa that the same treatment be effective in Ontario as in California?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will defer to my colleague on this matter. It is more properly within his ministry.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, in essence what has happened is the EPA, I assume, announced a one year delay in the introduction of proposed additional emission controls for cars which were planned for the 1975-1976 model years. They have given a one year hoist on the 1975 models.

However, we are not sure of this. The announcement was made yesterday. It appears that the postponement in the US has been qualified by a proposal to introduce interim, less stringent controls over hydrocarbon and carbon monoxide emissions. It has not yet been possible to determine just what this will mean to air quality standards in Ontario, but I think I should say that it is quite certain that in no place in Ontario have we encountered the pollution problems caused by cars in Los Angeles, New York City and certain of the areas in New Jersey.

On March 22, 1973, the hon. Jack Davis, the federal Minister of the Environment, announced that he intended to comply with the rules applied by the Environmental Protection Agency in the US. I have not yet learned whether that applies to the hoist or whether he proposes to go ahead with the old 1975 standards.

Mr. Young: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not consider that in view of the action of California and the action now just announced by Japan, that these controls must be installed for the 1975 models, that this is a real opportunity for Canada to give some leadership in this whole field?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'd simply say that we want to remember, I think it was the National Academy of Sciences in the United States that predicted that between costs of control systems, extra gasoline and maintenance, the cost of running the average car fitted with the controls proposed for 1975 would increase by about $250 per car per year. I have no idea what the cost of enforcement of proper maintenance standards of this equipment would be.

I have stated on other occasions that in relation to the control standards required for Los Angeles, particularly because of its peculiar meteorological conditions, caused apparently by its geography, I have grave doubts whether those standards are required in other places in the United States, and certainly in Canada.

Mr. Young: One final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister has mentioned the increased costs, but I wonder if the minister is pressing for skipping of one model year in the motor car industry, which would more than offset the cost of increased pollution to health?

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): Well asked!

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What do the minister's friends in Oshawa think of that? The minister is really looking after his friends in Oshawa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Weland South.

FUEL COSTS

Mr. Haggerty: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the policy minister for natural resources. In view of a possible fuel crisis in Canada, and particularly in Ontario, is the government contemplating any policy to apply a freeze on home oil, natural gas, gasoline and other fuels to control any further price increases?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): I know of no such consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

TRUCK DRIVING PRACTICES

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Has the minister yet received the report of the task force studying the driving habits and practices of those involved in the trucking industry? If not, when does he expect to receive it?

Hon. Mr. Carton: No, I haven't received it yet, Mr. Speaker.

I presume the member is referring to the driving habits. No I have not received it, but it should be forthcoming within the next few weeks.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services has the answer to a question previously asked.

FAMILY COURT PROCEDURES

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this is in reply to a question posed by the hon. member for St. George. She requested clarification of our procedure with respect to the method followed in enforcing family court orders.

The first principle we have to keep in mind is the husband's legal responsibility to support his wife and family. When a court issues a judgement in an order for the husband to pay and, when he subsequently fails to obey that order, follow-up practice varies from one court to another. The matter of family court procedure is, of course, outside the jurisdiction of this ministry. In appropriate circumstances, the wife is expected to assist in the practice of enforcing follow-up orders.

In some areas of the province we are now taking direct action on an experimental basis. I would like to draw to the hon. member's attention a recent amendment to the regulation under the General Welfare Assistance Act, which was gazetted on Jan. 27 last.

Mr. Foulds: Get on with the question!

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: It reads as follows:

In determining whether a person in need is eligible for assistance, a welfare administrator shall be satisfied that the person is making reasonable efforts to realize any financial benefit, or obtain compensation that he may be entitled to or eligible for.

While the hon. member has not raised the question of initiating court action in cases of desertion, where the wife has applied for family benefits, our objective is to ensure that the action taken by the wife is consistent with the principle of the husband being legally responsible for the support of his wife and children, and with the principle of determining each individual case on its own merits. In those cases where the woman is in danger, or where there is hope of a reconciliation, we waive the necessity for laying a charge.

Mrs. Campbell: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I'm somewhat puzzled by the answer.

Is the minister aware that it is the policy of this government, as enunciated by the civil servants in the Attorney General's department, to take the position that philosophically it is wrong for this government to use the weight of its power against a man to make him support his wife and children? Is there not then, Mr. Speaker, a great inconsistency in the statements of the two departments — although in this case it is the minister speaking and in the other it was a civil servant? Could I have clarification on that point?

Secondly, the question was, when the minister is in receipt of the moneys from the husband, is it still his position that he should force the wife to make a declaration on hearsay evidence? Why wouldn't his department, being in receipt of the money, be the one to enforce the order?

That was the question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member, with her years of experience as a judge in the family court, is very well versed in this matter, but I think she will appreciate that this is a very grey area. That is why, as mentioned earlier, the Ontario Law Reform Commission has a study under way.

Mr. Cassidy: It is always grey where women's rights are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Yesterday afternoon I received a submission from a group who are presenting this to the Metro social welfare council and I would like to say to the hon. member that in the past year, the number of deserted wives has quadrupled.

Therefore we feel that this area really has to be looked at very carefully and, as I mentioned in my remarks, we are not unmindful—

Mr. Lewis: All the more reason to answer the question.

Mr. Cassidy: They'll study it to death while women suffer.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: —of those very deserving cases and that is why we are waiting — that she should lay other charges.

Mr. Cassidy: The situation right now is scandalous.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: But again, I would like to repeat that this is a very difficult area and I would be pleased if some time when it is convenient, the hon. member could meet with our people, along with officials of the Attorney General's department — because some of the legislation comes under their aegis—to see if we can't get the benefit of her views.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kent is next.

LONDON CENTRE FOR HANDICAPPED

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. Is the minister planning to take action to ensure that the facilities for the resident students at the London regional centre for the hearing handicapped are completed by September, to relieve the pressure on the overcrowded schools at Milton and Belleville?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, certainly I'm expecting that the new regional centre in London will open next fall. I haven't really had anything to the contrary drawn to my attention, so as of now I'm expecting that's what will happen.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

RUMOURS OF INCO LAYOFF

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: Has the minister been advised by the International Nickel Co. of any impending layoff of the work force substantial enough in numbers to warrant notification to the work force under the Employment Standards Act?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: No, Mr. Speaker. To my knowledge there has been no communication from Inco at Sudbury. I will make it a point to find out for the hon. member.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker! Would the minister inquire into this and issue a statement, because would the minister not agree that the kind of persistent rumours that are circulating in the Sudbury basin now create an atmosphere of real insecurity in the area? Would he please issue a public statement on it?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with my hon. friend. I think there have been rumours which have been denied but not officially, but I'll find out for him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo North is next.

POLLUTION PROBLEM AT CANADIAN GYPSUM

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment.

In view of the many extensions granted to the Canadian Gypsum plant, Weston, on the completion of the installation of its pollution abatement equipment, and his statement that everything would be completed by March 1, 1973, can the minister inform the House that all matters related to the abatement and control programme have now been completed and tell us the cost of the complete installation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer in detail; I understand that matters have been completed. I also understand that the cost which was originally estimated at around $650,000 has climbed to about $1 million. I think there still may be one prosecution which has not been completely dealt with by the courts. I will get an up-to-date report for the hon. member and get it to him tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

ECONOMIC EFFECTS OF RELOCATING PERSONNEL

Mr. Stokes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources.

In the reorganization of his ministry in many places throughout the province, has he taken into consideration the severe social impact that either a curtailment in the number of personnel or a relocation of a number of the personnel could have on the economies of many small communities in the north, such as Armstrong, Beardmore and White River?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Natural Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do want to thank the member for asking me this question because it is something that is very close to me, coming from northwestern Ontario. I can assure him that all these aspects were taken into consideration when we broadened the services of our ministry from 21 districts to 49 districts. Our main thrust, of course, was to provide services to a broader range of the general public and to bring the decision-making process closer to the people.

The aspects to which the member refers were very carefully considered.

Mr. Stokes: As a supplementary: In any place where it can be brought to the attention of the minister that it is, in fact, working an undue hardship, will he defer any relocation of personnel until such time as other arrangements can be made?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if it is creating an undue hardship, I would be glad to review it.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Sorry, the time for oral questions has now expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Apps presented the annual report of the Ministry of Correctional Services for the year ending March 31, 1972.

Hon. Mr. Bernier presented the annual reports of the Ontario Energy Board, the St. Clair Parkway Commission and the St. Lawrence Parks Commission.

Mr. Lewis: Three reports!

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is pretty prolific today.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Ah, we're efficient—Natural Resources on the move.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a report from the standing procedural affairs committee.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! Would the hon. member please repeat it? There was too much noise. I couldn't hear a word that was said.

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the member make a statement about reservoirs?

Mr. Henderson: Wait; we will in the fullness of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Henderson, from the standing procedural affairs committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Township of Gloucester;
 Board of Education for the City of London;
 City of Windsor;
 Town of Vaughan;
 New Augarita Porcupine Mines Ltd.;
 City of Toronto;
 To incorporate the Association of Natural Resources Technicians of Ontario;

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill Pr21, An Act respecting the City of London.

Bill Pr30 An Act respecting the City of London.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

USE OF PESTICIDES ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to control the Use of Pesticides.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, without going into detailed explanation at this point, I would say that in general most of the provisions in the new bill are adaptations or copies of similar provisions in the Environmental Protection Act, but there are two new features:

One is the requirement that a person responsible for a pesticide take whatever steps are prescribed by the regulations for decontaminating anything unlawfully contaminated by that pesticide, and such a person is prohibited from using any such thing unless the prescribed decontamination has been carried out. The person responsible is defined as being not only the owner of the pesticide, but the person having the management or the control of it or its handling, storage, use, disposal, transportation and display, and this would include the owner or occupant of land, water, vehicle or a building which has been unlawfully contaminated. As I say, it's a new provision. At present the regulations require cleaning and decontamination in general terms only.

Secondly, authority is given to make regulations regulating or prohibiting the display or disposal of a pesticide, regulating the transportation of designated pesticides by motor vehicle on a highway or road, prescribing the records to be kept by persons responsible for such transportation, prescribing decontaminating procedures, and for controlling the removal or disposal of any substance unlawfully contaminated by a pesticide.

Mr. G. E. Smith moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting Simcoe Day.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, in this session I am introducing my bill honouring Governor Simcoe.

The purpose of the bill is to change the name of the public holiday celebrated in many municipalities on the first Monday in August from Civic Holiday to Simcoe Day, in honour of John Graves Simcoe, who was appointed first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada on Sept. 12, 1791, and who convened the first legislative assembly and established the capital of the province at York, now Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, I have received considerable support for this bill and it is my hope that I will receive the favourable consideration of this House.

Mr. B. Newman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the City of Windsor.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Lewis: Before the orders of the day, if I may, Mr. Speaker, on two points to the House. First, might the House leader arrange to have copies of the budget available for members at 4 o'clock—to sing along with the Treasurer, as it were?

And, secondly, if I may ask the House leader—with reference to discussions earlier during the Throne debate—about the proceedings tomorrow morning, which concern some of us: Is it, in fact, true that there will be a simultaneous hearing of estimates from the same Justice secretariat in the House and in committee?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would expect not.

Mr. Lewis: Fine.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: And in regard to the budget, I would certainly enjoy the member's happy co-operation and I'll do my best to see that they're distributed.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, may I just for a moment inquire in that connection—

Mr. Cassidy: The budget is Ontario's version of "The Happy Hooker."

Mr. Bullbrook: Through you, Mr. Speaker, may we have some assurance that we will not be called upon to debate the estimates of the Solicitor General concurrently with the estimates of the Attorney General (Mr. Bales)—one in this House and one in committee?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I believe that that is the idea of this. As I said the other day, I do my utmost not to interfere with the functions of the committee, but I think that the suggestion is correct and I will act accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ARADCO MANAGEMENT LTD. AND OAK STAMPING LTD. ACT

Mr. Burr moves second reading of Bill Pr1, An Act Respecting Aradco Management Ltd. and Oak Stamping Ltd.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF HAMILTON ACT

Mr. J. R. Smith moves second reading of Bill Pr2, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, before this bill passes through the House, I do want to urge upon the government that it seriously consider general legislation which would prevent this sort of thing having to be brought before the private bills committee ever again. It seems—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): They said so in committee.

Mr. Deans: Well, the hon. member for Sarnia says he thought they gave us such an assurance in committee. The unfortunate part about the committee is that an assurance from the representative of the government in the committee is hardly any assurance at all. The unfortunate part is that we have had, from time to time, to deal with matters pertaining to the protection of municipal councillors and their right to speak what they believe to be the truth without there being the opportunity or the possibility of suit. I feel that the same rights which are afforded all members of the Legislature certainly ought to be afforded members of municipal and regional councils, or for that matter all members who are elected to office in the Province of Ontario.

Frankly, I support this only because it would be wrong to impose upon these people the great cost which may well have to be borne by them if they had to proceed through the courts on their own initiative as a result of the suit that has been brought against them. Nevertheless, I hope that we'll never again have to deal with legislation of this kind in any future undertakings of any municipal councillor and that the government will proceed during this session—not next session—to introduce suitable changes to whatever legislation is required in order to ensure this will never occur again.

Mr. Speaker: I should point out, with respect to the hon. member, that he was not speaking to the principle of this bill. There is nothing in the bill regarding the remarks the hon. member made and, strictly speaking, he should have confined his remarks to the content, the principle, of this bill, although the remarks are well taken. I permitted him to continue for the benefit of those remarks.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

EAST YORK FOUNDATION ACT

Mr. Timbrell moves second reading of Bill Pr3, An Act respecting East York Foundation.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SIMCOE AND ERIE GENERAL INSURANCE CO. ACT

Mr. Eaton, in the absence of Mr. Ewen, moves second reading of Bill Pr6, An Act respecting Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Co.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

RELIABLE LIFE INSURANCE CO. ACT

Mr. Eaton, in the absence of Mr. Ewen, moves second reading of Bill Pr7, An Act respecting Reliable Life Insurance Co.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CONSTITUTION INSURANCE CO. OF CANADA ACT

Mr. Reilly moves second reading of Bill Pr8, An Act respecting Constitution Insurance Co. of Canada.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWN OF ORANGEVILLE ACT

Mr. Downer moves second reading of Bill Pr9, An Act respecting the Town of Orangeville.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

VILLAGE OF GLENCOE ACT

Mr. Eaton moves second reading of Bill Pr10, An Act respecting the Village of Glencoe.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): With regard to the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, I think this is something that should be taken into consideration in future legislation. We found, in this case, that the town of Glencoe was building an arena with funds approved by the provincial government from another department of government, and without Ontario Municipal Board approval. Now, of course, it's built so we have no alternative to approving their selling debentures.

tures and, as such, bypassing the Ontario Municipal Board.

I don't have any objections that way except that I think it's rather difficult when other municipalities are in the same situation. Maybe they have a lot of private funds to go ahead and they need some public funding. They're in a hurry to build and they do not take all the steps that maybe should be taken because they feel that the delays in the Ontario Municipal Board hearings sometimes are as long as a year and costs sometimes increase 10 per cent over that period.

It would appear to me that for some municipalities it may be much more economical for them to go in this direction rather than in the proper direction, which is through the hearings of the Ontario Municipal Board. I would hope that the government in the near future would take steps to see that municipalities could get this approval without such long delays.

Mr. Speaker: The comments of the hon. member are no doubt comments that were made at the private bills committee, and properly should have been dealt with there rather than at second reading in the House. The principle of his remarks is something a little apart from the content of this bill. Since I permitted the hon. member for Wentworth to proceed, I permitted the hon. member for Essex-Kent to do likewise. I should point out to the hon. members that in future there should be no such wide-ranging debate on the principle of private bills while the House is in session.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

BOROUGH OF SCARBOROUGH ACT

Mr. Drea moves second reading of Bill Pr11, An Act respecting the Borough of Scarborough.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill Pr1, An Act respecting Aradco Management Ltd. and Oak Stamping Ltd.

Bill Pr2, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before the next motion is put, I just thought I might address a question to the government benches. If any of the hon. members wish to question any of these private bills, I wonder who might answer the questions. Usually the movers don't.

I note that the minister responsible for municipal affairs, to which most of these bills relate, isn't here. I note that the minister responsible for corporate matters, to which some of these bills relate, isn't here. I just wonder how the business of the House can be logically carried on when those ministers who have accepted, or whose civil servants have accepted, some responsibilities in regard to these private bills just aren't here in the House to answer questions.

Mr. A. J. Roy (Ottawa East): Good point!

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Is the Minister of Revenue going to say something?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Does the member think we should be here all day long?

Mr. Singer: No. When bills the minister is concerned with are here, I think he should be here, yes. Yes, I do; I think that's fair. Even the minister would think that's fair.

THIRD READINGS

Bill Pr3, An Act respecting the East York Foundation.

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting Simcoe and Erie General Insurance Co.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering who I might ask, who is knowledgeable about company matters, whether or not adequate recommendations have come forward from the companies' branch officials in connection with this application. It has a substantial principle at stake and the transference of—

Mr. R. G. Eaton (Middlesex South): This is a private bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe this bill was passed by the private bills committee, and questions have been asked about it.

Mr. Singer: Oh yes, but I am entitled to speak on third reading, Mr. Speaker. I think it might be of some substantial interest, even when the bill went through second reading, that there could be somebody here who would accept the responsibility, which logically lies with government, to answer some questions or to make some presentations.

Mr. D. W. Ewen (Wentworth North): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, these were well discussed in private bills committee. The member had an opportunity to discuss them at that time.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): That's not a point of order.

Mr. Eaton: He's a member of the committee and he wasn't there.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): He wasn't there, eh?

An hon. member: Is he a member of the committee?

Mr. Eaton: Yes, he is a member of that committee and he wasn't there.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! This bill has been duly processed by the standing bills committee and the necessary steps were taken at that time.

Mr. Bullbrook: For my edification, Mr. Speaker, would you please explain to me, as one member of this House, what necessary steps were taken that absolved the government of the responsibility to reply in connection with questions that might be put forward or comments made by my colleague from Downsview?

Mr. Speaker: As I understand it, the necessary certificates were presented in the proper way.

Mr. Singer: We are not questioning the advertising of the legislation.

Mr. Bullbrook: He is not questioning the formalities or the propriety of the legislation. The point and the comment he is making, and I suggest quite rightly Mr. Speaker, is who is to answer for the government in connection with any position they might take relative to this bill.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I was on the private bills committee and, on reconsideration this afternoon, found it was not thoroughly discussed. As a matter of fact, I had revelations overnight that the bill is thoroughly defective. Now what do we do in those circumstances?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! It was presented to the House and the report was adopted.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, then on a point of order, are you now telling us that any private bill that comes here and is presented for third reading cannot be discussed on third reading; and that the House is here as a rubber stamp?

Mr. Bullbrook: And we can't change our minds?

Mr. Singer: Are you saying that the expression just given voice to by the member for Lakeshore is meaningless; that he hasn't got a right to stand in his place and express his doubts; and that he hasn't got a right to get an answer from the minister? That is nonsense!

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Are you saying that on third readings, members don't ask questions and they have no right at all?

Mr. Speaker: I haven't been in private bills committee, but it is my understanding that a full discussion had taken place, the report had been duly processed and then adopted by the House.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, you don't get my point.

Mr. Bullbrook: Most respectfully!

Mr. Singer: Most respectfully, of course! If what you say is correct, then why do we go through the stupid charade of calling the bill for third reading, or for second reading?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So that members get a chance to vote against it if they want to.

Mr. Singer: Surely we can talk against it as well and expect that there is going to be somebody over in those benches who has some kind of an answer.

Mr. Roy: Show us in standing orders where we can't talk about it.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I don't happen to be a member of the private bills committee. Are you precluding me from making comments on this bill if I wish to do so?

Mr. Singer: That's right!

Mr. Deans: Why doesn't the member speak on it.

Mr. B. Newman: You are ruling that we can't make comments.

Mr. Speaker: Order please! I believe one of the members, and I forget which one it was, referred to some certificate which had been presented. I understand it comes from one of the members here.

I understand it has been presented to the committee. You may speak on third reading.

Mr. Singer: That's what we are trying to do.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, with great respect, the point which the hon. member for Downsview is trying to make is that he really feels that all the ministers should be in their seats here when private bills are being discussed so they can be questioned. I suggest to you, sir, with great respect, that any member who is sponsoring a private bill should be prepared to answer for the matters related to that private bill, which was discussed in private bills committee.

Mr. Singer: Oh, nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To suggest that all the ministers be present at all times with such a volume of private bills going through every session is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): They should be there.

Mr. Speaker: This is not a government bill. It is a private bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: Of course, Mr. Speaker, no one here would take the ludicrous, ridiculous, asinine position that all the members of the government have to be in their seats to answer private bills. No one said that, through you or to you, Mr. Speaker. It is an example of the picayune exaggeration that particular minister gets into every time he recognizes the validity of a position taken by the opposition.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nonsense!

Mr. Speaker: Order please. This is not a government bill and is not answerable by any minister.

Mr. Bullbrook: With respect, may I say to you, my colleague from Downsview has never said that it was a public bill. The only point he makes is that as a member of the Legislature he is entitled to ask the minister responsible for the administration of the bill, what his thoughts might be with respect to it. That's all he is saying. Is that too much?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): The member for Sarnia will make a better leader.

An hon. member: It's a private bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

THIRD READINGS

Bill Pr7, An Act respecting reliable Life Insurance Co.

Bill Pr8, An Act respecting Constitution Insurance Co. of Canada.

Bill Pr9, An Act respecting the Town of Orangeville.

Bill Pr10, An Act respecting the Village of Glencoe.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on Bill Pr10, this is enshrining a principle that I've objected to over many years, and that is that there is much looseness and lack of control in municipal councils who come before us year after year asking that we regularize sloppy and loose procedures that they should have taken care of. I don't think that this House should continue to be beset every year by a series of bills like this, where the local municipal council has neglected to take the clearly authorized steps set out in the Municipal Act.

The amount here is not large, but the municipality is not very large. Obviously they missed the steps that are laid out, that every municipal clerk should know, and they didn't apply to the Ontario Municipal Board to get the necessary approvals for this expenditure of $275,000.

I don't think that this House should pass this bill unless and until we get some indication from whichever minister might be responsible for municipal affairs as to what he is going to do about it. I've complained about this for many, many years, and the ministers of municipal affairs say: "Well, it doesn't happen very often"; and: "Really, we're not going to send all these people to jail"; and: "Really, they spent the money and it wouldn't be nice if we didn't give them an authorizing bill to regularize their sloppiness"; and so on.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come that we should have a pretty clear statement from the minister responsible as to what he's going to do about it; whether or not those sections in the Municipal Act are meaningful and are mandatory. If they are not, take them out; and if the government feels that these steps have to be followed then we shouldn't put these bills through just by rote because somebody happens to come from the village of Glencoe and says: "We're sorry we made a mistake. We won't do it again".

TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 73, An Act to amend the Trustee Act.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, we've considered the bill and we have no comment about it.

Mr. Speaker: Any further comments? I presume the minister wouldn't have a reply for that.

Mr. Singer: Well he's here, and that shows proper respect for the House.

Mr. Speaker: He's perfectly welcome to speak.

Motion agreed to; second reading of Bill 73.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Bill 73 ordered for third reading.

FATAL ACCIDENTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 74, An Act to amend the Fatal Accidents Act.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, we have considered this bill, and we have no comment on this bill either.

Motion agreed to; second reading of Bill 74.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Bill 74 ordered for third reading.

COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING AFFIDAVITS ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 75, An Act to amend the Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, we've considered this bill and have no comment.

Motion agreed to; second reading of Bill 75.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading.

Bill 75 ordered for third reading.

DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the Devolution of Estates Act.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, we have considered this bill and we have a few comments.

The changes put forth in this bill make good sense. They're long overdue. I hope they are the beginning of a pretty good look at the whole of the Devolution of Estates Act. The minister has touched on some of the obvious faults, and I think he has come along fairly long on those things; certainly the increase from $20,000 to $50,000 as the surviving spouse's share of an estate that devolves, in the case of an intestacy, makes good sense. The removal of the escheat to the Crown of the portion of the estate that may be left over if the surviving spouse has not exhausted the whole estate again makes good sense.

The Crown seemed to have gotten into this escheat position in so many cases where I don't think the Crown belongs at all. This is not a new thing. This goes back, I guess many hundred of years. I just wonder, since the door is now beginning to open, whether the advisers to the Attorney General might some day soon begin to take out all of the statutes that involve escheat to the Crown and look and see whether or not the Crown should get into any of these various escheat rights where it can in fact insert itself.

In very brief summary, Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill as far as it goes and I hope it is going to be followed by a continuation of advanced thinking along these lines. These old statutes relating to devolution of estates and many other fields, aren't up to date with our present way of life, and most of them should be constantly and elaborately revised.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, as I understand this bill, it is in direct response to a representation made to the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) and his predecessor, the former Mr. Allan Lawrence of the riding of St. George.

Mr. Singer: Well, what does he call himself now?

Mr. Renwick: I don't know.

I refer to Mr. Phillip Crouch, a member of the firm of Messrs. Flett, Beccario, Crouch, O'Neill and Morrison of Welland, who wrote to the Attorney General on March 14 of this year recalling the correspondence which he had had with his predecessor, Mr. Lawrence, the then Attorney General of Ontario. Mr. Crouch said in that letter:

The specific problem concerns the distribution on an intestacy. The law, as I understand it, is that if a man dies leaving his wife and no children, then in that case the wife receives the first $20,000 and two-thirds of the residue. The remaining one-third of the residue goes to the next of kin and if no next of kin, to the Crown.

My suggestion is that none of this estate should escheat to the Crown. If the man had died leaving only nephews and nieces, they would receive the complete estate. If he had died leaving only children, they would receive the complete estate.

Mr. Singer: That is what they have done.

Mr. Renwick: He continues:

If he had died leaving only parents, they would receive the complete estate. Why is it that only in the case of a wife is there such a problem? This anomaly should be corrected as soon as possible, and probably at the same time the preferential share going to the wife of $20,000 should be increased, in view of the inflationary force that has been at work.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, it is very seldom that a private citizen has all of the points he makes to the ministry incorporated in one bill at the same time, even if it was somewhat belatedly done.

Mr. Speaker: Any further comments on this bill by any hon. member?

The hon. minister.

Hon. D. A. Bales (Attorney General): I was glad to receive the comments from the gentleman. The bill was prepared some time earlier, and the member indicates he had been in touch with Mr. Lawrence.

Regarding the point raised by the member for Downview, there is going to be a continuing study on these various Acts and they will be dealt with gradually.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed.

SURROGATE COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 83, An Act to amend the Surrogate Courts Act.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, we approve of this bill. It makes eminent sense, and we trust that the whole matter of bonding in these estates will be reviewed.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: The business of bonding as a whole has acted as a real curb; having to go to companies to take out a bond is an extra cost to the estate. The bill is thoroughly in order. It's long overdue, as they say, and we give full accord to it.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak to this bill?

Did the hon. minister have any further comments?

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Agreed.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME ACT

Hon. Mr. Bales moves second reading of Bill 86, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I really only have one comment about this. I know that the one provision which is in this bill is for practical purposes the incorporation in this bill of a provision standing, as the explanatory note states, in the Workman's Compensation Act. However, I am always concerned when I see that the opinion of a board, which is not particularly qualified to make the decision, is called in aid of the provision that funds can be paid to someone other than the person to whom the award is made on some basis that that person is incapable of managing his affairs, and therefore the money should be paid to somebody else.

Now I realize there are many clear cases where such payments should be made, but this Act provides that they should be made—if in the opinion of the Compensation Board the person is unable to manage his own affairs—to the public trustee or to some other person.

I have been concerned for some time—not only in this statute, but elsewhere—with the way in which decisions are made as to when funds will be paid to someone on the basis that he is not capable of managing his own affairs. Now certainly the compensation for crime board is not one particularly able to determine that question.

I wonder whether the minister would give some view as to the kind of information on the basis of which a board would make such a determination.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I have what is, fundamentally, really a question of the minister as to the second clause of the second section of the bill. What is the raison d'être behind these funds, which are granted to individuals, not being subject to any form of levy—such as executions or setoffs or any other form—as is basically the case with all other moneys that come into an individual's hands. If a man owes some debts and has failed to pay those debts to long-outstanding creditors, you foreclose the possibility of any garnishee in this particular case. It may be justified, but on the surface of the legislation, I don't see that justification.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I just wanted to make mention of this, sir, if I could relate it to the principle shortly.

In this bill, which we approved of originally in 1970, we recognized the efficacy of the bill; we also recognize it calls for the expenditure of public funds, as does the legal aid plan.

I invite, succinctly, consideration of this comment, through the Speaker to the Attorney General: The time has come when the government has to recognize the impulse of individual lawyers, and collectively through the Law Society, that the trust funds these lawyers have of other people's money must be used for the benefit of the public at large. The inertia of the government in this connection is reprehensible and totally unacceptable.

The Law Society last week mentioned that they recognized a possibility of revenue of approximately $11 million a year available to the people of Ontario to assist them in carrying forward, rather than out of consolidated revenues, the operation of the legal aid plan; the operation of this particular statute. I would like, if the minister could consider in response — without invasion of his policy field—some idea of when the government is going to move in this connection.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, this is in reference to the final section of this amendment, relating to children.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Attorney General could advise us as to the status of those children who have been victims, for example under charges of contributing; and whether in such cases it would not be advisable to add the official guardian—either a guardian ad litem or someone of that stature—as well as the public trustee.

Mr. Speaker: Do other members wish to address themselves to this bill?

Mrs. Campbell: Could I have the answer to the question?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): It's not very often I have the opportunity of agreeing with the hon. member for Sarnia, but today I think he is correct; he is removed from his usual rascal-self.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): Be careful; be careful!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

If no one else wishes to speak, I would deal with the various matters that have been raised by the hon. members opposite.

In dealing with section 3, which was raised by the hon. member for Riverdale and the hon. member for St. George, there have been situations develop where, through an accident or other circumstances, a person may be of unsound mind. Rarely has it been a child, but it might be. And in those cases, at the present time, there is no authority to pay moneys to anyone other than to that person. We feel the money should be made available for the present benefit of the claimant and hence we have provided in this bill that it should go to the public trustee or perhaps to a person who has been the guardian; or the parent of the child. For that reason, we feel that with this amendment this will thereby benefit the individual more expeditiously. It's no assistance to them that they might have this money available to them some years hence; it is now that they may need that money. That's the reason for bringing in this provision.

The point that was raised by the member for Riverdale is valid, except that in almost all instances the board will have reports whereby they will know the physical and mental state of that person; and they usually will see the person. In these instances I think they are quite capable of making the decision as to whom it should be paid.

As to the question raised by the member for Lakeshore, I don't think a person should anticipate a payment under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, because it is an ex gratia payment; they shouldn't anticipate it to enter into contracts or other matters. When they receive the money, then it should be their business to expend it as they deem fit. I don't think they should use the anticipation of a payment to enter into other expenditures or contracts that they otherwise might not, or to seek credit on that basis.

I think I have dealt with all the points except the matter raised by the member for Sarnia. I agree with him and he may find that there will be a statement made by myself on the matter in a very short time.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, if I may, what the minister is saying then is that in anticipation of getting the award someone raises debts, and he doesn't want to encourage that situation.

Hon. Mr. Bales: That's right!

Mr. Lawlor: But that leaves out a whole field. Suppose he has numerous pre-existing indebtedness or has obligations that have nothing whatsoever to do—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Has the hon. member spoken previously to this bill?

Mr. Lawlor: I was seeking to aid this House by short-circuiting debate.

Mr. Speaker: That's what I thought. If the hon. minister wants to answer a point of clarification—

Mr. Lawlor: We will have to go to committee then to discuss it.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister wish to answer a point of clarification?

Hon. Mr. Bales: No, I think I have dealt with the matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has dealt with it then.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading or to the committee of the whole House?

Mr. Lawlor: No, committee. I want to talk with the minister.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading upon motion:

Bill 73, An Act to amend the Trustee Act.

Bill 74, An Act to amend the Fatal Accidents Act.

Bill 75, An Act to amend the Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act.

Bill 82, An Act to amend the Devolution of Estates Act.

Bill 83, An Act to amend the Surrogate Courts Act.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed I might say that, in accordance with a request, copies of the budget will be delivered to the leaders of the other parties; the rest of us will wait until later.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): That wasn't the request. The request was for all members.

Mr. Bullbrook: Was it not the intention that all members would be able to have a copy of the budget?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: No, it was not possible for me to make that arrangement, but the leaders will have them.

Mr. Bullbrook: We thought that that was the response the minister made.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Well I tried.

NOTICE OF MOTION No. 1

Clerk of the House: Government notice of motion No. 1.

Hon. Mr. White moves that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the government.

BUDGET ADDRESS

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before embarking on the budget statement proper, may I make one or two informal introductory remarks?

First of all, to say that I had invited the hon. Leslie Frost to be with us here on this occasion. I am sorry to say that his response was his health did not permit that. He informed me in a letter that he was being well-cared for and was making progress and I know I speak for all members of the Legislature when I send to him our best regards for a quick and full recovery to good health and full vigour.

I am happy to say that the hon. John Robarts has been able to join us here today. He is an old friend of ours. He is a very great personal friend of mine and he is a guest of Mr. Speaker.

The member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), I think, is coming. I don't see him here at the moment. Of course, he is a previous Treasurer and I hope that he will find the endeavours on this occasion equal to the high standard which he himself has set.

Mr. Charles MacNaughton is going to try to get here from out of town before these proceedings are over. He has extended, through me, his best wishes to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of this House.

The member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), my very dear friend, is here with us today. He is another previous Treasurer and a man for whom I would like to restate publicly I have the greatest personal affection and enormous respect.

Mr. Speaker, as your special guest in your gallery, I am glad to say, is Beatrice White, who is my best friend, and who has given me this handsome tie to commemorate the occasion; it is a cunning admixture of parlour pink and royal purple. I am given to understand it has no significance.

Mr. Speaker, the easiest way for me to deal with this budget would have been to change nothing. The most popular approach to taxes as in the short run would be to leave everything as it is.

Quite frankly, we could do this because our provincial resources have expanded as fast as our curtailed expenditures, but to do nothing about decreasing property taxes would be irresponsible, and to do nothing to make the retail sales tax fairer would be cowardly. To do nothing to lower our public debt would be imprudent. I will, therefore, ask the Legislature to increase certain provincial taxes substantially, permitting offsetting decreases of property taxes and permitting significant increases in tax credits as this mechanism evolves toward a meaningful, guaranteed, annual income plan.

The decrease in public debt will reaffirm my determination to keep Ontario's credit among the best in North America.

The budget which I present today is idealistic and realistic. It portrays Ontario's confidence in the strength of our economy and in its capacity to generate job opportunities and increased incomes for our people.

It builds on the success of past expansionary policies. It recognizes that Ontario must create a sound financial base for essential provincial and municipal services in the future. And it accepts the responsibility for raising provincial taxes in the present, as I've said, in order to lower property taxes and to make the retail sales tax system fairer.

In constructing this 1973 budget the Ontario government set itself the following objectives: To ensure that the economy continues to move towards full employment. To exercise maximum restraint on provincial spending while providing resources for priority programmes. To give the highest priority to sharing provincial resources with local governments and to ensure that property taxpayers derive maximum benefits. To redistribute tax burdens on the fairest possible basis. To encourage wise use of resources; to simplify certain taxes. To nurture small Canadian business. To preserve the family farm and decrease upward pressure on food costs. To decrease the public debt. And to decentralize government in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the taxation and reform policies in this budget meet these objectives in a way that is workable and responsible. Before proceeding to describe these measures, let me thank those public servants whose untiring efforts made this budget possible and whose dedication to the well-being of our people satisfies the highest standards of public service. Their undoubted talents, their tireless energy, their intellect and their compassion have made a deep impression on me in recent weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I suppose there are scores of men and women who have worked on this budget, but I should single out the Deputy Treasurer, Mr. Ian Macdonald; the executive director, Mr. Terry Russell; and the director, Mr. Duncan Allan, as those who have been particularly active with me in this endeavour.

I should like to comment on the government's fiscal plan for 1973 in the context of the state of the economy, Ontario's expansionary fiscal policy since 1970, and the considerable financial cost this policy has entailed, and federal-provincial fiscal policy co-ordination.

Mr. Speaker, in 1972 the Ontario economy continued to strengthen so that the gross provincial product reached a level of $42 billion — an increase of 10.8 per cent over 1971. In constant dollar terms the increase was 5.7 per cent, compared with a gain of 5.3 per cent in 1971.

As a result of this increased pace of economic activity a record 140,000 new jobs were created in the province in 1972. This enviable increase in employment of 4.5 per cent was the largest achieved in more than 15 years.

Despite the rapid growth of the labour force the rate of unemployment declined to 4.8 per cent in 1972 from 5.2 per cent a year earlier. In January of this year the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment fell to 4.2 per cent, and in February it declined again to 4.1 per cent—the lowest level since April, 1970.

I am encouraged by the growth in employment in the province. Substantial numbers of new jobs were created in all sectors of the economy with the exception of the construction industry. For example, 43,000 new jobs were created in manufacturing, another 43,000 in wholesale and retail trade, and 45,000 in the service industry.

I am confident that this improvement will continue in 1973, an estimated rise of 11 per cent in gross provincial product—about six per cent in real terms—and an average rate of unemployment of 4.4 per cent over the year as a whole. We can have confidence we're moving toward fuller employment.

Let me repeat, however, the message of my predecessor who stated that any unemployment figure in excess of three per cent is unacceptable to this government. Given the very rapid rate of growth of the labour force in Ontario, the provincial economy must realize an annual rate of real growth of at least six per cent to reach this target level of unemployment. We have achieved this kind of performance in the past and we must do it again.

A strong private sector and a high level of investment is essential to rapid economic growth. In the current situation, with housing construction approaching capacity, the critically important element in the private sector is the level of business investment in plant and equipment anticipated for this year.

The federal 1973 budget provides a modest boost to consumer spending, but no overall net fiscal stimulus. This situation arises because the personal income tax cuts have simply offset the federal government's surplus revenue capacity and its revenue gains from tax reform. Consequently, we must rely on strong business investment and balanced growth of the private sector to create the jobs necessary for our fast growing labour force.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): But no tax cuts at this time to corporations?

Hon. Mr. White: During the past three years the Ontario government has made maximum use of its financial resources to stimulate the economy, and our fiscal policy has played an important role in restoring a high rate of job creation in the province. Budget paper A shows that since 1970, Ontario's fiscal policy has been flexible, and its impact on the provincial economy has far exceeded that of the federal government in the national economy. As a result, we have achieved a faster growth of employment and a greater improvement in unemployment than the country as a whole.

To illustrate the government's fiscal plan for 1973, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn to the province's full-employment budget estimates. These estimates are calculated on a national accounts basis to measure most effectively the budget's economic impact. There's a chart in the statement which illustrates this point. Given the expenditure programme and tax reform measures I am proposing today, the full-employment budget would be in approximate balance in 1973 if the economy were operating at capacity levels of output, such a balanced full-employment budget represents a neutral fiscal stance, which is realistic given Ontario's financial capacity. The government has already fully used its financial resources in the current cyclical phase. Continued deficit financing on this scale would weaken our long-term ability to finance essential public services and municipal tax reforms.

In his recent budget, the federal Minister of Finance stated that large provinces such as Ontario must be prepared to run substantial deficits to stimulate the economy. For the past three years this province has run large cash deficits in order to create new jobs and incomes. Ontario's fiscal policy has substantially reinforced federal action in the national economy.

As I said, the relative stabilization effort of this government has surpassed that of the federal government. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in every year since 1970, Ontario's net cash requirements as a percentage of gross revenues have substantially exceeded those of the federal government. Thus the province has exerted a greater degree of fiscal influence in pursuing the goal of full employment. The cost of this provincial effort is reflected in rising per capita debt.

Consequently, the government must seek a balance between the allocation of resources for stimulating the economy and for meeting long-term public needs. I think this budget achieves this goal. With the full-employment budget in approximate balance, our fiscal stance will be neutral in 1973. The lagged impact of our past policies will, of course, continue to stimulate the economy. Nevertheless, continued progress towards full employment depends primarily on the policies of the federal government.

I hope this message is clear. There is no way that Ontario can continue to carry an undue share of deficit finance.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Double-talk and double-thinking.

Hon. Mr. White: The member's leader is nodding his head in agreement.

Hon. R. Welch (Provincial Secretary for Social Development): Typical of that group though.

Hon. Mr. White: Better be careful.

An hon. member: Typical of the indecision in that party.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): I've heard the NDP leader say that.

Hon. Mr. White: I turn now to a review of the government's expenditure programme for the new fiscal year. May I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that a principal objective of this budget is a new revenue-sharing deal for Ontario municipalities.

Mr. Lewis: Why is the minister looking heavenward?

Hon. Mr. White: In the next section of my statement, I shall outline these measures in detail but first it's appropriate to review the overall provincial expenditure plan.

I should explain to the members that in this budget all expenditure figures are expressed for the first time on a gross basis rather than on the net basis used in previous budgets. This improvement means that budget figures will now be on the same basis as the expenditure estimates. A full explanation of this and other accounting changes is contained in budget paper C which accompanies this statement.

In 1973-1974, budgetary expenditure including transfers to municipalities will be $7,269 million, an increase of 11.7 per cent over 1972-1973. This is a greater increase than last year because of $182 million in new grants to the local governments, making this year's total grants $280 million more than last year's. If these transfers are excluded, the overall rise in provincial spending is less than nine per cent. In short, our increase in spending will not exceed the 11 per cent rate at which the overall economy is growing.

Mr. Speaker, our expenditure plan for 1973-1974 was developed within the framework of the new government structure to reflect three major priorities of the government.

First, our programme will continue to provide a high level of public service while containing cost increases through increased programme effectiveness and efficiency. Our second objective is to ensure that local governments have the financial capacity to perform effectively without inequitable increases and property tax burdens. Third, we seek to ensure a vital financial capacity within both short- and long-run time horizons to meet changing public needs. This capacity must be obtained by rigorous spending limitations and by enhanced efficiency.

I would like to focus briefly on the containment of provincial spending. The point has been made in previous budget statements, but it deserves to be emphasized once again. In order to maintain a capacity to establish new priorities and to meet public needs, the government must restrain the growth of existing spending programmes. The Ontario government is very conscious of its responsibility to limit spending growth. It is clear from our records that we have been successful. We have initiated a number of major measures which apply to every ministry and, in particular, to health and education programmes. Additional measures are being planned which will be announced soon by the Minister of Health.

The success of cost cutting which we have already undertaken is indicated in a number of ways. For example, the growth in expenditures of ministries in the social policy field, which accounts for 67 per cent of total budgetary spending, has been reduced from an annual growth rate of 14 per cent in 1971-1972 to 8.9 per cent in the coming year. This has been achieved, I suggest, with no appreciable decrease in the quality of services provided under the auspices of any ministry.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to compare Ontario's spending record with that of other provinces and the federal government. An accompanying table indicates that Ontario will have one of the lowest increases in budgetary expenditure in 1973-1974. It is particularly interesting to compare our expenditure estimates with those of the federal government, which is increasing its expenditure this year by more than 16 per cent, and that compares to our 11.7.

Control of expenditures allows the province to respond to changing public needs. One of the best indicators of the ability of a provincial budget to respond to new priorities is the proportion of provincial investment funds devoted to emerging programmes. It is the investment account, represented by loans and advances, which should be most sensitive to new priorities and resultant expenditure policies. An accompanying table shows the relative portion of capital investment allocated to education, housing and environment.

With the completion of the bulk of needed capital spending in the fields of primary, secondary and post-secondary education, the government has been able to effect a shift in investment to the fields of housing and urban development and environmental protection. During a four-year period, the amount of capital investment in education has declined from 60 to 25 per cent of total investment. Investment in public housing and development has increased to take up the largest share at 41 per cent of the total and environmental protection investments have also increased. A table gives details of these items, Mr. Speaker.

As explained recently by the Chairman of the Management Board (Mr. Winkler), the estimates are being tabled separately this year on the basis of policy fields, and the responsible ministers will provide a detailed description of expenditure plans when the estimates are debated. Accordingly, I will confine my remarks to a brief overview of expenditures along with a few highlights before moving on to describe our new approach to provincial-municipal finance.

Budgetary expenditure, including transfers, will be increased by about $760 million, or 11.7 per cent. The bulk of this increase, more than $500 million, will be devoted to increased transfer payments to individuals, local governments and other institutions in order to make our revenue and expenditure system more equitable. The increase caused by the province's direct operating spending will be slightly more than $100 million, which is 10.7 per cent. Increases in capital spending have been curtailed greatly, because it is this area which can exert strong influence on future increases in operating spending. We plan, therefore, to limit the increase in capital spending to 3.9 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, some examples of increased expenditure provided for in our 1973 plan are: $36 million to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for municipal transit subsidies, expansion of GO Transit and development of new modes of public transportation; $66 million additional grants to universities and community colleges to modify the impact of decreased enrolments and increase student support.

We have established a value of $1,825 for the basic income unit in 1973-1974, up 3.4 per cent from the $1,765 dollar value in 1972-1973; $15 million additional operating funds for homes for the aged, Children's Aid Societies, children's institutions and day nurseries; $35 million in capital loans to municipalities for winter employment capital projects; $24 million allocated for student employment, of which $8 million will be devoted to special summer employment programmes; and $39 million to the Ministry of Health to provide improved psychiatric and mental health programmes, increase the number of nursing home beds, and improve home-care programmes.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I would emphasize the success of the policy field committees and Management Board in developing an effective and comprehensive expenditure programme, sensitive to new social priorities, yet developed within strict spending guidelines.

In his 1969 budget the hon. Charles MacNaughton presented the Ontario government's blueprint for provincial-municipal tax reform. In the intervening years his budgets, and those of the member for Chatham-Kent, each marked consistent and considerable progress in achieving our long-run objectives. During the period 1967 to 1972, the Ontario government more than doubled its payments to local governments, agencies and property taxpayers from $955 million to $2 billion. This controlled the growth of property taxes and achieved a fairer distribution of property tax burdens among taxpayers.

It is both an honour and a pleasure, therefore, to be able to increase our aid to local governments this year. In this budget I shall propose a group of reforms costing over $180 million, which, together with the growth of existing forms of assistance, will bring our total payments to local governments, agencies and taxpayers to $2.4 billion. This represents an increase of more than $400 million in provincial relief of property taxes between 1972 and 1973.

In designing our policies for 1973 we have undertaken intensive studies of the financial outlook of local governments. These studies have confirmed again the chronic problem for local government of the low growth potential of the property tax. We estimate this growth for the whole province not to exceed four per cent. In contrast, local spending is expected to grow by eight per cent. As a result we estimated that local governments would have experienced a deficiency in current financing during 1973 of about $140 million, which would have required an increase in mill rates averaging almost eight per cent.

The financial outlook for local governments is further aggravated by the uneven financial pressures resulting from different demands for services and inequalities in tax capacities. There will be significant variations, therefore, around the anticipated eight per cent mill rate increase in 1973. Figures have been provided in detail on this point.

The Ontario government has examined fully the implications of the local fiscal outlook. Consequently, we have decided that there is need for imaginative and comprehensive reforms which will be of benefit to all property tax payers. In designing a bold new approach to provincial-municipal finance, we have set ourselves a number of objectives: To make additional transfers to local governments in excess of the $140 million required to avoid an increase in the average mill rates. To distribute these new funds in a way which takes account of different needs and deficiencies in tax capacities. To reduce further the problem of tax exemptions for public property. To reduce the financial pressures experienced in areas of substantial temporary population, such as resort areas. To recognize the unique problems of local governments in northern Ontario. And to recognize separately the financial problem of those local governments which have their own police force. I suggest to the members that the revenue-sharing plan in this budget meets all of these objectives.

There is one final and important objective. The government believes there is great scope for the consolidation and simplification of the existing conditional grants. However, we feel it is important that the deconditionalizing of grants be discussed fully with local government representatives before making changes in this direction. It is my intention to continue discussions with the provincial-municipal liaison committee so that progress can be made toward this objective in 1974. In an appendix to this statement I have set out a list of conditional grants which will be considered for deconditionalization.

In the past few months the government has intensified its procedures for consultation with the municipalities. In addition to the regular monthly meetings of the provincial-municipal liaison committee, a great number of meetings have been held with individual municipalities and counties on a number of issues of general concern to these governments.

As a result, a number of amendments to legislation will be introduced in the near future. Prominent among these are: Greater freedom for county councils to determine their own representation. Elimination of the requirement that the minister approve municipal appointments to joint planning boards. And enabling legislation giving municipalities control over the development of particular sites.

These amendments are concrete examples of the government's policy of enhancing the autonomy of municipalities and broadening the scope for decision-making at the local level.

We have developed a comprehensive plan to attain our objectives. It contains a number of innovations which make it unique. We have called it "the property tax stabilization plan." The main elements of this new reform plan and other forms of assistance are the following:

A property tax stabilization plan. A new resource equalization grant. A special allowance for temporary population in the resource equalization grant. A new general support grant. An additional general support grant for all municipalities in northern Ontario. Higher grants toward policing costs. And the elimination of mining revenue payments, which are less than the benefits under the new plan.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Nothing for unorganized communities.

Hon. Mr. White: This budget will do more for the north than if the member for Thunder Bay sat here for a million years.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Don't worry, he will be here.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): The Treasurer won't.

Hon. Mr. White: Let's make it 1,000.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: We'll still be here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I think a million years is too harsh, we'll make it 1,000.

Other reforms and additional assistance: Provincial support of school board costs will be raised to 60 per cent. The education mill rate subsidy will be enriched. The local tax base will be broadened to include public institutions. Payments in lieu of taxes on public lands will be extended and increased. Library grants, museum grants and sewerage and water subsidies will be enriched. Many general welfare assistance recipients will be transferred to the provincial family benefits programme. And the county roads grant system will be simplified and enriched.

In total the above plan and enrichments and other assistance are estimated to deliver over $180 million in new financing to local governments. This is well in excess of the $140 million local government deficiency from existing tax levels in 1973. It can be expected, therefore, that municipalities which control their expenditures will be able to increase property taxes this year.

By far the most important part of our 1973 reform programme is embodied in the property tax stabilization plan. This five-part plan is designed to provide basic assistance to all municipalities. It contains special recognition of the problems associated with a low tax base and temporary population.

Mr. Renwick: Municipal tax foundation of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lewis: Does the Treasurer mind giving credit where credit is due.

Hon. Mr. White: I am looking at my old friend from the select committee on taxation, the member for—

Mr. Lewis: Lakeshore.

Hon. Mr. White: —Lakeshore, whose smile enlightens this House, if not his political philosophy.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The Treasurer's borrowing the philosophy at the moment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: It takes account of the unique costs incurred by northern municipalities, and it incorporates incentives for economies in municipal spending so that savings will be encouraged and passed on to property taxpayers.

The new resource equalization grant: This government will introduce a resource equalization grant which closely follows the recommendation of the select committee on taxation. The grant will enable municipalities with below-average taxable assessment to provide improved services without imposing severe burdens on their taxpayers.

All municipalities with equalized assessment per capita below $10,000 will be eligible for this particular equalization grant. A simple example will serve to illustrate clearly how this equalization grant will work.

In a case where assessment per capita amounts to only $7,000, a municipality would have a $3,000, or a 30 per cent, deficiency relative to the $10,000 standard. The equalization grant to this municipality would amount to half of this 30 per cent deficiency times its 1972 municipal level.

We've chosen a standard of $10,000 for equalization purposes, because it is slightly above the average of $9,700 in the province and makes a large number of municipalities eligible. We will pay these grants at half the deficiency percentage to keep the total cost of this new grant programme within the province's financial capacity.

The resource equalization grant will contain two additional refinements. First, there will be an allowance for temporary population so that the resort areas will have a more appropriate entitlement for equalization grants.

Second, a maximum equalization grant rate has been established at 20 per cent of municipal levies to avoid unnecessarily high payment to a limited number of municipalities.

The total cost of the new resource equalization grant in 1973 is estimated at about $57 million. Some 748 Ontario municipalities will be eligible for this equalization grant. In other words, the benefits of this new grant will be widespread, affecting more than 63 per cent of the population, and will have greatest impact where financial assistance is most needed.

Our new resource equalization grant will strengthen the fiscal capacity of all less prosperous municipalities. It will introduce a greater degree of equity in local government financing that existed before. Its impact will be sufficiently powerful to allow substantial tax reductions, notably in the resource-scarce communities. The equalization grant alone will prevent the mill rate increases that would otherwise occur in many municipalities.

There is a new general support grant. The local government financial outlook also indicated that municipalities in general are facing financial pressures. Resource-rich as well as resource-poor municipalities are faced with potential mill rate increases. To correct the chronic imbalance in local financing, a new approach is required.

The problem of general financing pressures is closely related to local needs, but it's difficult to measure these needs. Therefore, we chose municipal levies as an approximate, although admittedly imperfect, measure of local needs. On this basis we've developed a new general support grant.

Starting in 1973, Ontario will pay all municipalities a general support grant of four per cent of their 1972 municipal levies. We are confident that this four per cent support of the levy, combined with natural growth in assessment, will relieve much of the pressure to increase property tax levels. This grant will be available on the same basis to both upper- and lower-tier levels of local government.

We estimate the total cost of the new general support grant at $41 million in 1973. Of this total, some $22 million will go to our metropolitan, regional and district governments and their constituent municipalities. The remainder will go to counties, cities, towns, townships and villages in Ontario.

An incentive for municipal economy is next. The new resource equalization grant and general support grant provide revenue sharing with municipalities of $100 million. It is this government's position that the bulk of these new transfers should be of direct benefit to local taxpayers and not be dissipated on unnecessary spending increases. If the new provincial transfers are to be of lasting benefit, local governments should exercise restraint and economy in their spending.

To encourage municipalities to be prudent, we have designed an incentive in conjunction with the new general support grant. As I've said, the standard rate for this grant is four per cent of municipal levies. This grant could rise to six per cent, however, if a municipality contains its spending growth rate in 1973 to eight per cent or less. On the other hand, for municipalities that increase their 1973 spending by 12 per cent or more, the support rate will drop to two per cent instead of four per cent. In this way municipalities can tailor their own budgets to secure maximum support grants from the province and pass on these benefits to their taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the printed copies of this statement contain a table showing how this incentive will work. In future we will further refine this approach to our new transfer mechanism in light of our experience, keeping in mind Ontario's basic objective of containing the total public sector and property tax levels.

A special grant for northern Ontario is the next item. Mr. Speaker, I should like to spend a few moments now on the special position of northern Ontario. The government has recognized the unique costs that confront our municipalities in the north. These communities have to cope with problems related to severe winters, high transportation costs, unusual geographic features and lack of certain services, all of which lead to higher costs of municipal services and a higher cost of living to northern taxpayers.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): They recognize that is a problem at last!

Hon. Mr. White: From time to time we have taken certain steps to alleviate part of these problems, and in the case of mining municipalities we have made available mining revenue payments. In introducing a new revenue-sharing plan, we have recognized the additional needs of northern Ontario.

The government has decided, therefore, to add to the general support grant for all municipalities in northern Ontario. These municipalities will be eligible for an additional 10 per cent of their municipal levies, over and above the four per cent general rate. We estimate the value of this extra support for northern Ontario municipalities to be about $8.6 million in 1973.

For a municipality in the north, the maximum total of the assistance in 1973 from the above programmes would amount to 36 per cent of its 1972 municipal level.

That is, 20 per cent from the resource equalization grant, 14 per cent from the general support grant and an extra two per cent for economy in spending.

For years mining municipalities, most of which are in northern Ontario, have enjoyed special recognition for the unusual financial position in which many of them found themselves by virtue of the presence of mining enterprises which could not be easily assessed.

In 1971, the programme of payments to designated mining municipalities was revised and increased by the introduction of a resource equalization formula. This formula was similar to the general resource equalization grant introduced in this budget. Because of the increased grants to mining municipalities in the form of resource equalization and general support grants, including additional grants to northern Ontario, mining revenue payments will be discontinued. Each mining municipality will be more than compensated for the elimination of those payments by the new property tax stabilization plan.

To complete the government's comprehensive plan for reduction of property taxes, I would like to describe the final feature of the plan. As the members know, not all municipalities incur the cost of policing in their communities. Where policing is provided, however, the costs put considerable pressure on local budgets.

In recognition of this fact, the government established an unconditional grant of $1.75 per capita last year. We now propose to raise this grant by $1.25 to a total of $3 per capita for eligible municipalities. The present grant of $3.25 for regional police forces will be raised by $1.75 to a total of $5 per capita. These increases will require additional grants from this government of more than $9 million in the current year.

It might be appropriate for me to stress at this point that we are urging and encouraging municipal governments to put the highest priority on restraint in their spending. The government expects similar prudence from the boards and agencies which budget independently from local governments and yet are financed by local property taxpayers.

Mr. Lawlor: The more they get, the less they spend—or vice versa.

Hon. Mr. White: Let me review briefly now what I believe to be a well-balanced and new approach toward property tax reduction and stabilization. I have no illusions that this plan will prevent mill rate increases everywhere in this province, but to the extent that some increases do occur they will be significantly modified by our new revenue sharing.

I recognize that this plan will have a major impact on the 1973 budgeting and financing processes of municipalities. This draws attention to the problems inherent in having different fiscal year-ends at the provincial as compared with the municipal levels. I should therefore like to invite municipalities and affected institutions to comment on the advisability and implications of changing the provincial fiscal year to a calendar year basis.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Are they going to ask that before the statute or after the statute?

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): After.

Hon. Mr. White: I think the main point to be made about the government's comprehensive new plan is that it's balanced and takes account of a great variety of factors which have a bearing on rising property taxes.

The plan counters fiscal impairment by providing generous equalization payments. It recognizes the general financial imbalance with a general support grant. The plan recognizes the higher costs borne by northern municipalities and their taxpayers. It reduces the adverse impact of temporary population on resort municipalities. It meets the differential needs of communities that pay for their own policing. And finally it rewards economy in budgeting and efficiency in spending by both local and regional governments.

Our $100-million property tax stabilization plan makes available to municipalities almost three quarters of their anticipated cash deficit in 1973. I am confident that the overall package will be fair and provide assistance where it is most needed.

Other reforms and additional assistance: In addition to the $100 million for this major initiative, the government plans to carry forward its ongoing reform programme and increase the assistance to local governments.

Assistance to school boards: As the members will recall, the past few years have brought significant changes to the provincial support of school boards. Prior to 1970, our support amounted to less than 48 per cent. We have since raised it in three steps to a level of 58 per cent. During the same period, we have introduced spending controls and ceilings to avoid excessive demands on the taxpayers at a time of easing enrolment pressures.

The government has announced it will increase provincial grants to 60 per cent of school board spending in 1973. This concludes our staged increase in support level and fulfills our original pledge to reach this high level by 1973.

An hon. member: Done!

Hon. Mr. White: Another promise kept.

Mr. Foulds: The only one.

Hon. Mr. White: This major measure will be combined with an enrichment of the mill rate subsidy. The net cost to the government of this move will be approximately $40 million in the present fiscal year.

This year the government is taking another step in the implementation of its policy of bringing provincially owned or supported property into the local tax base. The approach taken for payment of local taxes by universities and community colleges has proved successful and will be expanded and extended to correctional institutions and hospitals.

The following reforms—

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Wait for it!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps) should have some music!

Hon. Mr. White: This is a little birthday present on his 300th birthday.

The following reforms will provide municipalities with an additional $7.8 million in tax revenue in 1973. The payment for student post-secondary institutions will be increased to $50. A new payment will be made of $50 for public and provincial psychiatric hospital beds. A new payment will be introduced of $50 per resident place in correctional institutions.

There will be a limit of 25 per cent of the net general levy on the amount a municipality can receive from these extensions of the tax base. These extensions of the tax base will be for municipal purposes only.

Now, with respect to payments in lieu of taxes. In recent years the government has acquired a great deal of land and will continue to do so for the preservation and development of accessible recreational areas. In a number of municipalities this policy involves a significant transfer of land into provincial ownership, with a corresponding reduction in the local tax base. Therefore the government intends to broaden its payments in lieu of taxes to cover such land acquisitions.

Assessment and taxation of land on Indian reserves: The government is offering to provide funds in 1973 to compensate municipalities for the elimination of taxes on tenant-occupied Indian lands. After extensive study of the law and practice of taxation of leased property on Indian reserves and of its social and financial implications, the government believes that this property should be removed from taxation and the estimates will include this expenditure intention.

Meetings will be organized for the near future with representatives of the Indian bands and municipalities to discuss how the transition from the taxation to the exemption of property leased to non-Indians can be best achieved. I expect that some Indian bands and municipalities will want to make agreements for the supply of municipal services on reserves in return for reasonable payment. Others will want to proceed independently. These practical matters will be resolved on consultation with the people directly concerned in each case.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear! By the time the member for Thunder Bay has been here for 1,000 years, the Treasurer will have become a socialist.

An hon. member: Good move; good move.

Hon. Mr. White: Other forms of assistance. The government will also make available substantial additional funds to municipalities in a variety of existing programmes. Some of these have already been announced by my colleagues responsible for these programmes. Full details on others will be provided during the estimate debates. Let me enumerate these major changes being proposed by the government:

Library grants: Various aspects of these grants will be enriched, involving additional grants of about $4.5 million in 1973-1974.

Transit assistance: The province will make grants of 75 per cent on approved spending on transit vehicles and related facilities at a cost of about $13 million in 1973-1974. An increase in the maximum subsidy for transit deficits will cost an additional $2 million in 1973-1974.

Computer traffic control: The province has set aside $2.5 million in 1973-1974 for assistance toward the cost of traffic signal systems, installation of computer traffic control systems, and municipal studies on intermediate capacity systems and corridors.

New regional governments: The Sudbury and Waterloo regional governments will become eligible for $3.2 million in unconditional grants. In addition, they will receive $2.7 million in transitional assistance.

Welfare costs: The province will assume about $2.4 million in welfare costs formerly borne by municipalities through a transfer of certain general welfare assistance recipients to the province's family benefits programme.

Water and sewage: Eligible municipalities will receive an increase from 50 per cent to 75 per cent in capital subsidies on sewerage and water projects.

Museum grants will be doubled in 1973-1974.

In total, these provincial commitments will transfer more than $30 million in additional funds to local government.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to summarize the total provincial programme of new reforms and additional assistance to local governments. As detailed in a chart, the 1973 reform plan involves additional financing of more than $180 million to local governments. That's in the new plans only. This reform plan represents an increased emphasis on unconditional transfers to local government. Moreover, existing per capita unconditional grants will be continued at past rates of funding.

These additional transfers far exceed the 1973 financing deficiency of local governments. As a result, I expect there will be reductions in mill rates in most municipalities. The distribution of our 1973 reform will, of course, provide much greater benefits to some municipalities compared to others. There will be a whole range of mill rate effects, with many substantial reductions as well as a limited number of increases. This is as it should be. We have made certain that the greater relief goes where it is most needed.

I would like to put in historical perspective for the members the magnitude of the province's efforts to improve local financing. Our financial transfers to local governments have mounted steadily since the provincial-municipal reform programme which started in 1969. In 1973, the government will transfer $1.9 billion to local governments, or 48.5 per cent of their total revenue. This compares with 1.3 billion, or 41.5 per cent of local revenue in 1970. In addition, to this direct assistance to local government, and $260 million to local agencies, the province will pay $200 million directly to property taxpayers in 1973 in the form of property tax credits and farm tax relief grants.

In total then, the province has assumed some $2.4 billion, which would otherwise fall on the property tax. This represents more than 90 per cent of the total yield in 1973-1974 of our retail sales and personal income taxes together, and these are Ontario's most important tax fields. The $180 million in new financing provided in this budget passes on to local governments more than the equivalent value of one point of our retail sales tax.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Let's talk about that now.

Hon. Mr. White: Details of that are given on the next page.

Mr. Reid: And now the bad news! We have had the good news.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, let me now describe the ways by which this government proposes to finance its 1973 spending programme, the new property tax stabilization plan and other reforms. As I have already stated, this budget embodies the fiscal constraints and expenditure imperatives which we must accommodate. Accordingly, the government has decided to raise certain provincial taxes, to decrease property taxes, and to improve the incidence of the retail sales tax.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Improve the incidence?

Mr. Singer: Improve the incidence?

Hon. Mr. White: In deciding tax changes for 1973-1974, I have considered a number of factors: The state of the economy and the appropriate fiscal stance for the province; our long-term financial outlook and reduced revenue growth potential in future; the existing level of public debt; the need for new revenue-sharing with municipalities; and simplification of the tax structures.

With these considerations in mind, I concluded that our budgetary deficit must be reduced in 1973-1974 to a level of about $400 million.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Treasurer is sure about that is he?

Hon. Mr. White: Expenditures, including the municipal reform plan I have just outlined, requires gross budgetary spending of $7,269 million in 1973-1974.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Very gross.

Hon. Mr. White: Our existing tax rates and base can be expected to generate $6,534 million in revenue. This would leave a budgetary deficit of $735 million, which is more than is prudent at this time. Accordingly, I am proposing tax measures to raise about $330 million in additional revenue at the provincial level during the 1973-1974 fiscal year.

A tax increase of this magnitude means we must look to our major revenue sources—personal income tax, retail sales tax and corporation taxes.

I have rejected an increase in the personal income tax for two reasons.

First, the federal Minister of Finance explicitly asked the provinces not to increase their use of this tax field in 1973. Now that the federal government has turned back to taxpayers some of the revenues from its surplus income tax capacity and its gains from tax reform, I am reluctant to deny these tax savings to our citizens.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: The second and equally important reason, however, is that the Feb. 19 federal budget proposes major structural changes in this tax field less than two years after the income tax system was thought to be reformed. The latest federal proposals would not only lock the provinces into a decreased progressivity pattern in personal income taxation, but also reduce the long-run growth capacity of the income tax field.

I am convinced, therefore, that an increase in our income tax rate would be unwise before the implications of these changes are fully understood. A federal-provincial meeting of finance ministers is scheduled for early May at which time Ontario intends to pursue these considerations.

I have also decided not to recommend an increase in corporation income tax.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: To raise a significant portion of the new revenues required would necessitate an increase in the corporate tax rate which would make Ontario uncompetitive with other jurisdictions. Moreover, the expiration on March 31, 1973, of our five per cent investment tax credit means that the income tax liability of many Ontario corporations will automatically be somewhat higher in 1973-1974.

Finally, I am convinced that we must avoid placing greatly increased tax burdens on our businesses at a time when a high level of investment is needed to improve our international competitiveness and create new jobs.

Nevertheless, I am proposing to raise some additional revenue from the corporate sector in the form of the paid-up capital tax. Having exhausted this potential I must rely upon the retail sales tax to produce the remainder of our revenue requirements.

Let me proceed, therefore, to enumerate the tax measures which I am proposing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Taxes on corporations: I have decided that the most appropriate way to secure additional revenues from corporations is to increase the paid-up capital tax, particularly as this can be accommodated by structural reforms in this tax. Accordingly, I am proposing the following changes in the paid-up capital tax, effective with respect to the fiscal years of corporations ending after April 12, 1973.

The rate of general capital tax will be doubled from one-tenth of one per cent to one-fifth of one per cent.

The capital tax base will be broadened to include all bank loans.

The archaic special tax on railway, express, telegraph and Pullman car corporations will be repealed. Instead, these corporations will be liable to the general capital tax imposed on ordinary corporations.

The capital tax on banks will be streamlined by redefining the capital tax base to include only that portion of capital used within Ontario; repealing the office tax on banks; and imposing a single rate of two-fifths of one per cent on all taxable capital of banks compared to one-fifth of one per cent on paid-up capital stock, and one-tenth of one per cent on the reserve funds.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: In addition to increasing revenue, these measures will eliminate inconsistencies in treatment of different corporations and simplify the tax application. I estimate that these changes will generate an additional $33 million gross revenue in a full year and $10 million in the 1973-1974 fiscal year.

I would also point out that the final burden of these tax increases will be somewhat less since the capital tax is allowed as a deduction under the federal and provincial corporation income taxes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I remember very well not so many years ago when it was the custom in this House not to interrupt the Treasurer's budget statement. I do not know if the objective was courtesy or comprehension, but I have observed that the opposition lacks both.

I also propose to raise—

Mr. Lewis: The government is taking $10 million from the corporations and $280 million from individuals. That's a nice balance the Treasurer has in this budget. A nice balance.

Hon. Mr. White: The member should speak to his financial critic. The member doesn't quite understand it.

Mr. Lewis: I am quite confident that our financial critic will say the same.

Hon. Mr. White: I also propose to raise additional revenues from corporations that pay management fees, rents, royalties and similar payments to foreign owners with whom they do not deal at arm's length. An amendment to Ontario's Corporations Tax Act will be introduced to achieve this necessary tightening up, which I estimate will produce an additional $5 million in revenue per year.

A number of minor improvements will also be introduced in our Corporations Tax Act and Income Tax Act covering mutual fund corporations, mutual fund trusts and fraternal societies. These changes will generally parallel federal legislation and will have minimal revenue significance.

Retail sales tax: The principal tax source which I have selected to raise additional revenues is the retail sales tax. As shown in budget paper B accompanying this statement, the retail sales tax has a number of positive advantages over other revenue sources. It is an economically responsive tax and automatically generates revenue increments at a faster rate than the annual growth in the economy.

A substantial component of the sales tax is highly progressive in that high-income tax payers tend to consume a relatively large share of those items taxed at the 10 per cent rate.

Mr. Lawlor: That isn't what the select committee said.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh yes they did.

Mr. Lawlor: No it did not. It is retrogressive.

Hon. Mr. White: In addition, the exemptions for food, children's clothing and prescription drugs protect low-income families from the main burden of the tax.

Finally, the Ontario committee on taxation recommended that greater use be made of this tax field when the province was seeking to augment its basic financial position. To meet Ontario's need for substantially increased revenues I propose to increase the retail sales tax rate from five per cent to seven per cent, effective May 1, 1973.

Mr. Lewis: Resign. Resign.

Mr. Stokes: Why aren't the Tories applauding?

Hon. Mr. White: While I recognize that this represent a large increase, I would remind members that all provinces east of Ontario have an equally high or higher rate of sales tax. I estimate that this move will produce an additional $280 million in sales tax revenues in 1973-1974, and some $340 million in a full fiscal year.

I would emphasize again that our new revenue-sharing deal for municipalities means that more than half of this increased sales tax revenue will be passed through to local governments. Moreover, I am proposing a substantial enrichment in Ontario's tax credit system—which I shall outline later—to ensure that the burden of this tax increase will fall on our more prosperous taxpayers.

Members will recall a sales tax credit was recommended by the select committee on taxation "with the objective of improving the equity and efficiency of the provincial sales tax."

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The White committee recommended that.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, and the Liberal members subscribed to it, if I'm not mistaken.

Concurrent with the increase in the sales tax rate, I'm proposing a number of changes in the retail sales tax base to improve its equity and efficiency of administration. Having carefully considered the retail sales tax recommendation of the royal commission on book publishing, I have decided not to tax magazines and periodicals for the reasons set forth in the report of the select committee on taxation.

While I recognize the constructive nature and good intent of the royal commission's recommendation, I continue to be opposed philosophically to taxing the flow of information and knowledge to our citizens.

Mr. Stokes: Is the Treasurer going to pay them for collecting the extra $280 million?

Hon. Mr. White: In the tradition of Winston Churchill.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): How come the government isn't fighting on the beaches?

Hon. Mr. White: I am recommending an increase from $2.50 to $4 in the exemption for meals served in restaurants. This recognizes that the costs of eating out have risen since 1969 when the $2.50 level was established. The new $4 level will improve the equity of the sales tax because it means that breakfasts, luncheons and many dinners will now be exempt from tax. It also means that Ontario's exemption will be more generous than the $1.25 to $2.50 levels allowed in most other provinces.

Mr. Singer: His generosity is too much.

Hon. Mr. White: Flowers and gardening: I am pleased to recommend that all seeds, bulbs, natural flowers, trees, bushes and shrubs be exempted from the sales tax.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are environment-conscious over here.

Hon. Mr. White: In the past we have tried to differentiate among these growing things, taxing some and exempting others. I am convinced that the province can afford the $4 million loss in revenues by exempting all such forms of vegetation, if only because of the beauty they add to our environment. In particular, those citizens who enjoy gardening will appreciate this modest concession to one of the most pleasant aspects of our daily lives.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Martel: There are a lot of vegetables over there we can do without.

Hon. Mr. White: Household pets: For similar reasons I propose to eliminate the retail sales tax on the purchase of household pets. Personally, I find it abhorrent to put a tax on these lovable creatures which become, in effect, members of our families.

Mr. Lewis: Why doesn't the government allow pets in Ontario Housing Corp. developments?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Special occasion permits: At present when alcoholic beverages are re-sold under a special occasion permit, the 10 per cent retail sales tax must be collected from the consumer. This has proven expensive to administer, and difficult to enforce. Therefore, I propose to repeal the sales tax liability under special occasion permits and replace it with a special levy to be collected in the liquor, wine and Brewers Retail stores at the time of purchase.

This practical change will decrease the tax burdens on those organizations, clubs and groups which have properly collected and remitted sales tax in the past, while ensuring a revenue contribution from those who have failed to collect and remit the sales tax in the past. I estimate that this change to a more practical system will produce some $3 million in extra revenue annually.

Even after the increase in retail sales tax, I found it necessary to secure additional revenues to meet the target deficit. Accordingly, I am proposing to apply the retail sales tax to all forms of energy which are presently untaxed in Ontario. This would be a seven per cent value tax to be collected primarily under the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Mr. Singer: No applause for that?

Hon. Mr. White: Because gasoline, diesel fuel, propane and some other energy fuels are already taxed on a unit basis however, it will be necessary to integrate these existing forms of energy taxation within a comprehensive system.

Allow me to illustrate for you how we propose to do this in practice. Gasoline, liquid petroleum gases, diesel fuel, furnace oil, kerosene, natural or manufactured gas, coal, coke and electricity used for heating, lighting, cooking and similar purposes will be taxed at seven per cent of the retail selling price—

Mr. Singer: Oh that's nice. No applause for that.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): That will help the poor.

Hon. Mr. White:—or two cents per gallon in the case of gasoline. When these fuels or forms of energy are used directly in manufacturing, they will not be subject to tax. This means that the electricity used to operate production machinery will not be taxed, while the electricity used for lighting will be taxed.

Mr. Bullbrook: Take the tax off their house—and tax their stove.

Hon. Mr. White: It also means that energy sources which are used in basic production processes, such as natural gas, will be exempt. Gasoline, liquid petroleum gases and diesel fuel, when used in motor vehicles, road construction equipment, pleasure boats and snowmobiles will continue to be taxed at 19 cents per gallon and 25 cents per gallon, respectively.

Gasoline and diesel fuel operating internal combustion engines, used for purposes other than licensed vehicles or manufacturing, will be subject to a seven per cent tax on selling price; or two cents per gallon in the case of gasoline. This means that activities such as farming, fishing, tourist camp, and railways, formerly receiving full or partial rebate, will now bear a standardized, low, effective tax rate.

Because this represents a new approach to energy taxation in Ontario, I propose to delay the effective date of implementing this policy to July 1, 1973. The expected net revenue yield therefore is estimated at only $65 million in 1973-74, as compared to $100 million in the full fiscal year.

Let me point out some of the positive benefits of this new tax policy, apart from generating increased revenues. First, diesel fuel used in mining and manufacturing and forestry will now bear no tax as compared to the present eight cent tax. This represents a substantial tax cut which will lower costs to all users, particularly in northern Ontario communities, largely dependent on this energy source. Second, the taxation of all energy sources used for the same purpose eliminates the bias in favour of formerly untaxed energy sources. Third, by taxing energy there will be an incentive to prevent waste and to achieve the most efficient utilization of this vital resource.

Mr. Stokes: That will really help the people of the north with their heating. The government should be really proud of itself.

Hon. Mr. White: I think it is not too much to hope that pollution will also be diminished somewhat.

Finally, let me emphasize again that I am proposing to enrich Ontario's tax credit system. The additional tax credit I am proposing will more than offset the additional costs of heating and lighting on the average residence resulting from this taxation of energy.

The members will recall that in the 1972 budget, Ontario established a new property tax credit plan which relates property taxes to ability to pay via the personal income tax mechanism. Subsequently, Manitoba and Alberta introduced similar schemes to channel tax relief to those individuals and families least able to pay.

Ontario taxpayers are now filing their 1972 income tax returns and getting the benefits of this progressive programme. We have co-operated closely with the Department of National Revenue to iron out initial difficulties and have found that the tax credit system is working remarkably smoothly.

I expect that $160 million or more in property tax credits will be provided to Ontario taxpayers either in the form of tax refunds or reduced income tax liability in this year.

Given this good performance, I am proposing to enrich the benefits distributed through the tax credit mechanism to ensure that the burden of the tax on energy and the increased sales tax does not fall on our low income families, I am recommending the introduction of a retail sales tax credit which would provide $90 million of offsetting tax relief.

While the mechanics of such a sales tax credit must be arranged with the federal government, I favour a simple tax credit formula equal to one per cent of personal exemptions. Based on the 1973 level of exemptions, this would provide a tax credit of $16 to single taxpayers, $30 to a married couple, $36 to a family of four, $48 to a family with six children and so on.

By comparison, the seven per cent tax on energy would amount to $28 per year per household on average, estimating total expenses on home heating and lighting to be $400 per year. Where families choose to economize on heating and lighting costs however, they will be money ahead as a result of this move.

Mr. Stokes: Why can't they freeze a little? Is that what the minister is saying?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I notice that our family is turning down the thermostat a bit this year.

The total value of the retail sales tax credit is estimated to amount to approximately $90 million.

An hon. member: Cover it again.

Hon. Mr. White: No, I have covered that.

The total value of the retail sales tax credit is estimated to amount to approximately $90 million per year compared to total tax increases of $50 million from energy used for residential heating and lighting. Thus, a new sales tax credit will offset the energy tax and the increased sales tax burden on half or more of our families. Budget paper B illustrates the progressive result of the sales tax credit and the existing property tax credit.

When Ontario's new credit tax system was introduced in last year's budget, my predecessor indicated that the province would like to substitute tax credits for our supplementary grants to needy pensioners. At present we are paying some $20 million, in the form of $50 and $100 grants, to pensioners in receipt of the federal guaranteed income supplement.

Now that the basic tax credit plan has been in operation for a year, I think it is appropriate to make this change. Accordingly, I am recommending a pensioner tax credit of $100 on a sliding scale related to taxable income to tax filers who are 65 years of age or over. This pension, or tax credit, will have a value of $40 million annually, which is $20 million more than our existing grants to needy pensioners, which will be ended.

Altogether then, the new tax credits I am proposing will enrich Ontario's tax redistribution plan by $130 million to a total value of $290 million for the 1973 income tax year.

The total tax credit payable under Ontario's enriched plan will be the sum of the property tax credit, sales tax credit and pensioner tax credit, less one per cent of taxable income. This ensures the distribution of benefits among Ontario taxpayers on the fairest possible basis.

I am confident that this will make our total tax burden more equitable for our people.

Mr. Speaker, I have outlined the tax measures the government has decided to recommend to strengthen Ontario's basic financial capacity and to ensure fairer distribution of the total tax burden. Now let me turn to a number of tax changes which I am proposing for other reasons.

Security transfer tax: The Ontario committee on taxation regarded the security transfer tax as "a nuisance tax and that it has no relation to benefits received." It said the tax was "not simple, clear or certain" and it proposed the substitution of a retail sales tax on the commissions charged by security dealers and brokers. The select committee of the Legislature endorsed this recommendation, subject to implementation of similar taxes in Quebec and British Columbia. The select committee recognized that it is impossible to impose either form of tax in Ontario without losing business, unless similar taxes are imposed on all Canadian stock exchanges. Quebec abolished its transfer tax a year ago and there is no similar tax in British Columbia, so Ontario now is alone in taxing security transfers.

A significant loss of trading is evident as a consequence. Statistics show that Toronto's share of the market has fallen to 70.4 per cent in the first quarter of 1973, from 71.3 per cent in the corresponding period last year. A further decline is indicated for March when the share dropped 69.3 per cent. Even more significant, the value of trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange grew by only 8.7 per cent in the first quarter of 1973 over the first quarter of 1972. By contrast, trading on the Montreal exchanges rose by 35 per cent.

To the extent that this shift in trading is likely to continue as a result of this tax differential, the security transfer tax is self-defeating as a revenue-raising instrument. More important, retention of this impost by Ontario would result in a loss of related private sector income and jobs, with consequent reductions in our other revenues such as personal and corporate income taxes. Therefore, I propose to repeal the security transfer tax, effective immediately, to ensure that Ontario retains its position as the major capital market in Canada. The anticipated gross loss in revenues from this source this year is $7 million. Perhaps it is not too much to hope that the removal of this impost will have a positive influence on the acquisition of equity ownership by Canadians.

Highway tolls and park fees: Fees, licences and permits of various kinds are an important element in Ontario's total revenue structure. Following a complete review of these fees in 1972, many were increased and more properly reflect the actual operating costs of the associated service, function or benefit to users. Further review this year has indicated two areas where a change is desirable—tolls on the Burlington Bay and Garden City skyways, and provincial park fees.

I propose to eliminate tolls on the Burlington Bay and Garden City skyways effective July 1.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Be careful. Don't get carried away. The member for Welland South almost let himself go.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): He just doesn't like the name.

Hon. Mr. White: These tolls have proved to be costly and troublesome. They are not in accord with the government's overall policy of toll-free highways and bridges.

This removal should speed up traffic and eliminate irritation to commuters, tourists and truck drivers. I also propose to eliminate camping and day fees in our provincial parks for all Canadian senior citizens, effective tomorrow.

An hon. member: Great move. Great move!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: This will ensure that our senior citizens can enjoy the serenity of Ontario's public recreation areas at no cost. My colleagues responsible for the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and the Ministry of Natural Resources will provide full details in their estimates.

Mr. Martel: That will aggravate!

Hon. Mr. White: Regarding succession duty reductions, as you know, Mr. Speaker, it has been the policy of the Ontario government to withdraw gradually from the succession duty field of taxation as capital gains taxation matures.

Mr. Lawlor: A mistaken policy.

Hon. Mr. White: In the 1970 and 1971 budgets we introduced tax changes which eliminated succession duties on all but the largest estates. As a result, our revenue yield has declined from $81 million in 1970-1971 to an estimated $70 million in 1973-1974. During the same period, revenues accruing to the province from the federal estate tax have gone from $28 million to $2 million for this year.

In this budget, I am proposing measures to continue this policy of phased decreases in succession duties. I think this approach is warranted for two reasons. First, our succession duties continue to have an undesirable impact on small businesses, family farms and Canadian ownership. Second, other provinces are vacating this field. In recent months both New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have announced their intention to eliminate succession duties. Quebec has also announced staged reductions in its succession duties—a 20 per cent cut effective Jan. 1, 1973, and a further 20 per cent cut effective Jan. 1, 1974.

Last year the government appointed an advisory committee on succession duties under the chairmanship of Mr. J. Alex Langford, QC. This committee has just completed its report, which has been tabled in the Legislature. On behalf of the government, I wish to take this opportunity to thank the members of the committee for their efforts and accomplishments. In the months ahead, we intend to review and assess the committee's recommendations with a view to making improvements in our statute.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, the government intends to proceed with immediate changes in three priority areas, interspousal transfers, family farms and family firms. Let me outline, briefly, the substance of these changes and the principles upon which they are based. Full details are set out in the appendix to this statement dealing with tax changes.

I propose to eliminate all duty on transfer of assets between spouses. I feel strongly that the accumulation of assets by a couple over their lifetime is a joint effort and that it is unreasonable upon the death of one partner to impose a tax on the surviving spouse.

I also propose to relieve the burden of succession duties on bona fide family farms by permitting a disappearing amortization or gradual forgiveness of death duty on farm assets over a 25-year period, provided the farm continues to operate as a family farm. Family farms make an important contribution to the social and economic fabric of this province. Relief from death taxation will help to preserve family farms and their attendant green space as well as ensure continuation of their unique contribution to our society. In conjunction with these changes in succession duties, the government also intends to make provision for a once-in-a-lifetime gift of an interest in a family farm by a farmer to his children of up to $50,000 free of gift tax.

I intend to introduce amendments to alleviate the burden of duty on family firms. The government considers it imperative that Canadian ownership be encouraged, particularly in family firms which have been created by Canadians. Therefore, I'm proposing a choice of alternatives—six years to pay or payments in shares to the Ontario Heritage Foundation. This latter provision is similar to the practice in the United Kingdom where it appears to have worked well. If an election is made to pay in shares, the government will accept shares from the firm at fair market value, thereby eliminating the need to sell controlling interest in the company in order to satisfy succession duty obligations. It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that these new measures will help retain family firms within the control of Canadians.

This package of succession duty reforms comes into effect after midnight tonight. I estimate the total revenue cost of these necessary and practical reforms to be about $11 million in the 1973-1974 fiscal year.

Reduction in farm property taxes: In addition to the relief from gift tax and succession duties on family farms, the government has decided to reduce the property taxes borne by farmers. At present, we provide $20 million in grants, offsetting 25 per cent of the total property taxes paid by farmers, or about half of the property taxes applicable to farm lands. This year we are increasing our tax relief grant to 50 per cent of the total property tax burden, which is equivalent to complete exemption from property taxation for all farm lands.

Concurrent with this additional farm tax relief, the province intends to tighten the administration of this programme to ensure that the benefits go to genuine farmers. Consequently, the increased funding we have provided in the 1973 estimates amounts to $16 million. This will help Ontario farmers to hold down production costs at a time when food prices are rising rapidly.

Let me conclude this section on tax measures by mentioning briefly the province's policy with respect to taxation of resource industries. This area of taxation has been subject to extensive federal changes in Bill C-259, as well as much recent changes by a number of provinces. Ontario is devoting considerable time to researching this complex area in order to develop its own long-term strategy. In the meantime, we have introduced some minor changes to parallel improvements made in the new federal legislation.

Mr. Martel: That's not an improvement.

Mr. Foulds: May give them time to get it out of the ground.

Hon. Mr. White: Other federal changes involve major policy considerations and a complete assessment of their potential impact on Ontario mining and petroleum companies. Moreover, these federal changes do not begin to take effect until Jan. 1, 1974. Accordingly, I wish to reiterate that Ontario will bring forward its long-term policy on resource taxation as well as the necessary amendments to the Corporations Tax Act before the end of 1973. In designing our policy we continue to aim for the objectives set out in the 1971 budget by my colleague: To maintain the total tax burden on the mining industry approximately at its present level.

Mr. Lewis: The Treasurer doesn't have to say any more.

Mr. Renwick: There's a lot of study to be done.

Hon. Mr. White: To preserve provincial revenues and revenue growth capacity from the mining industry as a whole.

Mr. Martel: Santa Claus.

Hon. Mr. White: To provide incentives to encourage new investments in mining and processing in Ontario. And to compensate for tax shifts which would endanger small companies and dependent mining communities.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer had better read Kierans. Small companies are going out of existence.

Hon. Mr. White: We are concerned also about the future of our pulp and paper industry. We intend to assess our tax impact on the forestry industry, on the pulp and paper industry, as well as other considerations in determining what provincial assistance might be required and practical.

Mr. Lewis: Forty-six million out of one and a half billion!

Hon. Mr. White: In aggregate the tax measures I have proposed will generate an estimated $333 million in additional tax revenues in 1973-1974.

Mr. Martel: It's a disgrace.

Hon. Mr. White: Of this amount Ontario is passing on $182 million, or more than the value of one point of our retail sales tax, to local governments. This will greatly strengthen the financial base of Ontario municipalities and create a more balanced and progressive overall structure in this province. In addition, $130 million will be dedicated to retail sales tax and pensioner credits which improve the fairness of the tax system.

The revenue changes I've described will maintain cash requirements at $836 million, almost the same level as 1972-1973. Our budgetary deficit will be reduced to $402 million which I believe to be appropriate for the coming year. Moreover, this improvement in the province's financial position has been achieved at the same time that we have embarked upon a bold plan of revenue-sharing with local governments. As a result, the total provincial-municipal sector in Ontario will now be in a sound financial position to meet public needs and emerging priorities. A table sets forth the details.

Total cash requirements of $836 million in 1973-1974 are consistent with our decision to adopt a neutral fiscal stance in the economy. It also demonstrates the government's determination to protect the province's high credit rating in the capital markets. I point out that this estimate of cash requirements includes $144 million for the North Pickering community development project. We have provided this full amount in our estimates but our net costs could be substantially lower if a satisfactory agreement for CMHC participation can be reached. Final cash requirements for 1973-1974, therefore, could be $692 million.

I estimate that our non-public financing will amount to $915 million in the current year. This exceeds our cash requirements by $79 million. It is my intention to use these funds and any unutilized portion of the $144 million North Pickering suspense account to reduce the province's outstanding public debt. In other words, Ontario's public debt will be reduced by between $100 million and $200 million in 1973-1974.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Legislature to share my belief that this is a workable and a responsible budget which charts a clear course of action for the year ahead.

Mr. Foulds: The Treasurer's course is clear. Hit the little guy.

Hon. Mr. White: It applies stringent restraints on provincial spending. It accords the highest priority to sharing resources with local governments. It redistributes the burden of taxation to make it fairer. It nurtures our rural sector. It encourages wise use of resources. It assists Canadian entrepreneurs. It raises revenues to keep the province in a sound financial position and it maintains Ontario's reputation for fiscal integrity.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my budget statement and copies with the budget papers will now be distributed. Thank you.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Lewis: No one else could have carried it off; I am prepared to give the Treasurer that. Two per cent on the sales tax and he smiles.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the adjournment of the House but, prior to that, I would advise the House that tomorrow we will be in committee of supply.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 1973

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to have visitors with us today—in the east gallery, students from Bloor Collegiate Institute of Toronto, and St. Roch Separate School of Weston; in the west gallery, students from T. A. Blakelock Secondary School of Oakville. Later on in the morning we will be favoured with the presence of teachers from St. John's School of Kitchener in the east gallery.

Statements by the ministry.

CYANIDE DISCHARGE TO SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANT

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning in Kitchener the sewage treatment plant experienced an upset in treatment process. One of the operators who had had experience with cyanide suggested this smelled like it and the bylaw enforcement officer for the regional municipality was contacted.

Samples were collected and at noon the aeration section contained about five parts per million total cyanide and at 2 p.m. the effluent contained about 1.5 parts per million free cyanide. The river flow at the time was about 1,000 cu ft per sec giving a pollution factor of about 50 to 1. Therefore the concentration in the river was probably less than 0.1 parts per million, and I might say that the permissible level in public surface water supplies is 0.2 parts per million.

Our staff and staff from the region were on site and the waterworks downstream at Brantford and Cayuga was notified as a precautionary measure. With the time delay to Brantford of 30 hours and a further 30 hours to Cayuga, and the additional dilution from the Nith River and other tributary streams, the levels will be much below the safety limit when the contaminant reaches these potable supplies.

The MOHs have been notified, of course. In summary, at this point, no public health hazard exists. The source is being traced by the city but some biological life in the river may be affected.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief statement in connection with the recommendations contained in section 116 of the Provincial Auditor's report, 1971-1972, and in response to several questions with respect to government policy in this matter, which have been raised recently by hon. members opposite and directed to my colleague the hon. Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier).

Mr. Speaker, on Jan. 2, 1973, the Management Board of Cabinet directed that the cost of all flights for purposes other than resource protection and development is to be charged at a standard hourly rate, approved for this purpose by the Management Board and on a pro-rata basis where applicable, to the ministry or ministries concerned. Where a group of ministers or officials is involved, the total cost will be charged to the ministry of primary interest. Where such a flight is made in respect of government business generally or by any minister representing the government, the cost will be charged to the Ministry of Government Services.

With respect to the policy governing the use of these facilities, Management Board has further directed that they shall be made available to transport ministers or deputies on those occasions when constraints on time, cost and the availability of alternatives make any other transportation arrangements inappropriate. This policy is now in effect in all ministries, and the policy outlined by the Premier (Mr. Davis) in his statement of April 4, 1972, will continue to apply insofar as the Premier is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the government has not altered its view with respect to the tabling of flight records, logbooks or other documents in connection with the various aircraft used by the government.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the government has not deemed it advisable to act on the first recommendation contained in the report to the minister and has determined that the complete supervision, including the administrative and operating expenses of the Toronto-based aircraft, should continue to be under the Ministry of Natural Resources rather than transferred to the Ministry of Government Services.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What about making them available to northern members?

WCB OFFICIAL

Hon. F. Guindon (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on the evening of April 3, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), who unfortunately is not in his seat this morning, in his reply to the Speech from the Throne made several remarks about Mr. A. C. MacDonald, executive manager of the Workmen's Compensation Board. The tone and context of the remarks have left the impression in Hansard that Mr. MacDonald accepted a bribe.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): How does Hansard express a tone?

Hon. Mr. Guindon: As the House knows, Mr. Speaker, such action on Mr. MacDonald's part would constitute grounds for a criminal prosecution.

The hon. member said:

He has a $75,000 yacht, he has two lovely homes, he winters in Switzerland, yet he is the man who, on a $30,000 salary, engineered the Fidinam deal.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the House that Mr. MacDonald does not own a boat, he has one home and he has never been to Switzerland, or even Europe, for that matter.

An hon. member: Wrong again!

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Par for the course for the member for Grey-Bruce.

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Mr. MacDonald has been with the Workmen's Compensation Board since 1946, and in those 27 years he has been steadily promoted to his present position as executive manager, which is the equivalent of a deputy minister.

I very greatly regret that the hon. member should make such an attack on Mr. MacDonald, and I feel that the member's actions were cruel and cowardly. The member is well aware that Mr. MacDonald cannot rebut the member's remarks either in the House or in a court of law.

I do not expect the member to apologize to the House, neither do I presume that he would have the courage of his convictions to repeat his remarks outside the House. My only purpose in making this statement is to ensure that Hansard shows the member's accusation did not go unchallenged.

OPERATING GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, I have two statements in which I think the members will be interested. One has to do with the letter that went out yesterday to all the universities and community colleges advising them as to the implications of the budget as far as their own funding is concerned.

Total operating grants to the universities and community colleges will rise from $555.4 million to $603.9 million, or 8.7 per cent over 1972-1973. Much of the increase in the funding comes with a rise in the value in the basic income unit which is used as referred to yesterday in the Treasurer's (Mr. White) statement. Other factors affecting the increase to universities include added weight to part-time programmes for grant purposes; more support for bilingual programmes, and an increase in grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes for education facilities.

As members were previously made aware, the formula for calculating grants based on enrolment has been changed with the introduction of slip-year financing. Under this method, grants for the 1973-1974 fiscal year will be based on actual enrolment in 1972-1973. At a time when post-secondary enrolment is levelling off or actually declining at some institutions, this approach will provide the institutions with an assured level of provincial support and assist them in their financial management. Since many community colleges still are expanding at varying rates, however, they will receive a transitional slip-year grant for this part only to allow for enrolment growth in full-time and part-time programmes.

Smaller universities, such as Brock and Trent, which have been experiencing problems due to declining enrolments, will receive added assistance in the form of a fixed sum compensatory grant based on careful assessment of their needs.

The government's policy of placing greater emphasis on part-time studies at Ontario universities is reflected in a decision now to count five course registrations as a full-time equivalent for grant purposes. A new method of calculating support for bilingual programmes will also be introduced.

I might add that the full text of this statement will be made available to all members today.

University schools of social work will receive supplementary grants to finance field construction that used to be supported by the federal Department of National Health and Welfare and the former provincial Department of Social and Family Services.

Extra-formula grants for undergraduate programmes in health sciences and law will go to nine universities: University of Guelph for veterinary medicine; University of Windsor and York University for law; University of Ottawa and Queen's University for law, medicine and interns; University of Toronto and University of Western Ontario for law, medicine, interns and dentistry; McMaster University for medicine and interns, and to the University of Waterloo for optometry.

For the first time in 1973-1974 the colleges' estimates include operating support for 9,500 diploma nursing students who will be integrated into the system in September. Several colleges already are involved in health sciences programmes. Some nurses' training will continue in regional and hospital nursing school facilities.

The ministry's estimates, when they are presented to the Legislature, will also provide support of registered nursing assistants schools, including some provisions for students' living allowances. It is expected that the RNA schools eventually will be integrated into the colleges, at which time the college grants will be adjusted accordingly.

In addition to support for fee-paying post-secondary students, colleges will receive grants approximately equal to last year's for adult training. This will include sponsored students referred by Canada Manpower centres and from the province's programme for training in business and industry.

The estimates also provide for apprentices' tuition under the Ontario Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act. For both colleges and universities, grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes for post-secondary education facilities have been increased from previous dual rates of $25 or $35 to a universal $50 for each full-time student.

We have emphasized that the status of capital financing remains essentially unchanged since last November's announcement of a moratorium on new building projects.

The capital estimates for 1973-1974 of $65 million, which is down from the 1972-1973 actual $147 million, will provide only for the capital requirements of those facilities already under construction or for emergency renovations. The renovations will be on a very limited basis, reflecting the results of a government survey of institutional needs.

STUDENT AWARDS PROGRAMME

Hon. Mr. McNie: The other statement, Mr. Speaker, has to do with student awards.

Major changes in the Ontario Student Awards Programme are being announced today. I just visited this morning with the student awards officers from around the province and I am pleased at the very enthusiastic response we have received from these officers.

The total provided in the estimates for all student aid programmes in 1973-1974 has been increased to $38.4 million compared with an actual expenditure of about $27 million in the current year.

The modified student aid programme includes improvement in the parental contribution table, higher allowances for married students, an increase in the student awards weekly allowances, loans for students seeking financial independence from their parents, more bursaries to help students complete high school, fellowships for Ontario graduate students and pilot programmes to assist part-time students.

There are several highlights I would like to touch on, Mr. Speaker.

1. To encourage scholarship and academic excellence under the Ontario Student Awards Programme, exemptions for academic awards will now be allowed up to the level of tuition and incidental fees. Previously the limit was $150.

2. An improved parental contribution table has been adopted which boosts the basic family allowance from $1,800 to $4,000. This change will make available an additional $5 million in grants to students from lower and middle income families.

3. Where both of the student's parents are working, the allowable deduction has been substantially increased and now includes a babysitting allowance.

4. The weekly miscellaneous allowance has been increased by about 10 per cent to supplement existing provisions.

5. Married students will benefit to the extent of half a million dollars in grants as a result of a modified assessment procedure.

6. Ontario students who have worked for at least two full years and who wish to be financially independent of their parents can now apply for independent status under the Canada Student Loans Plan.

I am happy to report that considerable progress has been made in provincial talks with Ottawa leading to substantial improvements in the overall Canada Student Loans Plan. The disparity between our programme for assistance and the other provinces tends to increase, and we have taken leadership—and I think appropriately—in getting the other provinces together to get Ottawa to improve the programme as it applies to the whole of the Dominion and not just to the students in our province.

We have made a great deal of progress and they have been very co-operative. However, to date no action has been taken on two matters which have been sought by Ontario and other provinces:

1. Conditional repayments of loans based on income after graduation.
2. Aid for part-time students under the existing federal CSL programme.

We have developed an interim programme which goes part of the way but not all of the way toward meeting part-time students' needs:

1. In the first place, all publicly supported post-secondary institutions in Ontario will be encouraged to allow part-time students to spread their tuition payments over the length of their course when that fee is $50 or more. The province will make accelerated payments to institutions to offset any internal cash flow problems.

2. The ministry is also undertaking a programme which will make bank loans more readily accessible to part-time students, and also to those full-time students who for various reasons choose to be financially independent of their parents but who do not at present qualify for assistance.

Continuing studies of conditional repayment of loans and aid to part-time students through the Canada Student Loans programme are being carried out by the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the highlights of the programmes that we have just announced to the student awards officers and which are being released to the press today. We felt it was important to get this information to the campuses while the students are still there and making plans for the upcoming year.

'BUDGET HIGHLIGHTS'

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform members of the Legislature that a document entitled "Budget Highlights" has been put in each member's postal box. This document shows the additional grant moneys available for every municipality in Ontario, and my thought was that some of the hon. members might like to get this before they go home for the weekend.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions. The hon. member for Downsview.

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer.

Does the Treasurer not think that the imposition of a seven per cent tax on energy announced in yesterday's budget is a regressive form of tax, taxing as it does necessities of life which make up a higher portion of a poor family's budget than of a wealthy family's budget? Does the Treasurer not agree that this particular form of tax levies a substantially and grossly unfair burden on those residents of the province in northern Ontario whose annual costs for light, and particularly for fuel for heating, are in excess of those in southern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the answer to both of those questions is no. First of all, the retail sales tax credit for the average family in this province will exceed the retail sales tax on fuel and the incremental retail sales tax on other goods.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): No way.

Hon. Mr. White: Secondly, the additional resources—$8.6 million in the stabilization fund for northern municipalities—will result in a disproportionately large mill decrease. So the residents of northern Ontario will have a lower tax burden as a result of this budget than they did before.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Oh, come on!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Supplementary: I wonder if the Treasurer has considered the impost that will apply to rural areas of the province, other than in northern Ontario, as a result of the additional rural Ontario Hydro rates?

Hon. Mr. White: Well, as the hon. member knows, we have shifted $16 million in one project alone into rural Ontario—by which I mean the complete property exemption on all farm lands. There are additional benefits for the rural sector in the succession duty changes and so on. So while what my hon. friend says is perfectly correct, this will be more than offset by the special provisions for rural Ontario.

And if I may say so, since the rural sector has lagged and since average incomes are lower, the amount available to most citizens in the rural sector through the tax credit mechanism, I should think, will be on average very much larger than for the average urbanite.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Treasurer not realize that his seven per cent tax on energy requirements completely undermines the credibility of Ontario's position vis-à-vis Alberta; that it is impossible to pretend any longer to be opposed to a two-price system in Alberta because of its effect on the consumer costs in Ontario, and then in the next breath impose a $28-a-year tax for families in Ontario as well?

Hon. Mr. White: No, sir. My hon. friend has not understood these provisions.

Mr. Singer: Nobody understands them except the Treasurer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: This falls into two categories. We object to the two-price system emanating from Alberta on constitutional grounds and on economic grounds.

Mr. Singer: Oh, on constitutional grounds!

Hon. Mr. White: Dealing with the economic grounds, the matter falls into two parts: the increased costs to our manufacturers which will, if implemented, induce higher prices, and which will jeopardize our position in world market. This is not touched by the tax because all energy going into production directly or indirectly, is tax-free.

Mr. Lewis: He doesn't like giving his corporate friends taxes.

Hon. Mr. White: Secondly, since the retail sales tax credit will exceed the average impost on households, in the final result there is no net tax on these energies consumed.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, since the Treasurer in response to my deputy leader is able to tell this House and the members of the public without reservation or equivocation that the additional unconditional grants to northern Ontario will outweigh the adversity put upon them in connection with the seven per cent energy tax, would he please give us some figures upon which he and his ministry base such a comment?

For example, would he tell us the benefit accruing under the additional grants to a family with, say, four children and earning $5,000 a year in a home assessed at $2,800, having regard to the additional expenditure for energy that they require over the people of southern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, sir, I will be glad to do that. I provided that information at the press conference today. I'll tell the hon. member the figures I remember.

The total net tax effect on a married person with a spouse—

Mr. Bullbrook: That isn't what I'm asking.

Hon. Mr. White:—and two children under 16, earning $5,000 a year, is minus $30, by which I mean his total tax burden will be $30 less this year than last.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): That is assuming that the mill rate comes down.

Hon. Mr. White: And for a married person with a spouse and two children under 16.

Mr. Bullbrook: I take it that the rules of this House are such that the minister does not have to reply to a question. I understand that and I'll abide by that.

Hon. Mr. White: The member doesn't want to hear it, eh?

Mr. Bullbrook: The minister is not answering the question. Mr. Speaker, speaking to this point of order, what he is doing now is mouthing the equation that he gave to the press yesterday that the tax on that particular family will go down $30 and the tax on people earning $50,000 will go up $180.

In answer to my deputy leader—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Mr. Bullbrook: The point of order is that you are permitting this minister not to answer the question at all. He is answering a completely different question.

I want to know how a family in northern Ontario is not adversely affected by the seven per cent tax on energy, as the Treasurer replied to my deputy leader.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the reason is that we have shifted enormous resources into northern Ontario—

Mr. Bullbrook: Give me the amount.

Hon. Mr. White:—and the average household in northern Ontario will have a tax decrease—aside from the general provisions—of $2.59, I think it is.

Mr. Lewis: Just a second—a year?

Mr. Bullbrook: A further supplementary then. Am I correct in understanding that the average benefit to a residential property owner in northern Ontario over his counterpart in southern Ontario is $2.59 and that that benefit will outweigh the seven per cent imposition on energy? Is that what you're saying?

Hon. Mr. White: No, I am not saying that. I am saying that the additional resources put into northern Ontario amount to something over $60, while the additional taxes, including the tax on energy and the higher heating and lighting costs in northern Ontario, amount to something like $58.

Mr. Bullbrook: The Treasurer doesn't have the figures at all.

Hon. Mr. White: I have the figures approximately. And I've got them precisely—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. White: I'll provide the exact figures to the member.

Mr. Stokes: As a supplementary, did the minister not say yesterday that he was putting an extra 10 per cent weighting factor in the north which amounted to $8.6 million?

Did he not say that he was eliminating the mining revenue payments, which were $13 million, so there would be a decrease of $4.5 million accruing to the north, vis-a-vis the south?

Hon. Mr. White: Mining revenue payments were made to municipalities all over this province. The $8.6 million is simply one aspect—

Mr. Stokes: They are really all in the north.

Hon. Mr. White: Just a minute. These are complicated matters. Does the member want an answer or doesn't he? Read the budget.

Mr. Bullbrook: Read the budget!

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: I'd like one, but can I defer to my colleague?

Mr. Speaker: I am not going to cut the supplementaries off at this particular point, but I must point out to the hon. members it's becoming an argumentative debate and the purpose—

Mr. Stokes: I'd like an answer to my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The purpose of the question period is to elicit information from the minister. We don't want a wide-ranging, argumentative debate.

In view of the importance of the topic, I have allowed several supplementaries. I allowed the hon. member for Thunder Bay to ask a supplementary. The next one was the hon.—

Mr. Stokes: The Treasurer was in the process of answering—

Mr. Bullbrook: On a point of order, if I may. Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of this particular member, nor I believe the basic intention of members of the opposition, to be argumentative. But sir, may I make this point of order to you to explain our position?

Time and time again, week in and week out, we don't get the answers to our questions. Instead it's a circuitous involvement by the minister, and this is permitted. If they would stand up and say, "I don't know," there would be no further comment on our part.

Mr. Speaker: This is up to the ministers.

Hon. Mr. White: If I may respond to the question of the member for Thunder Bay. The $8.6 million is just one of the factors in this new property tax stabilization plan. The document in the member's postal box will show him exactly how much additional money is available to his municipalities.

Mr. Stokes: I've got it here.

Hon. Mr. White: Oh, the member has it there?

The fact of the matter is we have built in a further assurance for mining municipalities, namely, that they will receive at least 105 per cent of what their mining revenue payment would have been.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. George, a supplementary.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could be enlightened as to the method by which this retail tax credit is to be administered? I don't follow the administration of it, and I would like to know the costs of administering this particular item.

Hon. Mr. White: The details of the credit are yet to be worked out with Ottawa. It will constitute an additional line on that section of the income tax form which deals with the Ontario tax credits. The cost of administration, as far as I know, is zero. I think the federal government does that for us without any charge.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary which is almost for clarification, because I couldn't believe what I heard.

Is the provincial Treasurer saying that the additional revenues and credits granted to northern Ontario amount to approximately $60 a year per family; and that the additional taxes imposed by this budget amount to something like $58 a year per family, so that the addition for northern Ontario in this year, by the nature of the beneficence of this government, will be approximately $2 a year per family?

Mr. Singer: Let's be fair to him. He said $2.59.

Mr. Lewis: Well, $2.59. I have two questions which flow from that and then I'll take my seat. Is the minister telling the people of northern Ontario that he is correcting the tax inequities in this province for them at the level of $2.59 a year? Can he imagine what the people of the north would say to him if they understood it in those terms?

Hon. Mr. White: No, sir. I have responded to a question from the member for Samia, dealing with the extraordinary heating costs and the effect of this tax. I am saying that it will not cost them any more, it will cost them less. What is not taken into consideration in this figure is a wide variety of tax changes and expenditure changes which are a special benefit for the north. While I won't attempt to enumerate all of these, let me just mention, by way of illustration, the fact that the tax on off-highway fuels has gone from eight cents to two cents. This will save the pulp and paper industry alone a couple of million dollars. As I say, this is only by way of illustration, because there are many changes which will affect northern Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is not giving the answer to my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have another question of the Treasurer. If, as I understand it, one of his important budget theories is that the people of Ontario in the end run are going to benefit in dollars rather than pay more dollars—and that's a rather hard concept to grasp in view of the fact that he is collecting so much more money—and if that depends on the advantage taken of the general support grant, could the minister explain how any expanding municipality, which is going to have to provide for more people than it did a year ago and which is going to have to pay more in salaries than it did a year ago, is going to be able to lessen its gross revenue fund expenditure and still provide for more people, pay greater salaries and provide the additional services? Isn't the minister prepared to agree that this particular benefit is only going to be available and the general support grant is only going to be of reasonable advantage to those small municipalities in Ontario that are not expanding at all, that are adding no people and that, in fact, are slowly disappearing?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, these matters are fully dealt with in the budget.

Mr. Singer: Yes, and I read it.

Hon. Mr. White: If the hon. member can read, I hope he will spend the weekend reading it and trying to understand it.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the minister answer instead of giving a lecture?

Hon. Mr. White: I will deal with the question. Toronto is going to get more than $8 million more this year. There are a number of additional grants.

Mr. Singer: Only "if".

Hon. Mr. White: There is a four per cent standard grant. There is a property tax assessment deficiency grant. There are unconditional grants, including the increase in police grants. So almost every municipality in this province will receive considerably more money than it did before. In addition, there is a provision that a fast-growing municipality with extraordinary costs can receive additional moneys from the Treasurer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, the minister has not—

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary. We have spent—

Mr. Singer: No, no! This is the first supplementary on the second question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: We have spent more than one-third of the question period on the topic of the budget.

Mr. Singer: Surely, Mr. Speaker, when the budget document is the most important document—

Hon. Mr. White: If the hon. member hadn't been sleeping and yakking all yesterday afternoon, he would understand what had been said.

Mrs. Campbell. Oh, Mr. Speaker!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is a more rude or intolerant or impertinent man in this House than the hon. member for London South—

Mr. Speaker: Is that a question?

Mr. Singer: And I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer, who believes that he is handling probably the most important facet of Ontario's business in some businesslike fashion, should at least attempt to have sufficient courtesy to answer the questions posed to him by the opposition in connection with this $7.3 billion budget with its $400-million-plus deficit.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, if the member for Downsview and his colleagues on the front bench—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, this is not a point of order!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. White: —if they had been listening instead of interjecting all yesterday afternoon, these questions would be unnecessary.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, when all else fails, the member for London South hurls insults; he doesn't answer.

Let me try again, as a supplementary to the question I asked him. Could the Treasurer—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Well, there you are. You see, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: Could the member for London South please explain to someone of my simple intelligence—

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): The pot calling the kettle black.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: —how the expanding municipalities are going to be able, in the words of the budget, to have a lesser gross revenue fund expenditure in the year 1973 if they have to look after more people and pay higher salaries? And if they aren't able to do that, how are they going to be able to take advantage of this sliding scale from two per cent to six per cent? Could he tell us that?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, in another portion of the budget it is explained that where extraordinary costs are experienced because of fast growth of a municipality, additional money will be available on application to the Treasurer. This cannot be put in a formula. It calls upon the good judgement of myself and my ministry.

Mr. Cassidy: The decision will be made here!

Mr. Bullbrook: By way of supplementary, does the minister not agree that the basic philosophy inherent in his dealing with municipalities—that is, that he will increase their grants conditional upon self-restraint—is the very essence of the philosophy taken by the federal government over the last four years with this province?

Mr. Speaker: This is purely argumentative.

Mr. Bullbrook: How can it be purely argumentative?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the Treasurer—

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to ask how—

Mr. Speaker: The question is purely argumentative!

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact that guidelines on municipal spending—

Mr. Bullbrook: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, would you permit that kind of volatile diatribe—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Order.

Mr. Lewis: I told the hon. member for Sarnia he would reduce the Legislature to violence before his tenure was over. I warned him about that. He is the most inflammatory fellow around—

Hon. Mr. Winkler: As far as the member for Scarborough West is concerned.

Mr. Lewis: He has to control himself.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, can the Treasurer explain how this budget increases municipal autonomy when he has begun to introduce spending guidelines which in the course of a couple of years will become as stringent as the education ceilings?

Hon. Mr. White: No, Mr. Speaker, we are providing another $440 million at the municipal level; much of this is brand-new—$182 million—most of which is unconditional. We were not prepared to make these additional unconditional funds available and watch municipal councils expand their expenditures rapidly as we witnessed the school boards doing for 10 years from about 1960 to 1970.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): They don't trust them—but they encouraged them.

Hon. Mr. White: In preference to imposing ceilings per se, as we found ourselves compelled to do in the case of school boards, we built in what we thought was an appropriate incentive to induce economy. Whether it will work or not, only time will tell.

Mr. Singer: Any municipality that is decreasing in people and lowers its salaries can take it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since municipal costs have been rising in the range of nine or 10 per cent a year, can the minister explain how essential municipal functions which have not been carried out, such as housing and land development, can be carried out under the new incentives that he's introduced?

Hon. Mr. White: The increase on municipal costs this year on an average across the province is eight per cent, and our standard is built around that. But I point out to my hon. friend that there are tens of millions of dollars being made available which don't relate to that particular incentive grant.

Mr. Singer: That is still the cornerstone of the Treasurer's budget.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: That is how they are going to make more money.

QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: Half the question period has now elapsed on one topic. There will be no further questions on the budget.

New questions.

Mr. Lewis: Oh now, now, I am going to object. On a point of order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order.

Mr. Singer: That arbitrary ruling is absolutely ridiculous, because there isn't a more important topic that comes before this Legislature than the expenditure of money. Goodness knows we have enough difficulty trying to get lucid answers from that gang of clowns over there, particularly the Treasurer, without your having to say we can't ask any more questions on the budget.

I would respectfully ask you, sir, to allow the questioning on the budget to continue at least to the full extent of the question period.

Mr. Speaker: I might point out to the hon. member that there have been numerous complaints from backbenchers other than the leaders of the opposition parties that they have not been having enough opportunity to ask questions. These complaints were directed to me.

As the hon. member well knows, the purpose of the question period is not to engage in an argument for the entire period. As I said, we have devoted one-half of the question period to an argumentative debate on the budget, which in my view is not a proper use of the question period.

Now if all of the members of the opposition unanimously agree that the entire question period should be on the budget, I'm not going to stand in their way. But I must defend the rights of the other backbenchers to ask new questions.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Do all the members of the opposition wish to spend this period on the budget?

Mr. Bullbrook: This is the Legislature, not—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. With the greatest respect, sir, I don't think that the ruling that you are about to make should depend on whether all the opposition members agree, or even all the government members agree, or even all 117 of us agree together.

There is a question period. We are talking about what, in my opinion, is the most important order of business that comes before this Legislature, and I think, sir, that your responsibility is to keep the question period in order and to allow this questioning to go on. I can't think of any single matter that is of more importance to this Legislature than its budgeting procedure which involves, as I say, $7.3 billion this year.

Mr. Speaker: I am not debating that point at all. Go ahead.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): Supplementary!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nickel Belt.

MINING REVENUE PAYMENTS

Mr. Laughren: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, of the Treasurer: Could he explain how he justifies the removal of the mining revenue payments tax on the mining companies, considering that the individual citizens in the province are all paying more tax, and that the mining revenue payments tax has been replaced by a more regressive kind of tax on the entire province?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member had been able to hear what I said yesterday—

Mr. Laughren: Certainly I did.

Mr. Lewis: We listened carefully.

Hon. Mr. White:—which was precluded, presumably, by the continuous interruption that was taking place, he would know that the mining tax has not been altered at all.

Mrs. Campbell: The Treasurer interrupted, that is the problem.

Hon. Mr. White: That is quite different from the mining revenue payments.

Mr. Laughren: That is right, that is what I'm talking about.

Mr. Lewis: That is right, but for the northern communities, that is not.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not realize that by removing the mining revenue payments he is adversely affecting the mining municipalities in that the northern Ontario grant is dispersed over all northern Ontario communities and not the mining municipalities exclusively?

Hon. Mr. White: The mining revenue payments have been unsatisfactory for a very long time.

Mr. Laughren: They have not been high enough, that is true.

Hon. Mr. White: They are now replaced with a more general grant provision which takes into consideration the property tax assessment deficiency. When the hon. member gets the publication I mentioned a moment ago, "Budget Highlights", he will find that his municipalities will all benefit from this series of changes—in some instances by a very large amount, 36 per cent of their actual levy.

Mr. Laughren: Mining companies aren't paying that.

Mr. Singer: I have no more questions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

FUNDS FOR PURCHASE OF NIAGARA ESCARPMENT

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I also have a question of Houdini, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the provincial Treasurer where is the money for the purchase of the Niagara Escarpment, and in what amount, and in which ministry?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, these particular expenditure expectations are all included in the operating ministries' estimates, which I think will be tabled next week. And, of course, during the debates on the operating ministries these details will be made known to the House.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, but really—by way of a supplementary—surely the minister can tell the House this morning how much money in his overall budget he is providing for acquisition of Niagara Escarpment land and in which ministry it will ultimately be found? Surely that's not a secret now that the budget is tabled?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, there is no special account established for any one of these projects. There are moneys provided through the Ministry of Natural Resources for parklands, through the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for roadways, and so forth. As I say, to establish these various values one will have to wait until the estimates are presented to the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect, I feel the minister is leading me gently down the garden path, and he wouldn't want to do that.

Mr. Singer: The minister is misleading the member.

Mr. Lewis: If I remember, perhaps he will recall that the centrepiece of the Throne Speech was the rescue of the Niagara Escarpment again this year, and I am asking the minister, how much money has he put aside in his budget for that purpose? He's now given me the ministries in which it will be found in bits and pieces. How much money is the minister spending on the escarpment, given his declaration of purpose in the Throne Speech? And how is it that he doesn't know and he can't tell us?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this information is contained in the estimates which will be presented to the House next week.

Mr. Lewis: That promise is as empty as every previous year. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. A question of the—

Mr. Bullbrook: A little argumentative.

Mr. Lewis: A little argumentative but succinct.

REMOVAL OF SAND FROM DUNES IN PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY

Mr. Lewis: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of the Environment. Maybe I can shift discussion for a moment. In view of the profits of Denison Mines, which were just published this last week—giving considerable increased earnings from its subsidiary, Lake Ontario Cement, relating to its sand dunes operation—does he not think that the government of the Province of Ontario should pass legislation to compensate Lake Ontario Cement in the amount of what remains of the lease rather than proceeding through expropriation, which will give that company quite a windfall in addition to the enormous profits it has extracted over the past several years?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, since we are not directly involved in any expropriation or any activities with the cement company, I think perhaps that question might be directed elsewhere.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Pass it around.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, will it be the Minister of Government Services who is dealing with the sand dunes and with Lake Ontario Cement?

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Government Services): Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Right! Well then, can the minister explain to me how he justifies giving this company a very considerable additional amount of money over and above what it has received by way of profit over the last several years, rather than simply exchanging the lease at its current value of $1 a year?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I advise the hon. member that my ministry is carrying out the expropriation of the lease at the request of the Minister of Natural Resources. The property is for parks purposes, as I understand it, and it will come under his ministry. The funds will be paid out of his budget. My ministry carries out the process of acquiring the land, whether it be by purchase or by expropriation.

Mr. Lewis: Therefore, I should direct it to the Minister of Natural Resources?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: Isn't it convenient that the Minister of Natural Resources is the only one associated with this question who isn't here?

I won't ask any more questions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of the Environment has the answers to previous questions.

POLLUTION PROBLEM AT CANADIAN GYPSUM

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have it somewhere, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Waterloo North (Mr. Good), asked me yesterday about what progress was being made by Canadian Gypsum Co. in order to comply with the requirements of the director's order of April 10, 1972. I think I indicated that I understood they had completed it, but the answer is that Canadian Gypsum Co. has completed installation of all required control equipment as prescribed in the order. All compliance dates were met and, in fact, some equipment was installed ahead of schedule. The company did not appear to have difficulty in meeting the March 31 deadline. Inspectors from the air management branch of my ministry are carrying on daily inspections to ensure the successful operation of the equipment.

As far as the court cases are concerned, at the present time there are no charges outstanding in provincial courts against Canadian Gypsum in connection with its Oak St. plant. There are, however, three appeals pending from provincial court decisions, although two of these appeals relate to the emission of odours rather than to particulate fallout.

There are three charges, together with one appeal, relating to the Mount Dennis plant which are yet to be heard. The trial of one of these charges was to begin last week in provincial court. I understand the other two charges are scheduled for trial in provincial court either this week or early next week.

These charges relate to the emission of odours and violations of a minister's order which was issued to the above noted in connection with the Mount Dennis plant.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, might I ask a supplementary question with respect to the answer that the minister has given? My question is this: Did I understand the minister to say that the orders have been completely complied with in the case of the Oak St. plant? Is the minister aware that over this last weekend there have been very serious complaints about emission of odours from that very plant?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was not, Mr. Speaker, but I will find out about it. That's the first I've heard of it.

THREATENED ARMSTRONG EPIDEMIC

Hon. Mr. Auld: The hon. member for Thunder Bay asked:

Is the minister aware that there is a danger of an epidemic because of the low quality of water in the area, as a result of contamination by the CNR in allowing fuel oil to escape and other matter from ground sources? [This is in connection with Armstrong.] Is the minister aware that the Ministry of Health has sent inspectors in and said that something must be done to avert such an epidemic? In view of that, what will his ministry do to avert such an epidemic?

Our ministry is, of course, aware—as I think I indicated at the time—of a continuing problem of bacterial contamination in some of the individual shallow well supplies in Armstrong. Generally speaking, this is caused by faulty well location, construction and maintenance, together with unsatisfactory waste disposal practices.

To our knowledge, at no time has the railway operation caused fuel oil contamination of local wells. However, during the past winter, a local service station did lose some gasoline which resulted in minimal impairment of two or three wells. This was investigated by both this ministry and the Ministry of Health and commensurate action is being taken to rectify the situation. This didn't cause bacterial contamination of any wells.

I might say, in addition to that, Mr. Speaker, that there has been an inter-ministerial committee put together and working. It has produced some preliminary suggestions about services to unorganized communities because, as certainly the hon. member for Thunder Bay knows, and other members from the north are aware, our problem has been that technically we can't put in a system in a community unless we have some community organization or some elected or representative group to deal with.

We are hoping to surmount that problem in some fashion very shortly.

AIR POLLUTION IN TORONTO

Hon. Mr. Auld: The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) asked me a couple of days ago if I was aware of what he referred to as the Touhey report, saying—I haven't the quote here—that the Toronto air is going to get worse.

On checking through one of my staff I find that the so-called Touhey report is a weekly publication in California geared to the gasoline marketing industry. The owner of this publication, Mr. Touhey, had been in Toronto a few weeks ago to speak to the Automatic Car Wash Association. Apparently the report of April 9 that the hon. member referred to was based on his visit here.

He headlined the report as follows: "Toronto, the Clean City." He went on to report that the city will be fighting smog in the future because it is being overbuilt with high-rise buildings, service stations and car washes. He indicated that in Toronto the builder is not required to show that there is need for the additional service stations or car washes, nor was the builder required to prepare an environmental impact statement in order to receive the permit to build a car wash. The report stated that no public hearings are required prior to the construction of additional service stations or car washes.

In my staff's telephone conversation with Mr. Touhey, he indicated that it is his belief that the large numbers of service stations are the cause of the smog problem in Los Angeles. He thought that Toronto was a very clean city, but would not remain so as a result of the increasing number of service stations.

We pointed out to Mr. Touhey that the meteorology, the weather, and the topography of Toronto and Los Angeles are very different, and that it is due to these differences that the Los Angeles smog is so bad in comparison to Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour has the answer to a previous question.

RUMOURS OF INCO LAYOFF

Hon. Mr. Guindon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a reply to a question from the hon. member for Nickel Belt with reference to International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd., Copper Cliff.

Following the question period yesterday, I asked my senior official to get in touch with Mr. F. Burnet, vice-president, employee relations. Mr. Burnet made the following statement:

No further cutbacks are anticipated in the Sudbury area, consequently no layoffs. Recent press reports in Sudbury of imminent layoffs are without foundation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

HURON COUNTY COTTAGE SURVEY OF SEWAGE DISPOSAL SYSTEMS

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment.

Why did the ministry refuse to grant permission to hire two summer students to do a cottage survey in Huron county of sewage disposal systems and their continued potential for pollution to lake water and drinking water supplies, and will the minister reconsider this matter?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'll be delighted to look into it. I imagine, as has happened in other places, there was a request to do this kind of cottage survey and we don't have the resources to do them all at once. We are doing about 5,000 a year. Perhaps in the judgement of our officials, there was not as great a priority need there as there might have been in some other place. However, I'll look into it and get in touch directly with the hon. member about it.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Chatham-Kent): Very low priority.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the OWRC has indicated that cottage pollution is a very serious problem along the Lake Huron shoreline, would the minister also consider that when he is looking into the entire matter?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside.

NATURAL GAS EXPLOSION IN PETERBOROUGH

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment, regarding the natural gas explosion in Peterborough on Jan. 8 and the coroner's jury report of March 3. This is the explosion in which three children were killed and the mother lost both legs.

Is the minister considering legislation which would make it mandatory for an independent inspection of gas mains after work has been done by other utilities in the vicinity of the gas main, and for inspection of all municipal gas mains on a more frequent basis than the present law requires?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, that does not come under the jurisdiction of this ministry. I know it's a little difficult to keep track with the reorganization and so on.

Mr. Ruston: The government changes it around so often, one never knows.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We have not been involved in that since the Ministry of the Environment was set up. It used to be in Energy and Resources Management. I can't tell the hon. member directly but I believe that it would be either the Ministry of Natural Resources, which has the Energy Board, or the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations which has most of the inspection function.

Mr. Ruston: The minister doesn't even know himself.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations whether he is the responsible minister?

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): I'll "fess" up to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Welland South.

WEST BERTIE SEWAGE SCHEME

Mr. Haggerty: I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment.

Can the minister inform the House why there has been a six-year delay in the approval for construction of the West Bertie sewage scheme in the town of Fort Erie by his ministry? Can the minister apply all his resources to expedite the approval of this scheme? The estimated cost, I think, has more than tripled since 1967.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, perhaps that might properly be put on the order paper for a detailed report as to the situation in the past and where we are standing at the moment. I am aware of that situation and

I know there have been a number of problems—a whole variety of things—that have come up during the period having to do with the region. I'll get a full report for the hon. member if he'll put it on the order paper, Mr. Speaker.

NATURAL GAS EXPLOSION IN PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Would the minister like me to repeat the question that I asked the Minister of the Environment, or can he answer that question now?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, it isn't necessary for the member to repeat the question. I have read something in the press about that within the last 24 hours. It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the technical requirements are set out in the regulations under the relevant legislation.

It would appear, certainly from my reading of the article in the paper, that the regulations were not adhered to by the local municipality or municipal people in removing the earth and doing certain repairs in the location of that house which led to the subsequent tragedy in the deaths of three children and serious injuries to the mother. I have this morning directed an inquiry to the director of the technical standards branch to ascertain the extent of our involvement in that. I will be more than pleased to advise the House or, in turn, to advise the individual member, if he would like, as soon as I have that information.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: Is the minister considering the mandatory use of plastic-lined pipes in place of the iron pipes which were installed back in 1909 in that area?

Hon. Mr. Clement: Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussions along those lines with the senior people in my ministry. The problem, of course, is one of cost. It would be practical, perhaps, to have legislation, making it effective from now on, for that type of pipe. As far as considering the removal of all such pipes throughout the province is concerned, the cost, I suspect, would be entirely prohibitive and if passed on to the consumer would result in great financial burden to the consumer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

EFFECT OF ENERGY TAX ON GEARED-TO-INCOME RENTS

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Revenue: In light of the imposition of the seven per cent energy tax and its effect on senior citizens' geared-to-income housing, making their costs of operation somewhat higher, will the minister assure the House that these additional costs for light, heat and power will not be passed on in terms of increased rental to senior citizens living in geared-to-income housing?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, of course I cannot give any such assurance at the present time because we have to study the impact of this on public housing.

Mr. B. Newman: The minister should have studied it before!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, the hon. member was advised a week or two ago, in answer to a question—perhaps it was another hon. member—that we were holding the line on any possible increases in rentals of public housing until the whole schedule is reviewed. We have been asking the federal government to do this for some time, and it has now agreed to do so. That will all be taken into consideration presumably at the time we discuss the rent schedule with the federal government and with CMHC.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF THE BUDGET

Mr. R. G. Eaton (Middlesex South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege in this House. Yesterday, at the conclusion of the budget speech, 117 copies of the budget were given to the pages to pass out to this House. A number of people sitting under the galleries acquired copies from the pages—some of the pages were a little distraught over it—but the members up in this area didn't get copies. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to see that the privileges of this House are maintained so that the members get this information.

Mr. Speaker: I am not just sure what the hon. member wants the Speaker to do about it. I will speak to the Treasurer and see if he can get more copies.

Mr. Eaton: What I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that in the future you could prevent the interference of the work of the pages by the people who are sitting under this gallery and by the number of people who are gathering behind there all the time.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Carton moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, this bill is an amendment to the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act. It authorizes the Minister of Transportation and Communications to enter into an agreement with respect to experimental and demonstration projects related to public transportation, the design of transit systems, and the industrial property rights related to transportation.

It is being introduced at this time to permit the completion of an agreement with the developer of the intermediate capacity demonstration project at the CNE, who will be chosen within the next few weeks.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 13th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. R. D. Rowe in the chair.

ESTIMATES, PROVINCIAL SECRE- TARIAT FOR JUSTICE

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Mr. Chairman, in bringing before the Legislature the estimates of the ministries within the Justice policy field, I know that the ministers associated in this field will share with me a consciousness that we are dealing with the most sensitive areas of public responsibility. While this sensitivity does not make our task any easier, it does give us the satisfaction that we are dealing with significant and important matters of concern to every person in the province.

The work of this field is not as concerned with money and resources as it is with concepts and principles, although money becomes significant in the provision of those services that we must provide for the people in order that they may enjoy the concepts and principles upon which our society is founded.

In reviewing the total estimates for this field, I know that the hon. members will not be overpowered by the relative claim upon public revenues, but at the same time I believe they will all recognize that the services represented by this field are an integral part of the structure of government in its new form.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): And completely supernumerary.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The concept of a Justice policy field recognizes that justice does not consist of isolated principles or institutions. It consists of the effective co-ordination of the separate responsibilities of law enforcement—the Crown, the courts, and the correctional system—so that they deal justly with the public, the individual, in the determination and protection of rights.

The reorganization that has been carried out by the government through this Legislature has not only enhanced and clarified the basic rights of our people, but in establishing the Justice policy field has provided an effective structure for developing and co-ordinating our many systems with equitable resolution of conflict.

Within the Justice policy field we find that above all ministries in government we have to achieve a difficult balance, for in serving the needs of public protection we must, to some extent, affect the rights of the individuals who compose that public. In protecting society as a whole we must still provide for the rehabilitation of the offender who sometimes threatens that society.

In protecting the consumer we must ensure a recognition of the proper and reasonable needs of a supplier. In meeting this balance the law is not always the complete answer. While I do not always go back to the Old Testament for authority, I think we could share with the prophet Jeremiah the recognition that the written law cannot resolve all of man's problems and that he himself must, in some way, respond to the laws and support them if they are to benefit all mankind.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That's what the provincial secretary has been thinking about. I was wondering.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Has he tried Amos? He's actually even better.

Mr. Singer: Shall we beat our swords into ploughshares?

Mr. Lewis: Poor Jeremiah!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In approaching our problems we have encountered the difficulties of attitudinal change in all the ministries and recognize that one of our purposes must be to create an environment within which social forces can better develop attitudes that will in themselves do a great deal to maintain the kind of society within which we would wish to live.

The thrust of the programmes which are represented in the estimates, which the members will shortly review, will demonstrate to the hon. members our endeavours to relate our principles and institutions more clearly to the people so that they may not only serve, but be better served, in our system of justice.

The estimates of the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) will reflect new methods and approaches in the development of a court system and the management of the various aspects of that system. In moving further in the training of justices of the peace and the development of Crown legal clerks, the hon. members will recognize the relating of the Attorney General's ministry to the needs, not only of the public, but to the needs of law enforcement as that ministry co-ordinates these responsibilities with those of the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko).

The Solicitor General's estimates will reflect our concern for the protection of the public from the offender in a manner that is consistent with his reform and rehabilitation. You will note the increase of resources for criminal law enforcement in areas of major concern—better communication facilities, better training programmes and facilities and more effective systems—all designed to serve and protect our society.

But in conjunction with this, Mr. Chairman, you will also see that we will develop the community resource programme for the humane and effective assistance of the offender who deserves and merits that help. Our temporary absence programme and our group homes have opened new and acceptable ways that have been most effective in the treatment of carefully selected offenders.

The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps) will, no doubt, speak with some pride and authority on these subjects as he reviews them in his estimates.

As in all areas of justice and law enforcement, the hon. members will see the same balance being developed in Consumer and Commercial Relations. The problem of consumer reporting agencies will be dealt with in a manner that will meet the requirements of both the people and the industry, for each of these needs the other to meet their objectives.

In a similar manner, the ministry is approaching consumer warranties so that any action will reflect not only the protection of the purchaser, but the relationship of such protection to commerce and to costs and to the purchasing public generally. Thus, the preparation of a green paper.

Our presentation of a position on federal competition policy pursues our practice of bringing together the appropriate ministries so that these fundamental policy positions will give the co-ordinated and considered decisions of government. The programme structures as disclosed in the estimates of this ministry will indicate the difficult objectives that are sought to be obtained by all ministries in this field.

The ministers who are associated with me in our endeavour will be reviewing their estimates in detail, but I did wish to illustrate for the hon. members, however briefly, the mutuality of principle throughout the ministries and the manner in which their programmes relate. It is in this general area of co-ordination and policy development that the ministers have worked with me in the policy field so that we share ideas and exchange views that bring us towards our common objectives.

My own secretariat is small both in numbers and in expenditures, as members will shortly see in their perusal of my estimates. This selectiveness is by design for in meeting my responsibilities I make full use of the resources not only of the ministries but also of the Management Board and cabinet office.

Indeed, of the three professionals in my office other than my deputy, two are seconded on a flexible arrangement; one comes from the Ministry of the Attorney General and the other comes from the Ministry of Correctional Services. In using the resources of others engaged in similar missions, I feel that we not only recognize some economies but, more importantly, we obtain the best and most helpful advice from those who are already fully informed upon their subjects.

With this small nucleus my office works with the ministries in bringing together and preparing material on the issues that are brought forward for the consideration of the justice committee of cabinet. These issues relate to proposed new legislation, policy evaluation, priority setting and similar matters in which our advice and recommendations may be helpful not only to the ministries but also to the government in other fields.

We in the Justice policy field are fortunate, Mr. Chairman, in that our purpose and our goals are closely associated in the end result—the protection of both the public right and the individual's right in a manner consistent with the principles of law and justice upon which our Legislature and this province are founded.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I listened with fascinated interest to this nine-page statement because I had puzzled at very great length as to what the Provincial Secretary for Justice really does. Having listened carefully and having, through the courtesy of the minister, been supplied with a copy of his statement which I could follow as he delivered it, certainly not one doubt has been removed from my mind. I still don't know what he does.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): He reads Jeremiah.

Mr. Singer: He reads Jeremiah! I thought it was very touching that Jeremiah has been consulted, and I wonder when the minister is going to start beating the swords into ploughshares and generally improving the situation of the world.

I'm puzzled, Mr. Chairman; I am really genuinely puzzled because we have nine pages of absolutely nothing. The minister has told us that everybody gets along fine together. They have a small staff; he has a small budget. I suppose in relation to $4.3 billion, the minister's request for $358,000 doesn't loom that large.

I am amazed, Mr. Chairman, at the absolute lack of any information in these estimates, one pages J8 and J9, to tell us what's going to happen to even that paltry sum of $358,000. It's going to be taken up in salaries and wages, employee benefits, transportation and communication, services and supplies and equipment. I would have been most interested, Mr. Chairman, to have the minister tell us the kind of meetings that go on.

How often does he meet with his colleagues, the Attorney General, the Solicitor

General, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement), and the Minister of Correctional Services? Do they meet once a week, or twice a week? What kind of agendas do they really consider? Do the civil servants come and see the minister or don't they come and see him?

Does it fall within the aegis of the superminister to examine broad questions of policy? If so, what broad questions of policy has he recently examined? If he has recently examined any, I would like to hear about them and perhaps hear his views.

I know, for instance, Mr. Chairman, that there is in the possession of one of the galaxy over there—maybe all of them—the latest report from the Law Reform Commission which was supposed to be a mammoth, monster and erudite production telling us how to reorganize the courts. The government has sat on this report for a month or more, and I note a hint that when we get to the Attorney General he's going to tell us how the courts are going to be reorganized.

Mr. Chairman, wouldn't one have thought that it might be appropriate at this time, when the superminister, the superchief from Halton, rides happily into the Legislature and says, "Give me a measly $358,000," that he could have spent a minute or two telling us about the recommendations of Mr. Leal and his Law Reform Commission, and whether the government likes him or whether they don't like him? It might even have been courteous to provide in advance to the opposition copies of the Leal report reorganizing the courts, so that we could have read it and had some opinions about what the minister is going to do.

That's not going to be the way. Mr. Chairman, the minister didn't refer to it directly, but let me ask him if he has read the Leal report. Is the Leal report going to be adopted in full or in part or not at all? And is his reference to reorganization in the courts, which he sloughs over to his friend the Attorney General, who I note is now coaching him out of the side of his mouth—and this minister needs lots of coaching—is the reference to the Attorney General really the sole consideration that the Provincial Secretary for Justice has brought to the question of court reorganization?

One would have thought that in a job such as this one, which in essence might well present a challenge to an ambitious minister or to a lawyer who has in mind some kind of genuine law reform, the minister would have been given a chance to tell us about some of his views about how the courts might be reorganized.

Perhaps the minister has some views about our divorce procedures. Does he think that our courts are working well insofar as divorce procedures are concerned? Does the minister, or the ministry, or the galaxy, have any theories about improving divorce procedures? Is there any point, for instance, in continuing the adversary system in divorces?

One would have thought, Mr. Chairman, that the minister on the way by might have noted the efforts by a number of non-lawyers—terrible people—to facilitate, to their own financial advantage, divorce actions through our courts. With proper righteousness, the Law Society descended on those people; some of them were haled before the courts, and some of them were convicted.

But when people who are not legally trained give this kind of impetus to a segment of law enforcement and it is apparently received by some people in the public with much enthusiasm, one wonders if perhaps there is something wrong with the system. Perhaps the Provincial Secretary for Justice could have given some of his ideas on whether the system could or should be improved.

The detail, I would have thought, might have been expanded by the Attorney General; but surely the theory of this kind of thinking might have been expressed today by this minister who asks us for this paltry $358,000.

One wonders if the Provincial Secretary for Justice has any new theories about our land registry system. I am sure that the minister has followed very carefully the disposal by the Court of Appeal of that great series of questions involving Green Acre, A and B, mortgagees, land divisions and so on, and that the Provincial Secretary for Justice has thoroughly digested the 50-odd page judgement of the Court of Appeal dealing with those important questions.

One would have thought that because thousands of titles in the Province of Ontario are called into question, the Provincial Secretary for Justice, together with his advisers, might have been able to indicate to us what the Justice galaxy has decided to do about clearing up these matters. After all, they do have a very substantial facility in terms of lawyers and advisers, an ability to hire outside experts and so on. But there has been not a word. We just get quotes from Jeremiah.

One would have thought that perhaps it had occurred to the Provincial Secretary for Justice that he might have looked into the conduct of negligence actions in the courts.

Does the minister really believe that we are handling our litigation in relation to automobile negligence actions with care, dispatch and intelligence?

I am involved in one now. I was telling the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations about it. It's an intersection accident, apparently quite simple except that two cars were involved; one car had three people in it, and the other car had five people in it. There's quite a discussion as to whose fault it might have been: Did car A stop at the stop sign or didn't it? Did car B go barreling on through? Was it driving with proper care and attention?

Incidentally, besides three passengers in one car and five in the other, there were owners of each car who were not present; so they of course are involved in the litigation. So there are three principals in one car, five in the other, and two owners. So that is 10 people who are involved.

Out of this comparatively simple incident, I think seven law suits have been generated. And they are bouncing back and forth; some in the Supreme Court, some in the county court.

And this is how ludicrous it gets, Mr. Chairman: One unfortunate passenger neglected to take legal advice before the year had expired. So he just has no remedy at all. He is out of luck. Now the other nine people are going to have an opportunity to have their claims adjudicated upon in due course, if we can ever get down to trial because of this multiplicity of action. But the poor fellow who didn't happen to wander in to a lawyer's office within the year's time is just out of luck. He was seriously injured and he has no remedy at all.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Is this an argument for public insurance?

Mr. Singer: No, it is an argument for bringing some sense to this kind of public problem. I won't accept that it is an argument for public insurance at all.

Mr. Young: Sounds like it to me.

Mr. Singer: But surely, Mr. Chairman, it is an argument—and I am going to explore this at greater length with some of the other ministers. It is an argument for the government to look at this thing; to wonder whether or not two or three years after the event—the accident took place on Dec. 5, 1971; we are only up to April of 1973 now; we might get on to trial in 1974. Whether it makes any sense three years after the event trying to figure out whether car A stopped at the stop sign or car B didn't stop at the stop sign. Whether the eight people were injured or not. Whether the poor fellow who was unfortunately not aware of the fact that he had to come in and consult a lawyer before the limitation period had expired should be deprived of his rights.

Surely there must be a simpler way than involving six different lawyers, each one of whom has his own idea about how these cases should be handled; each one of whom has his own idea about where the discoveries should take place, when they should take place, if they should take place at all. Several motions have already gone before the courts to argue these things out.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, one would have thought that someone in the exalted position of the Provincial Secretary for Justice could have come to us with some idea of how we could improve the public handling of these matters. When you involve six or eight lawyers in this sort of thing, who is going to suffer? Each one of those lawyers is going to be paid, and probably paid very well before this thing is over. Is anything going to be proved? Is any public good going to be achieved? This is the sort of problem that I would have wished that the Provincial Secretary for Justice would have told us about, and not just quotes from Jeremiah.

I would have liked to have heard the Provincial Secretary for Justice's opinion about the effectiveness of the new bail laws. Does he think they are good, or does he think they are bad, or does he have any theories at all—or has he given it any consideration?

Some of the police officers who have been questioned, and who have given public statements, have expressed grave concern about it. I think there is room for presenting the other side. But I would like to hear what the government's side is. Has the government got a side at all? Does the Provincial Secretary for Justice have any ideas about bail laws?

Recently in Toronto, Mr. Speaker, two unfortunate policemen were murdered and there was a considerable public discussion and concern expressed about the circumstances of their murder. For instance, out of those unfortunate deaths arose several questions dealing with the public availability of guns.

Does the Provincial Secretary for Justice have any theories or ideas about the availability of guns? Is there any thinking in the Justice galaxy about the handling of guns?

Should guns be made available for sale on the conditions they are now? Should there be more registration—less registration? Should there be prohibition? Is there any consistent theory emerging from this new group over there? What powers have we got in Ontario? And if we haven't got enough powers, are we preparing briefs and making representations to the Department of Justice in Ottawa? That is the sort of thing that I would have enjoyed hearing from the Provincial Secretary for Justice.

Well, I could go on and cover 15 or 20 more subjects. I say, Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect to the hon. minister—because I like him; he's not a bad fellow—these nine pages of pap that he presented here are a further insult to the members of this House. It gives us no idea really of what he is doing. Then, having listened to him, to try to find out what he's doing and not being able to find it out at all, we look at his estimates, and there isn't one thing in those estimates that tells us what he's going to do, other than that some people are going to get some salaries and there are going to be some employee benefits. There's a little for transportation. There are some services, and I think they are going to have some supplies and equipment.

Now I think that's just great! Perhaps $358,000 in the context of $7.3 billion is not very much, but if this is all this minister has to tell us, then I think it's a waste of time and I think this estimate probably should be reduced to $1.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, that is one thing that it is very difficult to do. The leading question is why a man of the parts of the minister in question could not roll this whole portfolio into a single ball and handle it all himself as other progenitors of his have been known to do, including the Macaulays and the Whites of this world, and he wouldn't unduly sweat.

Now what have we got? The previous minister was so bored and he found this portfolio so empty and whimsical a one that he departed elsewhere to find something to keep him occupied. A man who has some considerable ability and demonstrated it in another portfolio moves into his place and the thing is equally as empty and innocuous as it has been previously, as was proved this morning by this statement which I had awaited with some anticipation, hoping that fulfilment would come and that Jeremiah standing on the rooftops would have been listened to. But the call of the prophet he made is very different from the one that the minister is making.

It may be in this context—and I suspect it is and time will prove its worth—that the efficiency experts who sought to rearrange the government portfolios are wrong in this particular instance. I can see a considerable justification for a superminister over human or natural resources because of the plenitude, the diversity, intricacy and what not of the various agencies and portfolios that fall under him. But in Justice it is kind of artificially created. They tried to find some common factor that welds it together. It seems in some vague way as if all the four different ministries under the head of this minister have a correspondence and a drift in common.

I think if you look a little more deeply, you will find that it is not altogether as it might superficially appear. The simple thing that they would have in common would be public protection, of course. That is shared by numerous other ministers, I suppose, in a vague way or an indefinite way by every ministry of the Crown. Labour, for instance, has certainly a major role in public protection in a diversity of fields, and the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) protects the public, I trust, on occasion from bad merchandise.

That particular function would appear to be the central one. So they've lumped them together under a particular head and, having disarrayed it, have prevented a person who has considerable capabilities from performing any function that, as far as we can see on the surface and from the statements made, is worthwhile. That is regrettable.

This ministry is described in the estimates as being responsible for the development and incorporation of policy recommendations. What co-ordination specifically was arrived at in the past year, say, between the Consumer and Commercial Relations on one side of the fence and the Solicitor General on the other? How did the two boys get along together? What was it they discussed?

I suppose that the policing aspect has always been tied in somehow with securities commissions. The blackguards water the stock and they take off for the hills, and I suppose the police would be needed. I don't know why the government needs a special ministry and special co-ordination to see that they perform that obvious and traditional function. Is there something deeper that escapes the eyes of the opposition? Then, if so, let us know. We are entitled to know. The public is entitled to know—and I think we are going to insist upon finding out a bit more that goes on.

When the former minister was here, he partially justified his existence in a speech—which I would call a Cosa Nostra speech—of July 26, 1972. The speech was prepared for the Italian-Canadian associations and clubs and in it he said a word or two as to what internecine, “very secret projects”, as he called them, were going on apace within his department.

He said there was no particular reason he couldn't give voice to this, but the fact of the matter is that he didn't. He hinted, darkly so to speak, that there were numerous machinations. The wheels were turning over and projects were being initiated with respect to the control of syndicated crime, various aspects of international espionage, immigration controls, all this sort of thing. But he simply didn't give us any real indication of what was done.

He said “quietly”, in his speech—you're telling me, sotto voce, not only beneath the arbour, but beneath contempt—“and without fanfare”:

... devise new structures and new organizations within the government and law enforcement agencies to effectively combat a problem that, to my knowledge, has not been successfully met elsewhere.

What I want to know is: What new structures and what new organizations is he talking about? He speaks of one here—a project working with the Solicitor General and with groups in the community; and with the AG's department and police; partially with the Securities Commission; and with a representative from his own office—believe it or not—on a project with respect to the international crime context. This is one of those liaison internal committees that was set up. But, as I say, this is the only one of which I am particularly cognizant.

I wish—without totally bringing the government down or revealing the things that will so jeopardize its future and the work of law reform and the work of investigations—that if it is all that deep and sensitive, then please let us know and one will keep one's mouth shut; but I just don't believe it.

Therefore, within the ministry—objectively speaking and apart from how they feel about one another, which is too subjective for my emotional taste in this House—the only thing that there is in common is the business of policing. I would think that in that particular context, taking his lead, perhaps—or maybe this will turn the minister off and maybe I'd better not say it. I was going to say, taking his lead from Mr. Lang's book, up in the federal level; he's making considerable public impact. He attends the judicial gatherings and various university meetings. He makes speeches. He's groping. The man's trying. He's trying to be imaginative. He's creative. He's doing something called thinking.

But what speeches has the hon. minister made recently before any august—or August or January—tribunal or group with respect to anything under the sun?

I've written into the ministry asking that every word spoken by any of these ministers be immediately sent over so I can drip with the wisdom coming out of the boughs, but I haven't seen very much. As a matter of fact there's been such a dearth on this part of the total doldrums of the government at the present time—nothing—no rainfall comes, nothing to celebrate with; no blessed view coming—no oasis; drought.

Mr. Gaunt: The member hasn't read the budget report.

Mr. Lawlor: Jeremiah-like, from heaven with which to refresh the day! I sit in anguish over here wishing also to have something to do.

The legislation that the minister is bringing in at the present time is simply atrocious; bits and pieces, tatters and tatterdemalion. I'm surprised at the minister, with all the things that are going on. However, we're hoping for better things in the next two weeks—after Easter.

In any event, what the minister needs and what he should do and what he should be studying—and the Solicitor General is partially studying—is the philosophy of the police. Has the minister really given any thought to the functions of the police force in modern society and, particularly, in the context of this society? My colleague, the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and I on previous occasions have outlined two philosophies of the police—what I would call, basically, the British one on one side and the American on the other.

The British one is very different. It's all contained in Halsbury and it's come down through history. It's one of high beneficence, independence and autonomy on the part of every individual policeman.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): They certainly treat the Catholics that way in Ulster.

Mr. Lawlor: He is an independent agent. The American is the sergeant-major theory of policemen with federal military echelons, with everybody gradated down and working under orders in the strictest type of military context.

I find that unpalatable. I think we gravitate toward it, more and more, as we do most things American. I think we should shift our emphasis; but you don't do it unless you know about it and unless you study it and unless you spend a good deal of time on this particular context.

There is also the whole business of the training and education, both of guards in correctional institutions and police which have a certain ad idem of function. What is the Provincial Secretary's thinking about that? What is he doing about that? There again, there seem to me two basic schools. One is the coercive school. You put the thumb down. It's authoritarian. You damn well make people do what they don't want to do. This is a basic thing—many men are temperamentally inclined that way and use authoritarian tactics; they think it's the only effective way to order society.

On the other hand there are other types of men—I won't judge between them—who are suaver, if you will. They would appeal and be more persuasive, go to people's humanity and try to encourage them. They have found that a recalcitrant kid or a juvenile delinquent who will not respond to a kick in the pants might be egged on by a little honey; you know, by a kind word or by a little understanding.

These things work right across the spectrum from the time we're children until we are aged. Which way do you get along best in life? Which is the way to treat other human beings? By which method do you grow? If you grow by that method, how do you expect the other guys who are kicked in the teeth all the time to do anything but to retrogress, grow more frustrated and grow more cruel and hit back harder against society as a result of it? These are the two schools.

Is the minister studying them? We placed him on a perch of ultimate eminence. He sits like an eagle surveying the plains. Why doesn't he swoop down and pick up a little pabulum once in a while and come forward with that in this House? He should not give us an empty statement like he gave this morning but say what he thinks of these particular matters.

These matters, you know, Mr. Chairman, probably are not susceptible of legislation. Legislation isn't that neat; it isn't that sensitive to human needs. It can't be. It's too broad. It's too categorical. It's like a knife or a cleaver that hacks and causes a good deal of bleeding. Ministers in their attitudes, in the ways in which they look upon the problems of law and the problems of administration of justice in the province can give a tone to it; they can give an orientation, by making public statements in this House and elsewhere and by orientating the ministries in a particular direction.

It can be a great alleviating force for human civilization and for the advance of people in terms of the things that they suffer from. If you add to them you are part of the problem, of course; by and large, we suspect that that is the way it is over there.

The government is too much in line with current apathetic thinking instead of bearing down and seeking new paths, testing new possibilities and forcing the pace. If it doesn't, it loses office. The fact is that it has retained office because it has been sufficiently flexible and sympathetic over the years to feel just enough of what's going on in the populace to respond to it. Respond to it to a greater extent I would ask.

If by doing so, it confers blessings and stays in office, so be it. That's the way it is. I'm giving the government the elixir and the key to success this morning and I would ask that it has the effrontery and the wisdom to absorb it.

On a specific issue under this head, the philosophy of the police, would the minister give some thought to the very concrete problem of police commissions in Ontario? That is an area in which the member for Downsview and I have been very much exercised. We think that the present methods of appointments and the way in which they operate are not particularly democratic, as you well know. They are insulated, obtuse, high-handed, all the features that we find just are not palatable in the modern world and which, by and large as politicians, we have had to learn to dispense with.

Why should the Provincial Secretary perpetuate under his aegis a whole series of these bodies which act in a way that is professionally contrary to what he himself would do. He wouldn't retain office if he took this position. Maybe the minister thinks that they need a certain aloofness and an arm's-length relationship with the people; I don't. I think that all that breeds is an insensitivity to the changing police forces, to the needs of the police themselves, and to the community. But, when many women approach the police commission office of Ontario, and sit in the hallway for hours waiting for these obtuse beggars not to speak to them, then it is high time that the ministers of Justice and the provincial secretary in the higher role, working with them, should move in.

Again, I don't think it has to be necessarily by way of any legislation. It needs simply a directive, you know; just one word in the right place. But if the Provincial Secretary is going to reform and make these institutions democratic, I suppose he could keep one or two appointed people on there, if he really insisted upon it—if he was like Alexander Hamilton and didn't trust the people—if it was his thinking that aristocratic intent was necessary to get the very best people you would appoint.

But for the rest of a seven-man commission, or say a five-man commission, I would think three ought to be elected—the majority ought to be elected at least. And the business of having the judges in there we have spoken about too often, but it could bear repeating.

I would like to know whether the minister has been working over and is deeply concerned with constitutional issues. You know, we hear every day, and increasingly, about our malformed constitution—that the powers as segregated between 91 and 92 are inefficient, ineffective and nonsensical—and I agree with that—that nobody from this government, so far as I know, has ever made a profound study of it.

Mark McGuigan was the parliamentary assistant who, working with the members of the Senate, went throughout the country. They produced an eggshell. It was empty of yolk, if you looked at it. It's the most disappointing document that I have read recently. In order, I suppose, to try and appease and accommodate all the various diverse warring factions in this country, they finally came down with a blob, with a common denominator of nothingness.

Why don't we do something on it, since they have abandoned the field, and came forward with nothing of any efficacy? Why doesn't the provincial secretary's department go forward with an investigation and make recommendations, perhaps on an ad hoc basis?

In this field it is obvious that, say, in marketing legislation, something has to be altered, not just by way of the under table deals that we have accommodated ourselves to over the last 100 years; where we do in effect what we can't do verbally with the constitution as it stands, and simply scout it, simply ignore it, go around it, without bringing its explicit terms into mind.

I would ask that the provincial secretary does give some consideration to a study of the constitution, perhaps with some participation from members of this House, because it certainly is in need of reform. Where the vital spots are, they are rubbing against you every day of the week, in Treasury and in practically every other area—Natural Resources are subject to it too.

I just want to pause for a moment, Mr. Chairman, to congratulate the ministry—all the ministers who are concerned with this are in their seats now, I think. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has left for a few moments, but he was here previously. Now that's commendable, that's doing their job—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Don't overdo it.

Mr. Lawlor: —when everybody finally shows up to take an interest in their area. I think perhaps it's a banner day in the House. It is the first day in the history of the Ontario Legislature that I can remember that it has ever happened, and they are to be given credit.

I would like to know next as to what the Provincial Secretary's liaison with the federal government is, how he is participating, under what heads are ongoing conversations taking place between them—the Provincial Secretary that way, without making them feel in any—as, I suppose, the ambassador plenipotentiary between his four subordinates, if I may put it that way without making them feel in any way inferior—and the man in charge of the justice system up in Ottawa.

I notice again that Otto Lang, the Minister of Justice, on Aug. 6, 1972, made a speech called "New Perspectives in the Judicial Function", in which he outlined a number of things which might take place within the judiciary. They would have a profound reforming effect, a highly beneficial effect, in the sense of speeding everything up—of getting cases on and getting them adjudicated with efficacy.

He pointed out that practising lawyers don't necessarily make the best judges. He also pointed out that a man appointed to the bench may only be highly competent in a single field, whereas by the laying on of hands he is supposed to be a master of many—and that is not so. At the very least, he contended, there ought to be a special kind of training for judges—either in-service training or after appointment but prior to them assuming their seats—by experts in many fields. I think all that he says about this is particularly true.

One of the many things the federal minister suggests is that the judiciary attend conferences that are cognizant of and allied to fields of interest in which they are carrying on their work, particularly with minority groups, say, so that they will have a better understanding and a better working relationship with them, and rub shoulders with those people at the grass-roots level to know how these people think and what their problems really are, instead of pontificating from on high as to what they should or shouldn't be doing. And he has arranged conferences of that kind with the Metis and others. Surely we in this province can place our provincial judges in greater rapport with the community?

I know there are conferences of judges talking to themselves—and that is precisely what they do—but surely we could open the way to improved relationships. One of the faults of the judiciary is insulation; there is a sense of loneliness, of detachment, which means abstraction and that they get away from the core issues. They no longer understand things because they don't feel them with their skins; as lawyers they rubbed up against it, but as judges they are abstracted from the day-to-day life of human beings.

This is a great fault, and something must be done to rectify it. But they can't do it on their own, because they are not in a position to do so. A judge must be extremely careful and sensitive of his relations with the public. But we can make it artificially possible for him to do that by setting up the appropriate apparatus and mechanism. Otto Lang is doing it, and I suggest that it would be a thing that the minister could do in his ministry which in some way would justify its continued existence.

In the area of law reform, as has been said, we are waiting with eager anticipation that munificent document with respect to the re-organization of the court structure, with various types of duties that may be given to various types of judges. I suspect this would be the central work that we might get down to in this term of the Ontario Legislature in this particular department. That would be nose-to-the-grindstone work, so to speak.

We were kept extremely busy under Mr. Wishart in the old days, doing what I felt was fruitful and valuable work. There was quite a lot of intense study at home and getting ready; when we came in, we could trade ideas. We thought we were serving some minimal function in the life of the courts of the province.

That seems to have died right off; bankruptcy of intellect and operation has taken its place. Perhaps we can get a small revivalist movement going under the tents with respect to the reform of the courts, and I would anticipate that we would get on with it. It seems to me that regarding reform of the courts, there are basically only two areas that we could remove from the courts and place under special tribunals, or else disperse more widely than they are at the present time—I prefer the special tribunal—that is, if the area of divorce law and the area of automobile negligence cases were taken out of the courts I don't think there would be the delay, the burden, the chafing, a simple reform would be constituted by that.

I won't say Lang affirms it; he simply says it is something worth considering. It would certainly obviate most of the difficulties we are presently suffering from. I have faint hope of this minister doing that. He has taken his stance and dug his heels in on the automobile situation.

That wouldn't preclude him, of course, from setting up special tribunals to hear the cases because, as was pointed out, they are largely fact tribunals. What they are trying to do is determine the facts of situations and the interpretive side does not require the erudition of a common law judge to come to conclusions. As a matter of fact, all it does irritate them. You got the sense of that irritation from Mr. McRuer time and time again in the course of his report.

I wanted to mention to the provincial secretary the legal aid matters. There he could do munificent studies again with respect to exploring the possibilities, to see what was being done in other jurisdictions in this regard. I think he has some responsibility; he can't delegate that, of course, to the Law Society in any way.

I have sensed, by and large, that is what the Provincial Secretary is trying to do; to let them do the basic digging because, he says, the administration is in their hands. That doesn't mean that the overall philosophy—the way in which legal aid should go; and the business of community offices and legal offices and things of that kind—ought to be wholly left to them. The Attorney General and I will have an opportunity next week to explore its possibilities more deeply. Money can be saved there, incidentally, as it is being done in Manitoba by simply giving a block fee in, say, uncontested divorce actions and things of that kind. I think they saved up to $400,000 last year.

Let me mention under this head again—and not much mention has been made of this in this House thus far—that this ministry is getting alleviation from the federal government as of, I believe, this year to the tune of $4 million. It has been spending about $10 million to $11 million on legal aid at the present time; it is going to get $4 million from the federal government under that particular head as I understand it. Therefore this minister is left with some considerable room, without eating it all up, to get down closer to the poor and to those who are really in need of legal aid by way of the community officers, etc., than he has ever been before.

Even if he spends $8 million with the federal government's $4 million on top, he is still ahead of the game, with an extra couple of million dollars to play with in this regard, to make it more palatable, to make it more humane and to get down to things in that particular regard. Some of the money, I understand, is going to the victims of crimes; that is a contribution being made by the federal government, too. I am not clear as to what is the precise sum involved in that idea.

Another area, as I mentioned earlier, in which the previous minister who has lamentably departed the fold was dealing with was the area of syndicated crime. Are those investigations and that so-called project going on apace within the ministry at the present time? Exactly what is the score in that regard?

The only other area in which he seemed to take a great interest—and he had already done the major work in the field while still Attorney General—was the business of the racetracks' parimutuel betting. He worked himself a little trip to Australia on that occasion. He produced a tome that would shake the rafters as to the context of racing in every conceivable part of Uganda.

It is a most beguiling document, indeed, but what is happening? What exactly is taking place at the present time? Is the Provincial Secretary still attending upon the federal government? Does he find that his persuasive powers are so much in the bushlands that he is unable to move the monster? What is going on in that particular area?

Here is another area in which we find dereliction in the sense—not reposed exactly but like a settling tank, full of acetylene or maybe prussic acid or something. The Lord's Day legislation is my bedtime reading. Before I go to bed every night I pick up and read some section—perhaps on hotels and restaurants and the number of hours which they operate and the rotation system that is going to be involved. Is the minister afraid of it? If he's afraid of it I don't blame him a bit.

On the other hand, they say something fairly innocuous, they say that Sunday is a day which ought to be kept free and it ought to be secular.

Mr. Singer: Jeremiah had something to say about that.

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): He wanted to make it Saturday.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, why not get on with it? The law is in a mess. It's getting worse and compounding itself by the larger stores and others staying open the full weekends and attracting more and more clientele. Read the Law Reform Commission report on it. I substantially agree with it. I think Sunday should be maintained in the way it is, with the exceptions and exclusions that the commission has set forth there, pretty well along the lines that it set them forth.

Anyway, that's not my demesne. I'm only here to carp and criticize and the minister is supposed to be moving in contemplation, almost Socratic contemplation. You remember, Socrates would stand on a corner for several hours completely lost, and they would say, "He's gone. He's started to think again." Has the minister ever found himself in a corner of the parliament buildings—say out on the steps—and suddenly stopped dead for several hours—even several minutes—and somebody says, "Oh, Kerr's thinking again"?

Mr. J. P. MacBeth (York West): Is that too much to expect from a minister?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes. Another area in which I find we're terribly deficient—it doesn't concern the little cabal of exquisite prototypes we have before us this morning, but it does concern the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Auld)—is the studies in environmental law. I mean, they're doing some kind of threadbare stuff over at Osgoode Hall law school.

I recently purchased a book on that—I think the least they could do is give members of the Legislature these things free, but there you are—since I'm trying to make some kind of peerless contribution to the ongoing life of this community. But in any event—I think it cost me 15 bucks—take a look at it. It's a bound volume on environmental law.

We're just going to have to make major inroads on that area of law. It's not going to be done by the minister himself, because he's not a lawyer and not that much aware of what the problems are. I'm thinking of class actions. I'm thinking of private actions taken, not even necessarily on a class basis, by individuals in the community, given legislative licence to do so, against corporations on the grounds of pollution. Even if they can't prove immediate and direct damage to their property, they do it as a public responsibility.

In many states in the United States they permit these actions, and I suggest to the Provincial Secretary that they've been highly beneficial in terms of an alteration of mentality on the part of corporations, industries and any other people who pollute the atmosphere, in having the matter brought before the courts, given public voice, given a context in which it can be really spelled out in a way that the press can pick up, and in a way that can be eventually brought into legislation. Do give some thought to the whole area of environmental law, which is the newest area of law—a mere sibling, quivering in the crib, ready, waiting for the nurture, for the bottle-feeding that I'm sure this minister is anxious to supply to the squalling child.

Mr. Singer: His anxiety is obvious.

Mr. Lawlor: Why does he not give himself an immortality in human history as a minister who made all kinds of inroads into environmental law? His name will be championed in ages to come. He really turned over on that—all three cylinders were going at once!

I was going to speak, but I won't bother at the moment—I may pick it up downstairs—with respect to the conferences on uniformity of laws. I suspect that the minister, or basically somebody under his bailiwick, would attend those conferences, because this has across-the-board features.

Another area in which I would stimulate the minister's thinking—give him a little shot of the adrenalin of truth—would be that of criminology. What work is being done? If the minister has these overruling supervising functions and he is giving policy direction, it means that there's some ideology connected with it, and some thought processes having to do with the formation of new groups and entities and new directions in society.

Is the minister working on criminology at all? Is he in liaison with universities? Is he studying it personally? Is he aware of the correctional aspects? The minister over there is too busy locking the doors and on some occasions actually opening them to get involved.

Oh, this persiflage and high-flown stuff about criminology! Ministers of the Crown are far more practical men than that. I mean their brows may be villainously low, but they know what their eyes are directed at down below. But not a minister like this minister. No, he is the thinking type. Let's get some subjects to think about. And that's a prime one, because it's changing rapidly.

We've learned from a series of articles in the New York Times, some of which for some reason were duplicated in the Globe and Mail here, about juvenile crime. Everyone now agrees, by and large, the institutions in which the government is placing these children are far more detrimental to them, repressive and regressive, and turn them into greater little monsters than anything that could be done if one left them to roam the streets. That's equally true, on an extended scale, about our whole penal system.

Mr. Lewis: The minister believed that several years ago but he changed his tune.

Mr. Lawlor: There's only one justification for the jails that they put them in, that there are individuals—damned few, but a few—who are better set aside from society. Some people call them mad dogs or whatever you want to call them. These people are so deeply wounded, and so deeply alienated that they just can't get along. They'll commit crimes either just to show off for vainglory, or because they are bitter and hatred is so very strong. You have to put them aside, and that's the purpose of a jail.

For all the rest, and that's 90 per cent, all you do is make them worse—fill them up with vim and virulence. They come out seeking slaveringly to take it out on society. They'll do it as secretly and as undercover as they can. They'll stay as far away from the police as they can. This is the kind of mentality the government system creates.

Reform institutions—what a joke! In this area of criminology, studies should be given and the Provincial Secretary should adapt them in relation to his ministers as to what approach will be made in this regard. Together with the type of training given to the police forces and to the guards, that might bring about enormous savings to the public purse in terms of incarceration.

We've been over the insurance report that we have been recently given. I'm sure that the minister is deeply concerned, but it's more properly an area under consumer services.

Mr. Singer: Only an extract from the report. The minister is still considering whether we should be able to look at the reasons for it.

Mr. Lawlor: We deserve the whole thing. But still it's nice once in a while, even by way of an abstract, to see some punch and some truth, because somebody speaking truth usually is speaking punchfully at the same time. That report doesn't cut any corners. It's quite blunt and forthright about it, and that's what we need, particularly in stirring up the insurance industry. I hope that the government will immediately proceed to legislation on pages and pages of recommendations of alterations of the Acts involved. I trust it's under study, and I trust under study by this minister, and that he will bring forward changes.

The member for Downsview mentioned the chequerboarding decision. Again, that's such a serious matter that I would anticipate legislation immediately after Easter, if not before. I know how complex it is, I know how tricky, but nevertheless, that situation certainly cannot be allowed to continue. I've had two or three cases personally of people coming in who have been mulcted of their life's savings—well, most of the money that they have anyhow—over one of these illegitimate operators, playing against your system. The minister can no longer bow his head and remain insouciant to that need.

Another area—and I'm almost finished—that I would ask the minister to desist upon is the cost of legal services. They're atrocious. In some way or other, the minister is going to have to find ways in which to simplify existing procedures in order to keep those costs somehow in line. And while he is doing it I trust it will come to pass in registry systems and in land conveyancing, in those particular areas, in areas of the courts. It's multi-pling and the effect can't be excused, so I think he should set up a task force or some group.

A good deal of talk goes on. Dalton Camp was on a committee the other day as a spokesman on the cost of legal services. Why doesn't the Provincial Secretary set up a task force and get something operating there to see what recommendations can be brought forward? I don't think the reformation of the courts is too likely to alter in any very searching way the cost structure. It may have some effect; but why not give a focus to that and see what can be done in the area of preserving the public and the legal aid scheme and even others with respect in this particular regard?

Finally, I would like the minister to study, if he hasn't, a very broad area which I think is the most deep reaching, for my personal purposes, and that is the effect of poverty on the courts and on the administration of justice and on people in jail. What are the relationships?

I am sure they are very, very deep. The minister's gestures toward alleviating their condition, commendable as they may be, are not getting very far. I'm thinking of legal aid and other things the government devised to assist individuals who are in conditions of poverty.

We hear from time to time that, despite duty counsel or any other things, that an overwhelming number of people who appear before the provincial courts and the criminal courts, are poor people. I would suspect up to 80 or 82 per cent would be in that condition. There is something damn strange about that. If the type of sentences and punishment meted out to these people are on the basis of the punitive measures, they are being punished for being poor.

This is happening all over the province. Would the minister please give it some consideration? Would he make a study and see what the incidence is on one side of the fence, and work towards solutions on the other?

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. minister.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Do you want the hon. minister to reply?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, that's the normal procedure, to have each of the parties make their opening contribution and have the reply by the minister; then call vote 1101.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Well, Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of similar comments by both of the opposition critics, pretty well to the effect of what do we do and what is going on in the policy field. I think most people have read the COGP report. I think it was No. 3 which dealt with the various policy fields and the basic responsibilities of the policy secretaries and the various ministers.

I think a quick rundown is necessary. I am sure most of this is known to the members, but we meet at least once a week. The four ministers, for example in my policy field, meet at least once a week to discuss policy matters that could effect any one of the four ministries or the whole field of justice.

These could be matters that are immediate, matters that we feel should be the subject of legislation and introduced in this House, broad policy matters such as offtrack betting or the competition Act, or Sunday observance or uniform store hours. These are all matters which we are discussing from time to time. We are meeting people and delegations and reading briefs from people who are interested in these areas.

For example, the competition Act and uniform store hours have generated a great deal of public opinion and submission. We have met with these people from time to time in our policy field meetings; sometimes they may involve an extra meeting during the week because of the time taken to discuss these problems with delegations.

As I say, as we discuss and make decisions, many of those decisions then go to the policy and priorities committee of which each provincial secretary is a member. It is chaired by the Premier (Mr. Davis), and the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. Winkler), of course, is present as well as the Treasurer (Mr. White). Then it goes on to cabinet, caucus and eventually to the Legislature. For example, I think both the members asked what we are doing in certain areas that involve the federal jurisdiction. I might say that since the first of this year I have had an opportunity to meet with Mr. Lang, Mr. Gray and Mr. Allmand on a number of occasions and on various matters. We have discussed offtrack betting. We have talked about bail reform. We have been concerned, naturally, regarding amendments to the Code and the apparent confliction between the Code and the Highway Traffic Act in respect to impaired driving and electronic surveillance.

Mr. Bullbrook: When is the minister going to resolve that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That has gone to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As you know, the Ross case has gone there for an opinion, and I would hope that that would be dealt with within the next month or so by the Supreme Court. It will be a constitutional question.

Mr. Bullbrook: Supposing the Supreme Court upholds the lower court's decision, what will the minister do?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It could be that we would amend the Highway Traffic Act in that situation. Again, as far as Mr. Gray is concerned I have talked to him regarding the competition Act. As the hon. members know, Ontario has submitted a position paper on that. The federal government has also released a report dealing with privacy and computers. This has been discussed with Mr. Gray.

The whole field of corrections particularly where there are conflictions, has been discussed with Mr. Allmand. The Minister of Correctional Services is concerned about those. There is confliction, for example, between our temporary absence programme and intermittent sentencing. There is also the question of parole, where there is overlapping. The federal government is involved in parole for those individuals who are sentenced to under two years to our institutions. These are all areas in which we have been involved.

As the member mentioned, the Law Reform Commission now is involved in studies dealing with the administration of the courts.

Mr. Lawlor: Take parole. What has the minister done about it? Either one or the other jurisdiction should take over the programme.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes. There has been an agreement.

Mr. Singer: It doesn't take any intelligence to identify the problems. Let us have some of the minister's thinking on the problems.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There has been an indication by Mr. Allmand that it makes sense for the federal government not to be involved in parole for people sentenced to our institutions, say, for under two years. But there shouldn't be overlapping. Ontario should have complete jurisdiction where people are sentenced to our institutions for the minimum length of time.

Mr. Singer: Well, don't we? Don't we have that now?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No. There is overlapping.

Mr. Singer: But under two years in an Ontario institution, I thought, was dealt with by the Ontario government?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: And the federal government as well.

Hon. C. J. S. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): The federal government looks after those with definite sentences. We look after those with indeterminate sentences. We want to get that changed so that we will look after those in our institutions.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I agree, for example, on the question of divorce. I thought there were some very good submissions and opinions from the recent meeting of the bar association regarding divorce, particularly when consent is involved. If there are no children involved, of course, it should be much simpler than it is now. We'd have to be concerned about support for children; and this could be part of an adversary system, if necessary. But divorce by consent, by respect to two adults, I would think should be part of our future law.

I agreed when the hon. member for Downsview talked about negligence accidents which have been involving the courts for years. These involve maybe two, three or four automobiles in an accident, all started possibly by a split-second lapse of one driver. The whole idea of trying to have witnesses on the stand two or three years after the incident to recall the facts of that incident seems ludicrous. It has to be changed.

Certainly, I would hope that the Ontario Law Reform Commission would deal with this more fully. I must say that I was rather disappointed to be told that the question of the limitation period was considered by the Law Reform Commission and it didn't recommend any change to that. I can't understand that, because I think the questions of whether or not it should be there, extended or even abolished, are things that have to be considered.

Mr. Singer: The minister doesn't have to wait for it; he can take action on his own. The minister is not bound by what they say!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We sort of consider the Law Reform Commission as being fairly sacrosanct. We've been following it a great deal in the past, and I don't think there is any reason why in the future we may not disagree from time to time.

Mr. Lawlor: When did Leal become a panjandrum?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Gun laws—

Mr. Singer: The minister can agree or disagree.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Well, he is only one member.

In the matter of gun laws, again we are involved—as with reforms in the Rail Act, as the hon. member knows—with the whole question of the constitution here and the area of responsibility. At the present time the Solicitor General has a study under way.

We've discussed this in our policy committee meetings; and there is a study under way to see where we can effectively and legally move in; whether it is a question of registration, or permits or prohibition. There's a consensus within our committee that there should be some change.

At the same time I think it's important, Mr. Chairman—as the hon. member indicated—when you have the unfortunate situation where two police officers are killed within a matter of days, there is a tendency for us to overreact.

I think it is very important that when we consider legislation, such as gun laws or bail reform, that we look at it in the light of the whole field of law enforcement and the administration of justice—and don't react to unfortunate incidents.

I think the whole question of co-ordination between ministries was raised by the member for Lakeshore; whether it's the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations who is concerned, or the Solicitor General. As far as the Securities Act is concerned, for example, that involves law enforcement; it involves whole areas of white collar crime. Certainly there is great co-ordination between those two ministries.

Mr. Lawlor: There should be anyhow.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think the important thing here is that before, without the policy field, ministers had the tendency to operate by themselves. They tended to make decisions which sometimes conflicted and sometimes resulted in inefficiency and ineffective results.

Mr. Lawlor: Is the minister really trying to justify his job?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In a way.

Mr. Lawlor: Incredible.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: At lunch hour.

Mr. Lawlor: I looked—like Diogenes—for an honest man, and finally found one; but the darkness has closed down again.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think the member for Lakeshore really has little sympathy for the whole idea of policy secretary. I know he wants to be convinced; so we've got about a half an hour for me to convince him.

Mr. Singer: The minister has got to convince far more people than the member for Lakeshore. There are a lot of us over here who are not convinced.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The whole question of criminal investigation is rather important.

Mr. Singer: The rest of them are upstairs.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The member for Lakeshore referred to my predecessor and certain organizations that were set up. I didn't read the particular remarks mentioned by the hon. member, but the organization involving the Ontario Provincial Police, the police commission, the RCMP and the Metro Toronto force, still exists.

It's chaired by a law officer of the Crown, a senior member of the Attorney General's department. Those investigations are going on. They were investigating alleged illegal activities in a certain part of the construction industry in the province. They weren't satisfied that the investigation was going on in the way it should have been. They didn't have the evidence mainly because of the tirade of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) last November. So now we have an inquiry.

These are the things that this particular committee is doing. There are other areas it is involved in. I don't think the hon. member wants me necessarily to reveal all these things but, believe me, as the former member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) said, "this committee is set up and it is carrying out certain investigatory duties."

Mr. Singer: The former member for St. George also said he couldn't stand that job any longer because there was nothing to it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Well, I don't agree with that.

Mr. Singer: That's what he said.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lakeshore mentioned Mr. Lang and the question of making speeches. I agree that the policy secretary should have a stance. They should know how he feels, what he thinks, what's in his heart and what plans he has; also what he would like to see done in the administration of justice.

Mr. Lawlor: That's the secretary's job.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Unfortunately, only the local weeklies are reporting me these days, but I have made speeches on bail reform; I've talked about the whole question of police commissions and whether or not there should be judges on police commissions.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the minister talk about it in the House? Why doesn't he talk about it here?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I got myself in a little hot water with the local judge, but fortunately I don't have to appear before him too often these days. We talked about the whole question—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, will the minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Singer: If he makes so many speeches outside, why doesn't he make a few inside? Why didn't the minister take the opportunity this morning to tell us what his policy thinking is?

An hon. member: The member was talking too much.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I thought perhaps the member wanted a little background information and some quotes. We're getting to the nitty-gritty now—I'll admit that.

Regarding the whole question of crime in the streets, which is a phrase we read in Newsweek and Time every week, and a comparison of the situation in the United States and Canada, the hon. member for Lakeshore talked about the idea of there being two philosophies of policemen, the British and the United States. I hope we are closer to the British philosophy, that of the policeman being an independent agent, almost a leading citizen in uniform. People look up to him, whether it's for information about streets within a municipality or helping young children stay out of trouble.

I think the fact that the US had legislation resulting from the Miranda case, as an example, is one reason why the image of the individual policeman deteriorated in the United States, at least in the eyes of the public. I think it's improving, possibly because the balance now is more in favour of the defendant. But I believe that rather than being coercive, our whole system should be humanitarian, persuasive. The image of the policeman—as I read in this morning's paper about a poll that was taken in the schools—should be as high as possible, because he is one of the most important people in our whole society. I think it is incumbent upon us in the Legislature, particularly us in the Justice policy field, to make sure that this is so.

The hon. member also talked about constitutional issues. Again we go back to the situation with the Criminal Code and certain pieces of our statutory legislation—marketing legislation, the competition Act and so on. We think there's encroachment as far as the competition Act is concerned.

Regarding the proposed legislation for privacy in computers, as the hon. member knows, my colleague in this field is active in that area, particularly in respect to reporting agencies and retail credit agencies. We must make sure there isn't confliction, that we work together, therefore making the laws understood and more effective.

On the question of family courts, the members have been talking about the questions of judges, a new perspective and whether or not there should be lay people in family courts. This is something we are considering.

On the question of legal aid, as the hon. members know, at the recent bar association meeting downtown in the past week, there was the question of mixed trust funds and what should be done about that. Really, from the articles and the reports out of that meeting it looked as if the province and the Attorney General were in some way ignoring this, or that we were dragging our feet in respect to this area.

Mr. Singer: Oh, no! Did someone suggest that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The fact is that discussions have been going on for some months between the members of the Law Society and the Attorney General.

Mr. Singer: The Provincial Secretary hasn't made his decision.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The fact is that it is not a question that we don't want legal aid to get part of this. This has always been part of our argument and our stand on this. Legislation is just around the corner. The Attorney General will be dealing with.

Mr. Singer: Why doesn't the minister tell us what his theory is? What is the principle that he wants to enunciate?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Without being rather personal, without revealing anything—

Mr. Singer: Well, the minister is doing a good job out of that. He hasn't revealed a thing.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—I would suggest that with mixed trust accounts and the whole system of legal aid—I believe the Law Society wanted money for research and libraries—I think at least half of that money should go toward legal aid.

Mr. Singer: That's fine.

Mr. Lawlor: Let's compromise.

Mr. Singer: Why didn't the minister say that? Why didn't he say that this morning?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the member knows, to do that there has to be a bill introduced in this House by the Attorney General.

Mr. Singer: We don't demand instantaneous bills, just good legislation in good time.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We may still have that at our policy committee meeting. There has to be a consensus on the percentage—whether it's one-third, two-thirds or 75 per cent. It really doesn't hurt for me to stand up and say I believe that it should be at least 50 per cent toward legal aid.

Again, we have talked about uniform store hours and Sunday observance. As the member suggested, it is a very delicate subject but I think we will see legislation very shortly dealing with either one. We have a consensus now. We have opinions. A justice committee of caucus has dealt with this. We have seen just about as many people as we can.

Mr. Singer: Ah, there it is!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We have had many submissions. Now it is on the final route to caucus, cabinet and the Legislature.

The member mentioned environmental law. As the member knows, in this province we have the best environmental legislation of any in Canada.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister means of any in Ontario!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The Environmental Protection Act and its recent amendments are looked up to and followed by other jurisdictions.

Mr. Lawlor: There's that schoolboy type of boast that we hear so often. It's utterly ridiculous. Has the minister made noise regulations yet? He is still crowing!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In that Act, there is provision for noise regulations.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: In the area of criminology we use the facilities and the great expertise that exist at the University of Toronto's criminology institute; and the same at the University of Ottawa from time to time. We have reports on the question of sentencing, of juveniles and penal institutions. These are all reports which have been published. We have money in our budget to increase our purchase of research from these two institutions.

I don't want to get into this argument now but I think the member's comments about our reform institutions being a joke is not fair. I think we are making headway.

Mr. Lewis: It certainly isn't fair at the juvenile level, below 16.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This is a very, very delicate field.

Hon. Mr. Apps: No, it isn't fair to say that about the juvenile level.

Mr. Lewis: What?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's a very complex field.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There's no perfection here. I think with what the hon. minister is doing with our group homes, our foster homes, our aftercare, and probation—

Mr. Lawlor: The government is doing more harm than good.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —we are making headway. There's been a shortage of money. I will agree that it has been too short in the last five or six years in this area. We have got to get rid of certain dungeons that exist in this province, known as lockups or county jails. We have to have more detention centres. We have to have more assessment centres, such as we have in Oakville and Sudbury, to deal with young people. I think the whole area of psychology and psychiatry is more and more becoming involved within the Ministry of Correctional Services now. We are getting better trained personnel. I don't think the hon. Minister of Correctional Services has to feel embarrassed in any way with what is going on within his ministry.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly not! He will be speaking with pride and authority!

Mr. Singer: Yes, indeed!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: For anybody who has read the Valpy articles in the Globe and Mail, I don't think they were quite as critical as one would think in reading them. I think he was just pointing out a very complex problem and explaining in his way how Ontario is dealing with it. There were a number of backhanded compliments as far as the ministry is concerned and in the area in which we are working. There has been a lack of money and there has been a lack of properly trained personnel. We hope to cure that.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): The minister doesn't take any responsibility.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad he is encouraged by backhanded compliments from Michael Valpy. It would hardly be enough to sustain me if I were the minister, I'll tell you.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: You pick up what you can get.

Mr. Lawlor: I suppose those backhanded compliments are better than none at all.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As a final point, the hon. member for Lakeshore did make a good point, and that is the question of effects of poverty on our courts. Most people who appear, particularly in our lower courts, are considered poor people. I know there are probably reasons for this—no question about it. Some of the crimes that are committed are just a matter of crimes of survival.

Mr. Lawlor: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: But I think this involves more than—

Mr. Foulds: What are the reasons?

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—the administration of justice as the hon. member mentioned. I think with our legal aid system and with our duty counsel, with our storefront lawyers and the expansion of legal aid we are filling any vacuum that exists as far as the due process is concerned. The question is to eradicate poverty on all fronts.

There is a tendency, I will admit, to push the man around who really doesn't know what his rights are, who hasn't had an opportunity to know even the basic procedures in a provincial court, for example, when he is arrested for some crime, either statutory or under the Criminal Code. Sometimes they are dealt with like a bunch of cattle down there.

There is one duty counsel, and they mumble some name out and the poor fellow happens not to hear it, or is a little deaf in one ear. He is dragged forward and asked, "Why didn't you answer?" Or he may be there over the weekend because he wasn't told what to do.

There is a great deal of room for improvement in this whole procedure, but I think as far as legislation is concerned, maybe we have gone as far as we can go. It's a matter of the humanitarian instincts of those people who are in charge and the giving of basic advice to people who are charged with offences, particularly as to their rights.

So, just in summation, Mr. Chairman, we have introduced in this field, I think, in a matter of the three weeks that we have been here, some 20 bills. I think there are about 28 bills in all on the order paper. There are more to come. The meaty legislation that is to be introduced in this session is still to come, and I am hoping most of it will come before the end of June. Most of it will be the result of discussions and considerations and thinking that have been going on in the policy field. Thank you.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a couple of comments which I very much hope the minister won't regard as gratuitous, because I have listened very carefully this morning and I am profoundly disappointed and very distressed at what I have heard.

It is extremely difficult for me to separate the personal factors in all of this, because I think the minister knows—and if he doesn't know I want him to know—that I and many members on this side of the House have a high regard for him and for his capacities. We have seen him in other ministries, at other times, perform with a strength and an authority which did him credit day in and day out, and there is something very distressing about the transition from what once was to what is now. It has nothing to do with the minister's capacities; it has everything to do with government reorganization, and maybe the internal politics of the Tory party—but I am not privy to that.

I think that my colleague from Lakeshore is right, that in this field at least, COGP was profoundly in error; it has made a really bad mistake, and it is absolutely illegitimate in every sense to have a so-called Provincial Secretary for Justice when it obviously isn't necessary. There is nothing which the Provincial Secretary for Justice has said in the last half hour which couldn't have been said by any of his colleagues with equal facility and equal knowledge. At the risk of being a little insulting, let me tell him that there was not so much profundity or originality attached to what he said that it couldn't have been encompassed by his colleagues.

I don't understand what it is that has got us into this sort of policy box. The minister comes in here with a statement—and surely the minister must be embarrassed by this statement? I know why the name Jeremiah occurs in this statement. Jeremiah is thrown into this statement because somebody got fantastically embarrassed after they had read it through, and thought they would invest it with some literacy substance. So they searched—somebody who reads the Bible, which is very interesting—for the only name they knew and came up with Jeremiah.

There are others they could have noted. It's rather interesting that in a statement from the Provincial Secretary for Justice there is no reference to any area of worldwide jurisprudence, or any of the great jurists or writers of the law, and one minor reference to the Old Testament.

And the kinds of things he says. He says on page 2:

. . . in establishing the Justice policy field has provided an effective structure for developing and co-ordinating our many systems for the equitable resolution of conflict.

Oh what gobbledygook that is! He doesn't have to make a formal statement to the House for that. He says:

We have to achieve a difficult balance, for in serving the needs of public protection we must to some extent affect the rights of the individuals who compose that public.

Have the members ever heard that before? What a striking revelation that is.

In protecting society as a whole, we still must provide for the rehabilitation of the offender who sometimes threatens that society.

Imagine revealing that to the House on a leadoff speech in 1973. What cumulative wisdom of the centuries there is in that.

In protecting the consumer we must ensure a recognition of the proper and reasonable needs of his supplier.

Doesn't that embarrass the minister? The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations raised his desk top so that his face couldn't be seen by members on this side of the House when you read that sentence.

Mr. Drea: He was having a drink!

Mr. Lewis: I mean really! He says:

The thrust of the programmes which are represented in the estimates which you will shortly review, will demonstrate to the hon. members our endeavours to relate our principles and institutions more clearly to the people so that they may not only serve but be better served in our system of justice.

Ask a kid in grade 5 and he'll write that kind of stuff for you. It will be a little more colloquial and so it will be a little more impressive; it won't be so discursive and so self-serving.

A Provincial Secretary for Justice walks into the House as part of a reorganization of government and puts together this kind of stuff. No, he is just too embarrassed for words; he is too dignified a fellow to say so.

And then he describes his colleagues. He says:

The estimates of the Attorney General will reflect new methods and approaches in the development of a court system and the management of the various aspects of that system.

Wow! You know, it is breathless. Imagine the Attorney General improving the court system! Who would have believed that we have reached the point where that might be discussed?

The Solicitor General's estimates will reflect our concern for the protection of the public from the offender in a manner that is consistent with his reform and rehabilitation.

I guess the minister had to go to the institute of criminology for that one. No one in the department could have come up with it—

Mr. Singer: A task force.

Mr. Lewis: —or established a task on it.

The ministers who are associated with me in our endeavour [he says on page 7, rising to heights of catharsis] will be reviewing their estimates in detail, but I did wish to illustrate for the hon. members, however briefly, the mutuality of principle [that's almost as good as "conflation"] throughout the ministries and the manner in which their programmes relate.

That is really nonsense. The statement is unutterable rubbish. It says nothing, it contains nothing, it conveys nothing.

How does the minister get himself into the position of standing up here, leading off the estimates in this policy field, and presenting this kind of stuff to the House? What this says is that there is something wrong with this whole reorganization of government; and for the first time, in a very explicit way, we are now seeing it.

With great respect, I say to the Provincial Secretary for Justice that there is not a thing of which he spoke that the Attorney General, in the normal conduct of his duties as an authority line member of the cabinet, could not deal with, explain to the House or handle. And if not the Attorney General, then one of his colleagues could do this. I don't know what kind of make-work project this is, but $358,000 is a lot of money to pay to sustain something that is indefensible—

Mr. Singer: He might even have a speech writer.

Mr. Lewis: Well, never mind a speech writer—a writer, someone who doesn't abuse the English language by reducing it to anonymity. I really feel that there is something very funny about the secretariat. If it is not possible to be handled by the Attorney General, the Solicitor General, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, or the Minister of Correctional Services, it can be handled by the Law Reform Commission.

If the Provincial Secretary's purpose in life is simply to act as the man who says to the ministers by way of memo, "We will meet on Wednesday afternoons at 5:30 to discuss the field of bail reform," with great respect

I know some secretaries who are less well endowed who could do the same thing.

One really sees nothing coming out of this secretariat which justifies its existence. That's what I found truly bothersome about this morning. There is nothing in the minister's opening statement or in his response that suggested the kind of review of the field of justice which makes one feel that his job is real.

That hurts, because the minister should be in the cabinet and have major ministerial responsibility. It is nuts that a minister like him has to be forced into a straitjacket like this. I just don't understand it. The Premier never listens to me when I want to promote people, but the hon. member would make a much better Minister of Health, let me say, than he makes a Provincial Secretary for Justice.

I have said what I want to say. It just reflects my own personal frustration; it only took me nine or 10 minutes, having sat here for this morning and listened to all of this. I think the member for Downsview is right; I think the minister's estimates should be reduced to $1; not as a punitive measure but as a symbolic way of the opposition conveying to the government that this piece of COGP reorganization is utter, indefensible nonsense.

If the government wants to co-ordinate those various aspects of the administration of justice, then there are some excellent senior civil servants—I see some of them sitting under the gallery now — who could do it easily and well. We don't have to create a post that is entirely irrelevant from the day it came into being. I don't know how the minister stands it; I just don't know how he stands it.

Maybe he has become a cerebral aristocrat; and he enjoys it. And he enjoys it. And maybe like "Michelangelo" Davis, he will one day be engraved outside the Legislature in a thinker's pose. Heavenward, right? Yes! But I really—

Mr. Lawlor: With a loincloth?

Mr. Lewis: With a loincloth, without question. After all, he—

Mr. Foulds: Or at least a long tie.

Mr. Lewis: He is, after all, in charge of censorship—

Mr. Lawlor: After all, it is Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: —public well-being. And it is Ontario, yes.

Mr. Foulds: Ontario is such a respectable place.

Mr. Lewis: I wish him well in terms of future judgements of him; but present judgements are not very kind. And these estimates should be cut to $1. Can I move that? Can I move that the estimates of the Provincial Secretary for Justice be reduced to $1? Do I need a seconder?

Mr. Singer: Not in committee; but if the member does I would be glad to.

Mr. Lewis: Do I have to write it?

Mr. Chairman: Well you can—

Mr. Lewis: But the chairman is sufficiently with it this morning to remember what I said. Thank you, sir. I so move.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, now that we're on to the vote, I had waited with some great interest to hear the minister outline to us how he proposes to use this paltry sum of $358,000; but he didn't give us any details. As I mentioned earlier, the details on page 9 are completely non-communicative.

It's been an interesting debate to listen to, because having listened to the introductory statement—which conveyed no information at all—and then the critical statements, I couldn't wait to hear what the minister was going to say in answer to the various criticisms put forth by the hon. member for Lakeshore and myself.

I gather that the minister has jotted down the problems. Some of them were mentioned by me; some by the hon. member for Lakeshore—and the minister has a careful note of the problems.

But I listened intently to hear one single declaration of policy. As close as we got was when—by interjection, I think it was—somebody asked about interest on legal trust accounts. The minister then got close to enunciating a statement of policy; but quickly said: "In my personal opinion—now, don't bind me, don't bind my government, don't think I'm talking as a Provincial Secretary for Justice, but—in my personal opinion what the Law Society is proposing is not enough."

Another gem of wisdom that flowed from his remarks was: "Well, we don't really have to agree with the Law Reform Commission." Well, who ever said he did? Whoever suggested that all the wisdom about legal reform in Ontario lay at the doorstep of the Law Reform Commission?

They've done a good job for Ontario. They've produced some reports that are better than others; some that I don't like at all; some that I'm sure that the various members of the Justice galaxy don't like. But who said we're bound to wait for their words of wisdom?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Nobody!

Mr. Singer: Well, that's what the minister implied. That's what he implied. And if he got so far today as to talk about the reform of the courts, why hasn't the minister shown us the Law Reform Commission report on the reorganization of the courts? Is that another secret that he shares with his colleague who sits behind him and who won't tell us about the insurance report—other than the recommendations?

These conferences really must be important because no one dares breathe a word of what happens inside them outside the confines of the minister's meeting room. Does the minister have one single idea of what direction Justice policy should be taking? Does he have anything new to add to the very serious problems that beset these four portfolios that he apparently is supposed to supervise and interpret for, and guide and direct? Just one! And the minister hasn't said one in the three hours that this debate has gone on.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They will be revealed in this Legislature.

Mr. Singer: The minister hasn't taken the opportunity that we invited him to take to tell us what he wants the $358,000 for. Another one of the tragedies, Mr. Chairman, is that unfortunately when they got volume 3 of COGP, they said: "Ah, we're really going to do something." So they extracted one of the best Justice civil servants I have known in the Province of Ontario and made him the deputy to the Provincial Secretary for Justice.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: He's a busy man.

Mr. Singer: Yes, he's very busy. I haven't seen him performing anywhere close to the ability and the capacity that he has to perform. It's really a shame that the minister hived off Randall Dick and he apparently has as little to do as the Provincial Secretary has to do.

Mr. Lewis: He's probably doing a great deal more than the Provincial Secretary is doing.

Mr. Singer: Well, whatever it is, I don't know.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the best analysis of this secretaryship was given by the former member for St. George, Allan Lawrence, when he left. He admitted publicly and candidly that it was a nothing job. There was nothing to do; no one would listen to him. He had no opinions so he thought it would be of more interest and more of a challenge to go to another place. Where he has gone, at least every now and then we hear his voice; whether we agree with him or not we don't know.

We never hear the present Provincial Secretary's voice. I'm sorry I can't keep up with the local issues of the Oakville Tribunes Gazette Record, but if the Provincial Secretary has something of importance to say, perhaps he could bring himself to say it in the House.

I will gladly support the motion moved by the member for Scarborough West. I think it's only proper because I think that this minister, if he really had some feeling for this place and the task that he is apparently supposed to do, would have admitted long before now that he is in a nothing job and he does nothing. I don't think we have any alternative, Mr. Chairman, to voting that these estimates be reduced to the sum of $1.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Provincial Secretary wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, if the members have any questions about any of the items that are shown in the estimate book, I'd be happy to try to answer them.

Mr. Lewis: What are they for?

Mr. Lawlor: Just one question on the item having to do with the services. The 1972-1973 estimates indicated $39,100, and it's been increased to $54,000. This is just an example. Why the increased sum in that area?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I could go down the individual items here, which total $54,000. There's equipment rentals, $3,500—that would be copying equipment; repairs and maintenance—this involves two automobiles—$1,200; conferences and receptions, $3,500—that's receptions and conferences we have for staff meetings. The next item is educational assistance which is $800; that's extension courses and night courses for staff.

Mr. Lawlor: How large is your staff?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Altogether it would be a complement of 16 people.

Mr. Lewis: About 16?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: So the minister holds receptions for them to give them a sense of—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, the conferences and receptions involve not only other ministries but also representatives from other governments and other jurisdictions.

There are special services; this involves investigating committees, particularly the Cartwright committee that we referred to earlier. It also involves the Ontario Provincial Police, the RCMP and Metro. This figure is $16,000.

We have outside printing; that is certain finer printing such as the manual of practice that my predecessor published last year dealing with the Statutory Powers Procedure Act and the Judicial Review Procedure Act. That amounts to $4,000.

Consultant fees are for outside studies such as in the area of criminology, at the centre of criminology at the University of Toronto and the one at Ottawa—that was $20,000.

Mr. Lewis: It was $20,000 for consultants' fees?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, that's for studies.

Mr. Lawlor: That's where that criminology thing disappeared to. I thought the Attorney General was so upset with that in previous years that he cut off the programme.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This is not the entire expenditure by the government by any means. I think the members will find funds, for example, in the Ministry of Correctional Services for studies of this kind.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, there are.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: I know that may be legitimate, but look at Hansard in previous years. The minister will see Prof. Edwards very much under fire and the intention was to cut those funds off.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The idea now, Mr. Chairman, is that rather than an outright grant, as has been the practice in the past for the centre at Toronto and the centre at Ottawa, we will be purchasing services. Right now there is a little discussion about who has publishing rights—whether or not everything we acquire or purchase should automatically be published by the centre. I think that will be resolved.

I don't think it is a big enough problem in any way not to have us use the centre for this type of research. Sometimes the grant came from one of the ministries in this policy field; I believe at one time the Department of University Affairs was also involved in allocating funds for that. But we are still going to be using both centres in Ottawa and Toronto.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, it is past 1 o'clock. Since we have finally got the minister started to talk about what this $358,000 is, he is going to be quite a while on it. We certainly aren't going to finish this vote today, so I would suggest that perhaps the committee might rise.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the House leader would entertain a motion that the committee rise and report.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): It doesn't matter to me.

Mr. Singer: The rules of the House are that we can't sit, except on unanimous consent, past 1 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is quite right but we happen to be sitting. Do members want to adjourn the debate?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I would adjourn the debate.

Mr. Chairman: I don't think there is any adjournment required.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs leave to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House, I would like to say that on Monday we will be in committee of supply and we will hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. R. F. Nixon). We will then continue on with the present consideration of estimates.

An hon. member: The budget debate?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes, I am sorry. That's right.

Then as far as the private members' hour is concerned, if the Leader of the Opposition has not concluded his remarks by 5 o'clock—

An hon. member: On the budget debate?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That's right. I would hope that the House would agree to allow that debate to continue and the private members' hour would follow immediately. If that happened to be the case after 5 o'clock, then on Tuesday we would continue on the same debate.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): We sit Monday night, do we not?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Yes.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Tuesday night and Wednesday to 6 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1:05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 16, 1973

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to welcome visitors to our Legislature. In the east gallery this afternoon we have students from the Madonna High School at Downsview, and from George Brown College in Toronto; and in the west gallery, from Carlton Public School, St. Catharines.

At 8 o'clock this evening we will have scouts from the 44th Mississauga Boy Scout Troop in Mississauga; the 158th Boy Scout Troop in Toronto, and the 214th Cub Pack in Islington.

I know also that the members of the Legislature will be very happy to welcome another special guest whom we have underneath the press gallery to my right. We have with us this afternoon Timmy for 1973. Timmy this year is Richard Ware, a 10-year-old student from Scarborough, Ont.

ESTIMATES

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): Mr. Speaker, I have here a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By his own hand, W. R. Macdonald, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1974, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, April 16, 1973.

Statements by the ministry.

20TH ANNIVERSARY OF METRO TORONTO'S INCORPORATION

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the 20th anniversary yesterday of the incorporation of Metropolitan Toronto.

We are honoured today by the presence in this chamber of some of the members of the first Metropolitan Toronto Council. We are also honoured by the presence of the three men who have successively and successfully presided over Metro council in the course of its 20-year history. I refer to its first chairman, Mr. Fred Gardiner; its second chairman, Mr. William Allen; and its present chairman, Mr. Ab Campbell. In bidding them welcome, Mr. Speaker, I should note in passing that my colleague, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Grossman), was also a member of the original council.

Also present and part of that council are Mr. Oliver Crockford, who was then reeve of Scarborough; Judge C. O. Bick, who was then reeve of Forest Hill; Mr. William Davidson, alderman, Ward 7, Toronto; Mr. F. W. Hall, reeve of York; Mrs. Dorothy Hague, who was reeve of Swansea; Mr. Allan Lamport, who was then mayor of the city of Toronto; Mr. John MacVicar, alderman, Ward 3, Toronto; Judge McMahan, reeve of North York; Mr. Fred Gardiner, whom I have referred to; and, of course, the present chairman, Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's also important to point out that the members of the first Metro council embarked on an experiment that was the first of its kind in North America. In spite of the controversy, the opposition and the dire predictions which marked the development and passage of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act under one of my predecessors—and even today I hear some of this kind of discussion relating to other areas—it has led to one of the most successful attempts at local government reform on this continent.

This recollection is useful for us now in considering other proposals to reform and restructure municipal government elsewhere in the province.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The government has done its best to destroy it since, though.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The lesson is that reform is not an end in itself. All governments—federal, provincial and municipal—exist only as vehicles to serve the needs of the community.

Metropolitan Toronto has been successful because the structure which this Legislature gave it 20 years ago was designed to meet the specific needs of Toronto and its surrounding neighbours. As these needs have changed, the structure of Metro has changed. That is how it must be.

Within the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, citizens have found a sense of well-being and a sense of urban identity in a community of interest.

The contribution which this assembly made 20 years ago, and continues to make to the health and strength of Metropolitan Toronto, is reason for our pride in this anniversary. We have equal pride in the remarkable pioneering contributions that were made by our distinguished visitors today. We congratulate them, Mr. Speaker, and on behalf of the members we say thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Premier.

Further to the statement made by the Chairman of Management Board on Friday relating to making public the logbooks of the aircraft used for government service, would the Premier not agree that the use of the aircraft by ministers and those outside the ministry should be reported to the Legislature, since it has been a matter of some public concern that the aircraft might in fact have been used for unauthorized purposes, as was pointed out by the Provincial Auditor?

Would the Premier not further agree with me, to make it interrogative, that it is not expected that every flight taken by the aircraft would necessarily have to be logged publicly and tabled here in this House, but only those usages that might be questionable under the terms put forward by the Provincial Auditor a few weeks ago?

Mr. Singer: Good question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, of course the auditor's report reflected on a policy that very frankly was not as defined as it should be. The policy governing the use of government aircraft has been defined—I think it was enunciated very clearly by the House leader on Friday—that it will continue to be the policy not to have the logs tabled here in the House. If the Leader of the Opposition has any questions about this situation, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to listen to his observations, but the policy now is clear-cut; it has been transmitted to the Provincial Auditor so there is complete understanding as to the use of government aircraft. I would like to think, Mr. Speaker, the policy that has been enunciated is in the public interest and certainly, as far as the ministers or the ministries are concerned, this policy will be observed.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A supplementary: Will the Premier give some further consideration to making the information public that is presently in the logs of those planes under the previous policy, which policy evidently changed a few weeks ago? I would suggest this to the Premier because of the undermining of the confidence of the people of Ontario due to the alleged misuse of those planes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know there was an allegation of misuse, per se, at all.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It was very clear!

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): What does the Premier have to hide? He must have something to hide.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There was a reference as to the policy, or lack of policy.

Mr. Speaker, the policy has been established. It has been set, it is understood and it has been transmitted to the auditor. Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the government to table the logs from 1970-1971.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The Premier must have something to hide.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, just a matter of policy.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay was on his feet first.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Premier, if they are going to change the policy of making aircraft available to certain people, will he consider making them available to members of this Legislature who have settlements in their ridings, where there is legitimate government business, which are many hundreds of miles away from any road structure and the only access to them is by air?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am quite sympathetic to the problem the hon. member raised. I think my colleague the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Bernier) expressed the same concern. I think it applies—to be very frank about it—to a limited number of members in this House.

It is my thought or hope that perhaps when the Camp commission report comes in, with some consideration of the problems of all members in servicing their constituencies, this matter may be referred to. I can't speak with any authority on this, Mr. Speaker; I just say perhaps it will be.

If that matter is not referred to in that report, I would be quite prepared to discuss with my colleagues and the Minister of Natural Resources the concern expressed by the hon. member. I fully appreciate the great geographic area he has to cover and the problem that he just can't do it by automobile. No one is going to quarrel with this; we shall see if any ground rules could be established.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview?

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Premier really believe that changing policy is sufficient to close the door on what has gone before, and that the public is not entitled to a full and complete explanation of how government or public money has been spent in relation to the use of government-owned aeroplanes by persons who obviously, no matter whether the government had a policy or not, should not have been using them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I have stated what the policy is. It has been the policy of the government for many years that the logbooks have not been made public and, Mr. Speaker, that is not going to change.

On the points of the Provincial Auditor, there were three that were made, and we are without any question resolving the problem to suit the recommendations in the auditor's report.

The other matter, in my view, is basically an administrative one, and that is whether or not the Ministry of Government Services, I believe it was, or the Ministry of Natural Resources, is charged for the operation or maintenance, which I think is basically an administrative problem.

But I just restate it once again, Mr. Speaker, the policy has been very plainly enunciated and it is the one that is governing the activity of the ministries in this government.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: There is a lot more than that to be answered!

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park.

Mr. Singer: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Premier really believe that we have no right to know?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The member for High Park was on his feet first.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, would the Premier at least be willing to give the identity of those ministers who used our planes outside the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intent to do this. I would only observe this, that the member's reference to "outside Ontario," that is use by ministers of aircraft that go beyond the boundaries of Ontario, should not mean that this was not for government business.

Mr. Singer: How can we tell?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I just say that it is not the intent—

Mr. Singer: Give us the information!

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not the intent to table the logbooks.

Mr. Reid: If I were the Premier I wouldn't do it either.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, the members are wrong.

Mr. Speaker: Any further questions? The Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the member for Scarborough West with the last supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: It is so simple that I am almost embarrassed to ask it, but perhaps the Premier would take a moment and explain, as a Premier who boasts of an open government with accessibility to information, why will he not, in the interests of the House and the public, table the logs as he has been requested to do by colleagues in the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of policy. In the same way, and there is some parallel I don't table my appointments—I am just speaking personally now—that is where I travel in a government car or who travels with me.

Mr. Singer: The Premier is going from bad to worse.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, with great respect, there is some similarity.

Mr. Reid: No justification!

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): There is no reason, it is government policy.

Mr. Singer: We have a right to know.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The hon. Leader of the Opposition has further questions?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Why is the Premier causing himself such embarrassment? Why doesn't he just do it?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It will be dug out piecemeal.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier has a death wish; that is the problem, a political death wish. His Treasurer (Mr. White) is digging the grave.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The smiling gravedigger.

Mr. Singer: Did the Premier turn down the thermostat before he left home?

Mr. Lewis: Alas, poor Yorick over there.

Mr. Singer: We have no right to know!

RYERSON FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of University Affairs. Is he going to instruct the president of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute to make available to the staff and to make available to the public, information relating to the financing of that institution, so that some of the difficulties that they are experiencing in the administration there will at least be laid to rest?

Hon. J. McNie (Minister of Colleges and Universities): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to the chairman of the board of governors as recently as this morning. He assures me that all of the information is going to be made available to the board of governors that has not already been made available. I see no reason why that information won't be made publicly available.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Did the minister say it "would be" or "would not" be?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Excuse me?

Mr. R. F. Nixon: I didn't hear the last part of the answer. Did the minister say, whether the information "would be" made available or "would not" be?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Why it would not be.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: As a supplementary, has it been the policy at Ryerson and the community colleges that that information was restricted to just the executive committee of the board and the president? Surely there have been indications that government policy was to make that information publicly available? It is all public funds, every nickel of it.

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of anybody consciously keeping figures from anyone.

Mr. Singer: Is it government policy to do that? Is it government policy not to tell?

Hon. Mr. McNie: I do understand that the financing of these institutions, the same as the financing of government, is very complex. In respect to what information is made available, I have discovered, as I have sat in between our own financial people in the ministry and the financial people at the institutions, there isn't always agreement as to whether or not all the information has been made available. As far as the policy is concerned, the policy is that that information should be made available to the public.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: As a further supplementary, has the minister some kind of a group advising him, which is also available to the administrative leadership of these various post-secondary institutions, that would at least attempt to help them keep out of trouble by establishing certain uniform minimum requirements for making information available and having an established understanding of what administration is and what are fairly the prerogatives?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken just as recently as two weeks ago in Belleville to boards of governors and reminded them of the guidelines that are available to them, which I think would satisfy the hon. leader if they were to satisfy themselves in this respect.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Available? Aren't they supposed to use them?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is the minister willing to instruct the board of Ryerson to reinstate the 48 fired employees, or dismissed employees, subject to the president's report on his financial disbursements as of May?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that the decision at this moment is in the hands of Ryerson and the board of governors. I am satisfied that they will make the right decision.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, does not the minister recognize that even in the board's arrogant decision over the weekend it has managed again to offend the faculty association and the student association; and that the situation at Ryerson will continue to deteriorate unless the question of the 48 fired employees is legitimately resolved? Does he not think that he himself should intervene?

Hon. Mr. McNie: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I don't accept the member's description of the discussions of the board of governors as being arrogant. I know they met for some 13 or 14 hours over the weekend.

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): With themselves.

Mr. Lewis: With themselves. They don't consult with the Ryerson community.

Hon. Mr. McNie: The board of governors met and discussed the whole subject thoroughly. I am not at liberty at this particular time to discuss the outcome of their conversations, but I know that the member will be satisfied. I am prepared to acquaint him and the Leader of the Opposition afterwards with what transpired after that meeting. I am satisfied that they did the humanitarian thing, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition have further questions? Does the hon. member for Scarborough West have questions?

SALES TAX ON ENERGY

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the provincial Treasurer a question? Is he prepared to make a public undertaking, either by way of regulation, legislation or clairvoyance, that large landlords in the Province of Ontario will not pass on his seven per cent energy tax to tenants?

Hon. J. White (Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to see senior officials from Ontario Hydro this week to see how complicated and expensive it would be to encourage individual meters, not only so that matters of this kind can be dealt with more equitably, but so that a tenant wishing to conserve scarce energy resources and drive his own costs down, will be enabled to do so.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Just a second, just a second—

Mr. Stokes: Just a cotton-pickin' minute.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Ask him to withdraw the whole tax.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. Deans: He is a disgrace to politics.

Mr. Lewis: No, no. He's the Walter Gordon of the Tory cabinet. May I ask the Treasurer what prompted him to choose so obviously unpopular a tax on energy resources as opposed to an equivalent amount of money from the resource sector, which is surely the more logical sector?

Hon. Mr. White: As you know, Mr. Speaker, from the budget presentation Thursday, we are in fact going to revise the Mining Tax Act and certain other resource Acts next fall—

Mr. MacDonald: And maintain the existing level.

Mr. Lewis: Maintain the level, he said.

Hon. Mr. White:—in time to replace the federal legislation, which I guess expires at the end of 1973. I would be very glad, Mr. Speaker, to take the opportunity to quote from the budget statement—which does in fact give the reasoning behind the changes referred to now in the question of the hon. leader—if you'll forgive me for a moment, and if it's very brief.

Mr. Reid: He sounds like the Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: One might have thought the Treasurer would have committed the reasons to memory. It isn't too much to ask.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): It is too much to ask.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I'll provide the reasons without a text, if you like.

Mr. Foulds: The minister is giving us his best view—bent over.

Mr. Renwick: Ask him if he's deducting this time from the question period.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Is this coming off the question period?

Mr. Renwick: Is this coming off the question period?

Hon. Mr. White: No. This is a serious question. I think it deserves recapitulation, if the House will forgive me.

Mr. Foulds: He just happened to have it up his sweater sleeve.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: The smiling gravedigger.

Hon. Mr. White: I quote:

Even after the increase in retail sales tax, I found it necessary to secure additional revenues to meet the target deficit. Accordingly, I am proposing to apply the retail sales tax to all forms of energy which are presently untaxed in Ontario. This would be a seven per cent value tax, to be collected primarily under the Retail Sales Tax Act. Because gasoline, diesel fuel, propane and some other energy fuels are already taxed on a unit basis, however, it will be necessary to integrate these existing forms of energy taxation within a comprehensive system.

And then there are illustrations given.

Mr. MacDonald: There is nothing new in that.

Hon. Mr. White: Continuing:

When these fuels or forms of energy are used directly in manufacturing, they will not be subject to tax.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): This isn't an explanation.

Hon. Mr. White: I think this is a very important aspect of the tax.

Mr. Lewis: If the Treasurer had been listening the other day he would have absorbed this.

Hon. Mr. White: I said:

This means that the electricity used to operate production machinery will not be taxed while electricity used for lighting will be taxed. It also means that the energy sources which are used in basic production processes—such as natural gas—will be exempt.

Then I mentioned certain changes affecting machinery of one kind and another.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Just turn your thermostat down to 33.

Hon. Mr. White: I said on Thursday:

Let me point out some of the positive benefits of this new tax policy, apart from generating increased revenues. First, diesel fuel used in mining and manufacturing and forestry will now bear no tax as compared to the present eight cent tax.

This represents a substantial tax cut which will lower costs to all users, particularly in northern Ontario communities.

Mr. Renwick: It doesn't improve with a second reading.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. White: I'm almost finished.

Mr. Speaker: Is the answer much longer?

Hon. Mr. White: I'm almost finished.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. White: Continuing:

Second, the taxation of all energy sources used for the same purpose eliminates the bias—

Mr. Renwick: This is repetitious.

Mr. Foulds: He is playing games.

Hon. Mr. White: This is an important matter, it's only going to take a moment.

Second, the taxation of all energy sources used for the same purpose eliminates the bias in favour of formerly untaxed energy sources. Third, by taxing energy, there will be an incentive to prevent waste and to achieve the most efficient utilization of this vital resource. I think it is not too much to hope that pollution will also be diminished somewhat.

Finally, let me emphasize again that I am proposing to enrich Ontario's tax credit system. The additional tax credit I am proposing will more than offset the additional costs of heating and lighting on the average residence resulting from the taxation of energy.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary: Since it will so clearly raise rents around the province, since it so clearly discriminates against low and middle-income earners, since it is clearly the most unpopular aspect of a totally unpopular budget, why doesn't the Treasurer withdraw that part of his budget? Why doesn't he withdraw it?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Why doesn't he resign? It would be easier.

Mr. Speaker: Does the leader of the New Democratic Party have further questions?

GENERAL WELFARE RATES

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Community and Social Services: Now that he has raised the shelter proportion of the general welfare allowance for an individual to $57, can he tell us where, let us say in Metropolitan Toronto, an individual should be directed to find an apartment or accommodation for $57 a month? Could he give us an address, a location, a municipality?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Community and Social Services): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my statement, this would be of considerable assistance. At the same time, I also indicated that this was not the end—that at the end of this month there will be a three-day conference in Ottawa and the whole subject of income maintenance will be discussed at the federal-provincial level.

Mr. Lewis: I see. By way of supplementary, the minister wouldn't have any suggestions as to where the accommodation for $57 a month could be found in the interim?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that Ontario is probably the best jurisdiction in North America for looking after housing for disadvantaged people.

Mr. Lewis: For high rents.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough West finished?

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for St. George.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): I would like to address my questions to the Treasurer and they pertain to these grants to municipalities.

I should like to know when the grants are effective. I should like to know also what is the stage of budget processing by municipalities across this province and how they will accommodate the formula as spelled out in this volume? They will have already, I assume, rather finished with their budget review—certainly in the city of Toronto, which is waiting undoubtedly for Metro to assist in setting the mill rate. How can they then accommodate this and the timing of it as proposed? I don't understand it.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I think the questions are pertinent. The hon. member will recall that in my budget statement I said we are contemplating changing our own fiscal year to coincide with the fiscal year of the municipalities; that is to end on Dec. 31 instead of March 31. We have invited comments on the pros and cons of such a change from municipalities, affected institutions and other organizations.

In the meantime, it is always troublesome for municipalities and similar agencies to deal with the budget year which we have. This was exaggerated this year because my coming on the scene rather late, namely Jan. 15, made it necessary for the budget to be somewhat later than usual. It is the custom in this House to have the budget before the end of March ordinarily. I am not minimizing the nuisance to our municipalities this year. I think that's more than offset, if I may say so, by the greatly enlarged grants and this is the message I am getting from across the province, too.

In London, Ont., to take an example I am most familiar with, the mayor seems to think that they can hold the expenditure level which they themselves decided upon some weeks ago, and the $5 million in additional grants will go into a full reduction of property taxes. Some number of other municipalities no doubt will be able to put all of the additional grants into the reduction of mill rates.

Some municipalities with limited resources will probably find it necessary to take a portion of the additional grants and expend it on pressing public needs. I think perhaps it is not too late for that course of action to be taken. My hunch is that a great many municipalities will apply a very considerable portion of the grant to the mill rate reduction and perhaps leave themselves something on the expenditure side for critical public works.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, yes.

Mrs. Campbell: Of course, the municipalities in estimating revenue do try—I think the Treasurer would agree with me—to estimate with reasonable accuracy. Now, I suppose at this point—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mrs. Campbell: I would like to ask at this point—take the city of Toronto with which I am more familiar—could they at this point estimate on the basis of the maximum, or would they estimate at half the maximum, which is usually the position they find themselves in? How can they do this?

Are they holding back because of this and doing interim financing, and how will that affect their position? Or does the Treasurer know?

Hon. Mr. White: It was my understanding from what I read in the paper over the weekend that city council or its financial experts would today be deciding the full impact of these changes insofar as Toronto and other Metro communities were concerned, and that they would very quickly be able to alter their mill-rate stand.

On Friday we did provide to the member, I think, and other members of the Legislature a full list of these additional grants, and this information will be available to the municipalities also.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Treasurer: Since the purpose of the budget provisions for municipalities was to reduce mill rates, and since more than half the low-income families in the province are tenants rather than owners, what steps is the Treasurer prepared to take in order to ensure that the benefits of mill-rate cuts are passed on to low- and moderate-income tenants?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the people who are having the most dreadful time of all, it seems to me, are those people in the lowest quartile, who are hardworking citizens with rather meagre incomes—

Mr. Cassidy: Sure!

Hon. Mr. White:—and who are trying to hold on to a home of their own. This will benefit them directly.

Mr. Cassidy: Half of them are tenants.

Mr. Lewis: But at least half of them are tenants.

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, this will benefit them very directly through mill-rate reduction, through the enrichment of the tax credits.

Mr. Lewis: There will be no mill-rate reduction.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, let's wait and see.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, we will wait and see.

Hon. Mr. White: The returns will be in a week or two. The member for Scarborough West will apologize, I trust, if a mill-rate reduction takes place.

An hon. member: The member means he hopes there won't be.

Mr. Lewis: There won't be.

Hon. Mr. White: In addition, the tax credits will shift taxes significantly from the least prosperous citizens to the more prosperous citizens. This is even more true of pensioners of moderate means.

The average pensioner in my town this year is going to get a tax credit of between $110 and $115. That tax credit next year will amount to $240. I think this will be true across the province as a whole.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister seems to be saying that this—

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary was well away from the original question on that, of course.

Mr. Cassidy: No, I think it is still on the subject.

Mr. Speaker: It is the New Democratic Party's turn for a new question.

Mr. Cassidy: No, this is a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The question of the minister is: What proportion of the $180 million directed to municipalities will be to the credit of corporate, industrial and business taxpayers who provide 43 per cent of municipal revenues?

Hon. Mr. White: I don't know that answer. I'll look into it though.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the Treasurer has done very nicely for them in his budget. He has helped them very nicely.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River.

MERCURY TASK FORCE

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. How long has the Minister of Health had the task force report on mercury pollution in the English River system? Could he indicate to the House today what he intends to do about it? Has he done anything about the fact that Indians are still eating mercury-contaminated fish in that area?

Hon. R. T. Potter (Minister of Health): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have done a complete study of the task force report and I expect later this week I will likely be making a statement to the House on the stand my ministry has taken on this.

Mr. Reid: I could hear hardly any of that answer. Did the minister say he had the report and the Premier will be making a statement?

Hon. Mr. Potter: I said we have the report. We have studied the report and I will be making a statement to the House later this week as to what action I will be taking from my ministry's standpoint.

Mr. Reid: By way of supplementary, the minister will be making a statement to the House leader? Does that mean he will also be making one to the House?

An hon. member: To the House later—later, not leader.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Windsor West.

STUDENTS' TRAVEL EXPENSES

Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor West): A question of the Chairman of the Management Board of Cabinet: Why is it that most of the ministries do not even offer to pay, let alone pay, travel expenses to Toronto to graduating students considering full-time employment with this province? Does the minister not think this is being discriminatory to those students who live considerable distances from the city of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member repeat the first part of the question, please?

Mr. Bounsall: Why don't the majority of ministries even offer to pay, let alone pay, travel expenses to Toronto to graduating students who are being interviewed for full-time employment with the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Probably because the balance of the opportunity that is granted to them is sufficient to offset that particular purpose.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, that's nonsense. What a fatuous statement!

Mr. Foulds: That's a discriminatory remark.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary—

Mr. Foulds: They are going to lose every seat in northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): I have a question of the Treasurer—

An hon. member: Ask the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot); he'll agree with that comment.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

GASOLINE TAX REBATE FOR FARMERS

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the Treasurer to discontinue the gasoline tax rebate to farmers? I had understood that it would be continued, but at least one news report said that it would be discontinued.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the rebate will be continued at the rate of 17 cents a gallon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park.

ALLEGED ACTIONS OF REEVE OF KINGSTON TOWNSHIP

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs: Has the minister had an opportunity yet to investigate the allegations in the Kingston Whig-Standard that the reeve of Kingston township is using his position as reeve to enrich his own coffers by making certain changes in the local township rulings in connection with his own lands?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I think I've had no communication from the complainant, but I did read in the newspaper that a letter was being sent to the Premier's office—

Mr. Shulman: That was last month!

Hon. Mr. White:—and it was my understanding that a reply was going forward to the complainant, describing to him how he could pursue this according to rigorous legal methods available to him through the courts of law.

Mr. Cassidy: But the minister is washing his hands of a flagrant conflict of interest.

Mr. Shulman: Supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary.

Mr. Shulman: Does the minister not feel there is a responsibility on his shoulders in his role as Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs to take some action here, and not leave it up to individuals in the area to spend a great deal of money going to court?

Hon. Mr. White: We have a study going on within the ministry to see what obligations we have in the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Another study!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I have a question of the Minister of Education—

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

Mr. Shulman: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Is this a supplementary?

Mr. Singer: No, I have a new question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a supplementary.

Mr. Shulman: Would the minister inform us?

Hon. Mr. White: Yes, I have said.

Mr. Speaker: Now the member for Downsview.

SCHOOL BUDGETS

Mr. Singer: I have a question of the Minister of Education. Since the Minister of Education believes that the North York Board of Education treated him so badly, could he advise us whether he is going to take advantage of the invitation extended to him to be present and meet with the North York board on Wednesday next at 3 o'clock?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I don't ever recall saying that the North York board treated me badly.

Mr. Singer: Well, the minister said it was a snow job.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's quite different from being treated badly—

Mr. Singer: Yes, that's nice treatment.

Hon. Mr. Wells: At the present time my commitments here in my ministry and with the Policy and Priorities Board will prevent me from attending the meeting of the North York board on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I'm sorry to hear that. The minister might get another snow job.

An hon. member: Is the member going?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I'll be there.

Mr. Speaker: The member for—

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre has a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friends are going; my colleagues, the members for—

Mr. Singer: They can't speak for the minister; they don't know his policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The member for York Centre—

Hon. Mr. Wells: They'll handle themselves well.

Mr. Deacon: Supplementary: In view of the problems that Toronto is having, as expressed by the North York board, is the minister considering bringing in a special provision so that Toronto will not have its school system destroyed because of the lack of special grant consideration to meet its special needs?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member who has just asked me this question has been definitely snowed by some of the propaganda that is floating around—

Mr. Singer: Everybody is mean to the minister all the time!

Hon. Mr. Wells: —because I've seen nothing to indicate that any of the kind of restraints in increases in spending that have been suggested by this ministry and this government will wreck any school system in this province.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur—

Mr. Deacon: A further supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary then.

Mr. Deacon: In view of the fact that this suggestion was made by the chairman of the school board of Ottawa, why does the minister feel it is not well justified, based on the arguments she presented.

Mr. Lewis: It was not a him.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would like the hon. member to give me the exact words and time and place when the chairman of the Ottawa school board said this kind of thing, because she and I—

Mr. Deacon: In the minister's office.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —have talked many times and, in fact, I'm led to believe that the Ottawa school board has prepared a budget which is within the spending guidelines for that board.

Mr. Deacon: That's right.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

RELIGIOUS DISCRIMINATION IN EDUCATION

Mr. Foulds: A question of the Minister of Education: Has the minister had time to consider my letter to him of March 22 outlining some of the regulations of his department regarding correspondence courses which apparently discriminate against the students in Catholic high schools, and particularly the case of Jean Edith Lowry of Central Catholic High School in London?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I have an answer to the hon. member sitting on my desk on that particular problem and it will be given to him very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? Yes.
The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Will the minister kindly convey his answer to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Guindon) so that he could forward that to me, because this was asked of the Minister of Labour some weeks ago?

Mr. Speaker: The member for York-Forest Hill.

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): A question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development: What is the government doing about the virtual embargo that the Province of Alberta has slapped on the sale of gas to companies? Is it doing anything about that?

Mr. Reid: He's not doing anything about anything.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Provincial Secretary for Resources Development): I'm not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

GREAT LAKES FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Has the provincial secretary rethought his programme for flood control, recognizing that there is a likelihood for further flooding today and tomorrow? Is he prepared to consider an announcement within 24 hours which might make money available on a low-interest loan basis to citizens who would like to avail themselves of it, and to provide the diking necessary to hold back the waters?

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I can't assure the hon. member whether the announcement can be made tomorrow or on Wednesday. My hope is that a concrete statement of policy will be available within a couple of days.

Mr. Deans: That's very well said.

Mr. Cassidy: Not before that time?

Mr. MacDonald: We hope it will be before, rather than after, the flood.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North.

PROBLEM OF FARMERS IN UXBRIDGE AREA

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the provincial Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs. Is he contemplating immediate action, or action soon, to eliminate the problems that have arisen whereby farmers in the Uxbridge township area are sitting on their land to which they have no legal right and are losing their mortgages? What action is the government taking to correct this situation, which was detailed in my Throne debate speech of last week?

Hon. Mr. White: The matter is under consideration at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Good: Well, a supplementary: This is the answer these farmers have been getting from the government for two years.

Mr. Speaker: Question!

Mr. Good: Now, can't the Treasurer do something better than that and give them some definite word—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Good: —as to when he will amend the Planning Act?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Good: Can't he give them some more definite answer than that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Lawrence: Can't the member sit down?

ACTIVITIES OF HOLIDAY MAGIC LTD.

Mr. Stokes: A question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Since we do have laws in this province prohibiting pyramid selling, will the minister investigate the activities of Holiday Magic Ltd., of 15 Rolark Dr., in Scarborough, the company that is under charge in the Province of Quebec at the present time? Will he satisfy himself that their activities here are not a foul of any legislation passed here recently?

Mr. Laughren: Satisfy us too!

Hon. J. T. Clement (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said, the company has been charged in the Province of Quebec, along with two principals of that company and some 35 distributors acting for the company. They've been charged with a breach of the lottery legislation contained in the Criminal Code.

My ministry is well aware of the company's activities within this province, and is working closely with Metro and the Ontario Provincial Police. I should add they do not have a licence or are not registered under the Pyramid Sales Act at this time. The company has been dealing very closely with the registrar of pyramidal sales in an attempt to have it registered but, as of this moment, it is not registered. We're well aware of its activities.

Mr. Stokes: As a supplementary, does that mean that they aren't duly licensed to carry on activities in the province at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Clement: The company is not licensed in the Province of Ontario at this time. The provincial police and the Metro police are aware of that because we have advised them, and their own investigations have confirmed that too.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

DIAL-A-BUS SYSTEM

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. In light of the fact that a dial-a-bus system is contemplated in the Toronto area, is the minister, as this time, prepared to provide sufficient funds to other municipalities so that they could study the feasibility of adapting that system to their areas?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Transportation and Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out, this particular project in Metropolitan Toronto is a demonstration project. The answer to the question the member asked would be that if there are funds available for studies—there are funds available for transportation studies—dial-a-bus probably could be part of this study that would be made. There are funds 75 per cent—25 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East.

ASSISTANCE FOR WELFARE ACTION CENTRE

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Minister of Community and Social Services: Is it the minister's intention to provide assistance to the Toronto welfare action centre as has been requested by me and by the action centre on at least four occasions—to which he has not replied in over a year?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the member could repeat his question. I didn't hear it.

Mr. Martel: Is it the minister's intention to provide financial assistance to the welfare action centre in Toronto, for which requests have been made by me and by the centre on at least four occasions over the past year and to which we haven't received any acknowledgement, either yes or no, to date?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows, there are very many worthwhile groups. I would say I have an average of at least two delegations a day. This came to my knowledge only last Wednesday, I believe, when this group came in and submitted its submission to me with a copy to my deputy. This was last week, either Wednesday or Thursday; this was the first time, to my knowledge, that I had heard of its request.

Mr. Martel: Would the minister have someone in his ministry check his mail because, in fact, I've written about this on at least three occasions and have not received any acknowledgement.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North.

USE OF MARKET VALUE ASSESSMENTS

Mr. Good: A question of the Minister of Revenue: What prompted the use of market value assessments in the year 1973 for taxation in 1973 in Bruce county?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There were some difficulties with respect to some of the municipalities in the area where there was a great imbalance, as I recall. We had a special request from the county council and it seemed to be wise to make the change there immediately. The last report I have received is that the assessment has come along just fine and there has been very little complaint about it.

Mr. Good: A supplementary: Does that mean that the government policy of using market value assessment in 1974 for 1975 taxation will be changed and that there will be an earlier implementation in other areas across the province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, not necessarily. I don't know whether the hon. member is aware of it but there is quite a number of municipalities which are now taxing on the new system of assessment.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Certainly, if it appears advisable to do that because of circumstances in some of the municipalities, of course we will do everything we can to accommodate them. The original plan of the government to bring in the new system in 1974 for taxation in 1975 still applies and hopefully we'll be able to meet it.

Mr. Good: One final supplementary: Could the minister tell me how many hundreds or how many thousands of appeals there have been to the assessment now that the appeal date has passed? Would he have a total number of appeals in Bruce county?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that information at my fingertips. I'll be glad to get it for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

FRENCH SCHOOLING IN ELLIOT LAKE

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education, before he leaves; he's hiding behind the dais right now.

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): No, he never hides.

Mr. Lewis: Alas, that's true!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the French schooling situation in Elliot Lake is now assuming some of the proportions of the situation in Cornwall or previously in Sturgeon Falls? What is he prepared to do in order to resolve that situation quickly rather than letting it continue and fester?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, of course I'm aware that there are concerns in Elliot Lake. As a matter of fact, I was late arriving at this House today because I met some of the group from Elliot Lake. They are at present carrying on very good and, I hope, productive discussions with the Council on French-Language Schools, which is meeting in the Macdonald Block at the present time with the group of students from Elliot Lake.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to ask Dr. Symons to intervene in that situation in order to resolve the situation quickly, rather than letting it last and last?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It would be very premature to suggest that at this point in time, Mr. Speaker, The Council on French-Language Schools is a very competent group of francophones. They are, as I say, at present meeting with the group. I think we should give them an opportunity to assess the situation and at least get back to me with their report and considerations of what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Martel: We could always provide them with a cab.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary, yes.

Mr. Foulds: What deliberations has the Council on French-Language Schools taken with regard to the situation at Elliot Lake, seeing that the group which is presently outside the Legislature had contacted senior levels of government over six months ago about the problem in Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very pleased to outline for my friend all the different contacts that have gone on. I think for the past six months or so that the Council on French-Language Schools, the assistant deputy minister in my department and many people were involved with Elliot Lake.

I just remind him that in all of these things these problems have two sides. They involve talking with two groups of people, the French-language committee and the school board. Really, it's a case, I think, of not inflaming passions on both sides, but getting people to talk in a cool, collective and constructive way to solve their problems. That's what the council is dedicated to doing, and it has been attempting to do that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Foulds: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: There is a pretty basic matter of French-language rights which the government always ignores.

Mr. Speaker: This is the final supplementary then.

Mr. Foulds: Wouldn't the minister agree, though, that the delay in action at Elliot Lake has, in fact, already led to a polarization in that community which is extremely unfortunate?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't think I'd be willing to agree to that at this point in time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Which part doesn't the minister agree with?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE COSTS OF EDUCATION

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

In light of the fact that on Dec. 4, 1972, the minister tabled in this House the second report on the costs of education dealing with capital costs and construction, when will the minister table the first report on the costs of education dealing with teacher training?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I hope that we'll be able to table that within the next three or four weeks.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the minister if he would care at this time at least to provide the House with a summary of the recommendations of that report?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Snow presented the annual report of the Department of Public Works for the year ended March 31, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves that, notwithstanding the previous order, the House will sit on Wednesday, April 18 at 2 o'clock, p.m., and that when it adjourns that sitting, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 24.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, if I may provide a short explanation, this bill raises the general rate of paid-up capital tax from one-tenth of one per cent to one-fifth of one per cent.

The dual rate of capital tax payable by banks is raised to a uniform rate of two-fifths of one per cent, and the special tax on banks and the office tax on them are repealed. The special taxes, under part 4 of the Act, on corporations other than insurance corporations are repealed, and the corporations that pay these repealed special taxes will now pay the general capital tax. The taxable paid-up capital of corporations will now include all bank loans.

A proposed amendment will prohibit the deduction from income of a part of management fees, rents, royalties, other similar payments, and payments for the right to use films or videotapes when those payments are made to a non-resident person with whom the paying corporation does not deal at arm's length. This replaces the present provision in the Act that prohibits the deduction of only management or administration fees.

The bill provides that the rate of refund to which mutual fund corporations are entitled is increased from five per cent to six per cent in order to refund the full amount of capital gains tax paid to Ontario. This change applies to 1972 and subsequent fiscal years of these corporations.

Fraternal societies will become liable to the insurance premiums tax with respect to contracts entered into after Dec. 31, 1973.

Most of these changes take effect on April 13, 1973, and the bill provides specific provisions to deal with the changes for fiscal years that include that day. Other minor amendments are proposed to clarify the existing provisions of the Act.

SECURITY TRANSFER TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. White moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to repeal the Security Transfer Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this bill will repeal the Security Transfer Tax Act effective April 13, 1973. Ontario is the only province imposing such a tax and it is hoped that its removal will have a positive influence on the acquisition of equity ownership by Canadians, and by residents of Ontario in particular.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, this is essentially a housekeeping bill; it provides for the refund of Ontario income tax on the capital gains of mutual fund trusts. The provisions avoid the double taxation of these gains, both in the hands of the trust and the hands of its unit holders to whom the gains are distributed.

The bill will also amend Ontario's property tax credit plan to ensure that where the occupancy cost of the principal resident is paid out of a trust, the principal taxpayers for whom the money was paid will be able to take those payments into account in calculating his property tax credit.

Amendments are also proposed to exclude foreign diplomats from the definition of principal taxpayer, and to meet certain requirements under our agreement with the government of Canada for the administration of the property tax credit plan.

CITY OF LONDON BOARD OF EDUCATION ACT

Mr. Walker moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act respecting the Board of Education for the City of London.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. J. A. Taylor (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes there will be some very delightful apples distributed to each and every member.

Mr. Stokes: How about some cheese to go with it?

Mr. Taylor: As members know, Prince Edward is famous for its cheese as well as other agricultural products, but today, through the courtesy of Harold Bonter, president of the Quinte Fruit Growers, members are going to have, as I say, these well-polished apples. I hope that members enjoy them and think of Prince Edward-Lennox and all of the people of the Quinte area as they munch away.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day there is one point that puzzles me and I would like to get confirmation from the House leader. Am I correct in assuming that we are going from here to the budget debate and thence into committee of supply, at which point we will continue with the estimates of Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Kerr), and that the estimates committee will not be sitting at the same time dealing with other aspects of Justice?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: That is true.

Mr. Singer: Thank you, sir.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Except for one proviso; that is that if the Liberal contribution to the budget debate goes past 5 o'clock, I would hope that we will have the courtesy of the House to allow the private members' hour to take one hour of today.

Mr. Singer: We are pleased to co-operate as always.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, as the opposition critic of the Treasury and Ministry of Revenue I am pleased once again to bring the comments of the Liberal opposition on the budget presented by the Treasurer on Thursday last.

Before I begin my remarks, however, I must compliment the Treasurer (Mr. White) and thank him for involving the critics from the opposition parties and the staff members of our respective offices in the presentation made to the news media on Thursday afternoon. For the first time we were able to review the contents of the budget before its actual presentation in the chamber.

The Treasurer has been most considerate in providing this facility to the opposition and now I believe the comments that can be made immediately after the presentation of the budget come, of course, from somewhat greater study than has been the case in years past.

As a result of the studies which we have done over the past several days, it is clear to me that the sales tax increases announced in the recent budget are not really necessary. They are not necessary to achieve the presumed goals of the administration. The basic criticism which I have to make of this budget is that the Treasurer could have achieved his presumed result if he would do but two things.

The first thing that he must do is to forecast properly the revenues of the province, especially in the time of a buoyant economy.

The second thing he must do is to use the examples of waste and inefficiency and mismanagement as set out in the most recent Provincial Auditor's report in order to cut out the unnecessary expenditures which have been made by this government.

If the Treasurer were able to add those factors together, we believe that the increases in revenues and the lowering of expenditures would have given Ontario the result for which it now has to pay dearly.

In the only part of the budget that was the slightest bit funny, the Treasurer decided not to apply retail sales tax to the purchase of household pets. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that he stated, "I find it abhorrent to put a tax on these lovable creatures which become in effect members of the family."

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): He was not funny at all. He was deadly serious.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the Treasurer has decided, however, to tax all the rest of the apparently unlovable creatures in the province, namely, all the citizens of Ontario. The increase in sales tax to seven per cent is regressive and it harms those who really cannot improve their incomes. It will have the effect of hurting pensioners and the wage-earners with the lowest incomes.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that all the hocus-pocus and sleight-of-hand and transfer from one pot to the other which the Treasurer proposes will not in effect shift the burden from those who have to carry it now. The approach which the Treasurer has taken has made a mockery of the claim of government responsibility and good management within this province.

By this increase in taxation alone, we expect that a family of father, mother and two children under 16 years of age, with a total income of some $10,000 per year, will probably pay at least $52 more a year in sales tax alone. On a quick calculation, we would presume that such a family would have, after income taxes, a disposable income of $7,500.

With housing at $200 per month and food at least $100 per month, it seems reasonable that there would eventually be the sum of $3,000 to be spent on taxable consumer goods. The tax at five per cent, of course, was $150 and the new tax at seven per cent will be $210. So this then gives the Treasurer $60 more per year from this family.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we are informed in the Treasurer's own words that a tax credit amount of some $36 can be expected, but the family I have used as an example is likely going to have to pay that $28 to which he also referred for its heating supply for the year. The net result therefore is this figure of $52, or a dollar a week taken away from each of the families within the province. I put it to you that this example is indeed modest, perhaps paltry, when compared with the mathematics of the editorial writer in today's issue of the Toronto Star.

The greatest failing of this government is its inability to forecast revenues and expenditures. A year never goes by when revenues and expenditures do not exceed the original estimates. The Legislature is often asked to approve supplementary estimates, and last year alone these amounted to the sum of $200 million. But what is even more appalling, and is pointed out in the Provincial Auditor's report, is that some $114,856,000 was spent in the fiscal year 1971-1972 through Management Board and Treasury Board orders, and that this money was spent without approval or review by this Legislature.

It seems that the government is unable to take into account the effects of supply and demand in its tax increases. In addition, this government cannot visualize the economic activities of the coming year when trying to determine its needs each year at budget time.

The interim report on Ontario's finances dated Jan. 31, 1973, indicates that the upturn in the economy, brought about by federal initiatives in the fiscal and monetary fields, resulted in some $45 million more revenue from personal income tax than expected. There was also $35 million more revenue from retail sales taxes and $160 million from corporation income taxes. These represent increases over expectations of 3.9 per cent, 4.1 per cent and 4.5 per cent respectively. And if we look at last year's budget and see where the tax increases came, we see that the government failed to take into account the effect of increased prices on the demand for goods and services.

Last year gasoline taxes were increased and the government collected $7 million less from this source than it expected. Fees, licences and permits were almost all increased and the government collected $3.4 million less than expected. Liquor prices were increased and the profits from trading operations of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario increased only by $4.1 million. This was an increase of 1.7 per cent over expectations while consumer consumption generally increased 4.1 per cent as related by the increase in retail sales tax.

It should also be pointed out that the government's deficit for the fiscal year 1973, which is now estimated at $476 million, was originally standing at a figure of $800 million. This was reduced by a guesstimate of the Premier (Mr. Davis) to $600 million and was further helped by the fact that additional revenues were received from the government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this administration seems to have fallen on bad political times. The decisions which are made by the ministries seem to go from weakness to weakness as the cabinet tries to cope with the fiscal problems of this province. It is clear that their manner of coping has set up inappropriate policies, which have clearly been the trademark of the Davis administration. The largest deficits in the history of the province have been added to the burden of our provincial debt since William Davis became Premier two years ago. The harsh decisions in this recent budget are simply an indication of his attempts to set the provincial fiscal house in order before complete chaos envelops us.

As I have stated, Mr. Speaker, the most important note in looking at this budget from our point of view, is that the Province of Ontario did not really need a tax increase. The federal initiatives in reducing taxes will ensure buoyant economy in the coming year, and we are all confident that the revenues from personal and corporate income tax in the coming year will far exceed those forecast by the Treasurer. Indeed, I might say that consumer consumption will probably increase as much in the coming year. The revenues from sales tax would have been more than enough to reach the goals of this administration, if the rate had been left at five per cent.

The Treasurer has predicted the budgetary deficit of some $400 million in the coming year. I am confident that his inability to forecast revenues will mean that we probably will find in the final analysis that we have in fact almost a balanced budget.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): He's building up a nice surplus for election year.

Mr. Breithaupt: We have all condemned the use of sales taxes as regressive taxes. This is because they bear most heavily on the low-income wage earner and take a greater proportion of his income to pay than they do from the wealthier citizens of our province. The Treasurer's attempt to offset the regressive nature of this tax is another example of this government taking away with one hand and giving back part with the other.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: A small part.

Mr. Breithaupt: This is done, of course, at all times with the attendant inefficiencies and the waste of an increasing and expanding bureaucracy. In this case also, we believe that the part that is returned to the poorer citizens of our province is completely inadequate.

And in addition, Mr. Speaker, at a time of inflationary price increases—especially those dealing with energy resources—the extension of the retail sales tax to include electricity, gas and home fuel works a great hardship on our people. The Treasurer's comment that a family man could reduce his taxes by turning down the heat is certainly cold comfort.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: He'll have fun at the Tory caucus this week explaining those remarks.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, there is clearly a lack of control over the expenditures being made by the present administration. As we look at the additional $280 million which the government plans to gain through increasing the provincial sales tax by two per cent, we wonder why the public must continue to pay for mistakes made by this government.

For the first time in the history of this province, the Provincial Auditor's report catalogues the millions of dollars of waste which occur under the mismanagement of this administration. The Provincial Auditor's report probably represents only the tip of the iceberg. When it is multiplied by 30—that is, when it is multiplied by the number of years of Tory mismanagement in Ontario—the amount must be truly staggering.

Let's just look at a few items which occur in the Provincial Auditor's report. Provincial student aid loans are now in arrears by $336,507, and of this, some $14,413 are deemed uncollectable. The cost to the province of the outstanding $336,000 at today's interest rates means approximately an additional $33,000 per year while these accounts are in arrears.

In section 97 of the auditor's report, we are shown the 'over-stocking' of publications by the Department of Education. With an inventory on hand of $106,000 valued at retail rates, the department managed to sell $13,816.95 worth of those publications. What we probably have here is between $30,000 and $40,000 worth of publications, valued at cost, which in fact will never be sold.

Item 102 in the auditor's report relates to the uncollected fees in the companies branch in the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. This amounts presently to $750,000. We do not know how much of that amount will ever be collected. But again, at current interest rates, it is probably presently costing the province some $75,000 a year to maintain these outstanding fees, since moneys have to be borrowed elsewhere or funds committed from some other source. The Department of Health had about $750,000 in surplus and obsolete stock. Of this amount, $30,500 worth was just thrown away. About half of the remainder was given to the Pakistan relief fund—and we certainly can't argue with that kind of an approach in ridding ourselves of obsolete stock—but then we see the remainder of some $378,000 distributed to other departments, probably to sit in their inventories also as obsolete stock.

The provincial courts have $10 million in unpaid fines. At current interest rates again that's costing the province perhaps almost $1 million a year to maintain, and how much of it is uncollectable remains to be seen.

The Ontario Municipal Board fee structure was initially set up so that the fees would be commensurate with costs and expenses incurred. In 1961 everything seemed to be under control, when revenue was $317,000 and costs were $269,000. By 1971 revenue was $515,000 and the costs had escalated to $897,000. This means that the OMB was costing us in excess of $382,000 in 1971 to operate, although it was originally envisioned to be in a balanced position or possibly producing a slight revenue for the province.

Then there was that duplicate payment to pensioners. Over $21,000 was paid out as duplicate payments due to the mismanagement of this programme. Of this amount, about $15,000 was recovered, which obviously created a hardship for the pensioners in receipt of these funds. They certainly wouldn't have known that a duplicate payment had been made and that at some time the money would be recalled in a way similar to the way that General Motors recalls its automobiles. The remaining amount of almost $6,000 is unlikely to ever be recovered.

The mismanagement of licences and permits in the former Department of Lands and Forests meant that almost $43,000 worth of licences had to be written off because they were reported either to be lost or inadvertently destroyed. Who knows how much of those funds went astray into the pockets of persons who shouldn't have received them? Who knows how many hundreds of fishermen enjoyed their sport free of charge that year?

One of the better fiascos pointed out in the Provincial Auditor's report was the federal-provincial special development loans programme. The federal government had made available $17 million to the province to be used in municipal capital projects. Of this amount, just over $5.6 million was applied for by the municipalities.

Why the province did not make a concerted effort to see that municipal projects around the province were found so that all of the $17 million was put to use is just another example of mismanagement. Surely $17 million fully injected into the economy of Ontario, which would have provided jobs and increased consumer consumption, could only spur our economy. This would also mean higher revenues for the province in terms of increased personal income tax and both corporate and sales taxes. However, Mr. Speaker, of the $5.6 million, none had in fact been disbursed by year end, March 31, 1972. By July 31, 1972, only $75,000 had been disbursed. Surely the Treasurer of this province or someone in the government must realize that there are time lags between the injection of money into the economy and the economic benefits which are to be derived from it?

Then item 126 of the Provincial Auditor's report tells us of the empty leased premises within the Department of Public Works. The leases have been entered into and the premises are now standing vacant with no hope of subletting. The net cost for that is some $15,000. Item 128 tells us that a delay in the construction of phase 2 of the Queen's Park project, which many refer to as Disneyland East, costs us some $448,000 in storage charges for inventories alone.

There have been various comments made in this chamber with respect to the operations of Ontario Place. The estimated cost of $14 million escalated to an eventual cost of $29 million just for the construction of this project. The operating deficits continue; and the restaurants of Ontario Place operated at deficits of almost $105,000.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): And not a cabinet minister in the House.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Six members out of 76!

Mr. Breithaupt: One can only presume that the $40,000 advanced as working capital to these restaurants will never be recovered.

The most important single item in this area, of course, was the $50 million that we found out was lost because of the decision not to collect premiums under the health insurance plan. In addition, another $5 million was lost because premiums were underbilled. One wonders how many millions of dollars in disbursements to doctors were lost where services were either not rendered or where the patient was overserved.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder if you feel that it is appropriate that this debate continue when there is not a single representative of the ministry here for the lead-off budget criticism from the official opposition.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it was a shameful circumstance during the Throne Debate that is now being repeated, that the government of Ontario, which is supposed to listen to people, hasn't got the good sense to at least listen to the comments from the opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. White (Treasurer, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs): On the point of order, if I may, Mr. Speaker, I certainly am glad to be here to hear the criticism, although it must be said it is not dealing with the budget, it is dealing with the auditor's report. However, I myself have sat here. I was called out for just a moment where I was able to listen on the intercom.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): One out of 23.

Hon. Mr. White: I was curious to see there were only 12 Liberals here.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, the Treasurer, it is true, has been here. But surely with an administration as large as we have here it is time that they understood that it is at least part of their responsibility—and in my view their prime responsibility—to be here in the House to hear the debate as it comes forward. Surely it is totally irresponsible that they would absent themselves day after day.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): They are never here.

Hon. Mr. White: Where are the Leader of the Opposition's members?

Mr. Speaker: May I remind the Leader of the Opposition that, so long as there is a quorum in the House, the debate goes on.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): He knows that that is not a point of order.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): It sure is.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): All right, so we made our point.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cassidy: It shows the disrespect of the government to this House.

Mr. Breithaupt: There are many other items in the Provincial Auditor's report where dollar value is not placed on the government's mismanagement of affairs, particularly in the area of cash management. An example of that is the Ontario Development Corp. placing over $1 million in term deposits earning less than 5.75 per cent, while it had outstanding advances from the Treasurer costing a rate of 7.5 per cent.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that an acceptable figure for the total of errors pointed out in the Provincial Auditor's report is probably $100 million. When we add to that figure the additional $50 million voted in supplementary estimates last year for additional health costs, we come up with almost one half of the total benefits that are to accrue by the province by the raising of the sales tax from five per cent to seven per cent. Surely, this additional $50 million, which was voted in supplementary estimates must be added in, because of the government's failure to adapt the package of constraints and checking which Dr. Kinloch had suggested to the Minister of Health (Mr. Potter).

The general mishandling of the Medicare programme within Ontario has, of course, been the subject of broad discussion over the past several months. When we see this mismanagement focused within one particular ministry, it becomes apparent to those of us in the opposition that the minister has either no desire to change the situation or no ability to deal with this problem.

There are, of course, Mr. Speaker, other examples of waste through mismanagement, which have not as yet appeared in the Provincial Auditor's report. We can think within the last several weeks of the cancellation of the proposed development east of Bay St. in Toronto. Some $250,000 was spent for architectural proposals and then the plan was killed immediately after those proposals were received.

In addition, the cutbacks in the use of hospital and educational facilities are further examples of poor planning. All of us would agree that cutbacks in spending are commendable when services are not impaired and where there is justification for these changes. However, we must remind you, Mr. Speaker, that schools and hospitals were built at great cost, and hundreds of thousands of teachers were trained at enormous cost to the province. Now we have hospital beds being closed down, and classrooms, and even whole schools, empty.

It would seem that planning school facilities, in particular, would be fairly easy. We have readily available statistics which indicate the number of children in each age group.

However, the arrival of the post-war baby boom, as it moves into the primary schools and secondary schools and then into the universities, seemed to come as a big surprise to this government. In this situation the government can really blame no one else, because it has had the responsibility of governing this province for the full term of the lives of all the students in question. Even worse are the sums of money which have been spent on community colleges and universities while duplication has obviously resulted and while classrooms in the primary and secondary schools were being emptied.

Of course, we have had to have educational facilities at all levels for those members of our population born since 1945. We knew that these children were coming into the classrooms and we also knew, as the projections were apparently with us, that the numbers following would be greatly reduced. Once again, there appears to be a clear lack of planning for facilities. Once again there appears to be an inability to shift the use of classroom resources from one level of education to another as the student mix within our population changes.

Another example of mismanagement by this administration is the approach that has been taken by the Attorney General's office concerning the interest paid on money left in trust accounts by the lawyers of this province. It would appear that the inability of the Attorney General to act on this particular problem has allowed some $11 million of free income each year to go to the banks and trust companies which are operating in Ontario.

As has been pointed out, the interest on these moneys goes to those institutions by default. The lawyers have no right to these funds, as agreed by the rules of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Further, it is certainly impractical to divide the interest up among the various clients as these funds flow in and out of trust for the purchase of properties or on other projects for clients.

There is surely no reason why the interest from these accounts cannot be used for the general benefit of the public. A portion could be used to cover some of the costs of the legal aid plan which is now a charge to the province of about $11 million a year. A further portion could be used for research in legal education and in law reform. All that we hear from the Attorney General (Mr. Bales), as a representative of this government, is that the matter is being studied. We have not seen a task force appointed as yet; we have not seen a board of review. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have not as yet even had a royal commission. Perhaps all of these things will be coming to us in the fullness of time.

What must be done, and it should be done today, is that the Attorney General ensure that the funds which are going by default to institutions that have no claim to them should be put to public use. Here again, we have an example of failure to act. Mr. Speaker, this example in this area once again points to the mismanagement of funds which are available and should be used to benefit all the people of this province.

Now that another year has gone by since the last budget within Ontario, there is a further area which must once again be pointed out as an obvious saving of expenditures for the citizens of Ontario. This, of course, is the situation which exists in the continuation of grade 13 within the Ontario secondary school system.

Both the Hall-Dennis report on education and the report of the commission on post-secondary education in Ontario have recommended the elimination of grade 13. Recommendation 22 of the report called "The Learning Society" states:

The present grade 13 standard of education should be attainable in 12 years, allowing individuals entry into all forms of post-secondary education after 12 years of schooling.

The draft report of the commission says:

We view a fifth year of secondary education as being educationally unnecessary and a socially undesirable barrier to wider accessibility of post-secondary education. Much of the social screening that is now attributed to post-secondary educational institutions occurs, in fact, by grade 9 when the streaming of students starts. By abolishing the 13th year and without diminishing the quality of education we will be increasing the educational opportunities of our students and decreasing the social distance separating the different kinds of post-secondary educational institutions in our province.

In September, 1972, there were 50,712 students enrolled in Ontario. The cost of educating one student per year in 1971 was $1,303. If we multiply the number of grade 13 students by that cost we can get a total cost of educating these students for one year which is $66,077,736.

It would, of course, be incorrect to say that the province would save this full amount by eliminating grade 13, because administrative costs and specialty costs would still have to be incurred for grades 9 to 12. But certainly we could save many millions of dollars per year by moving immediately to cancel out the grade 13 system.

Another major source of waste of provincial government funds is the continuation by some agencies of government of using the proposal system for acquiring building space. I think I know why the system persists—at least I have my suspicions. Not all of the government backbenchers may understand the difference between the proposal system and the tender system, so let me explain it briefly.

With the tender system, the purchaser specifies in detail his requirements and then asks the suppliers to submit their prices for providing the goods or services which are required. The purchaser then chooses the lowest price.

With the proposal system, the purchaser mentions his requirements in a vague and general way and would-be suppliers work out their own detailed specifications and prices. The purchaser then has to give out his decision as to which package of specifications and items is the best. The decision the purchaser then has to make is a most difficult and subjective exercise. It attempts to decide which specifications are adequate, which are excessive and how much each aspect of specification is worth to the purchaser.

Since this exercise is subjective there is a potential for awarding lucrative contracts to one's friends, and this prospect becomes even more tantalizing if one's friends can be encouraged to make political donations to one's own political party.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: It becomes irresistible for the Tories.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How differently do the Liberals work? It's precisely the same pattern.

Mr. Breithaupt: Well, we presume that the provinces in western Canada may be able to improve upon that. Time alone will tell.

The Ministry of Government Services now uses only the tender system. This wasn't always so, but of late the ministry has seen the advantages. It is now ministry policy to invariably tender for goods and services and for this policy, I must say, the ministry is to be commended.

In light of this government policy it is fascinating and most curious that certain government agencies do not invariably use tenders. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, how tendering can be good for the government but not good for the agencies and emanations of this government.

For example, when the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education built its office building on Bloor St. it used the proposal system, and with that building comes a $2.1 million price tag each year. With the proposal system no one can tell with certainty whether OISE office requirements could have been more cheaply satisfied, but one can tell with certainty that this OISE building is the most imposing edifice in Toronto, with the possible exception of the John Roberts Library.

Then there is the curious example of Ontario Hydro. As we look out the front doors of this building we see construction going on before our very eyes. Here is a commission which usually tenders for everything, even when it buys pencils. If Hydro can save money by calling for tenders to buy pencils, it could save an awful lot more by calling tenders for a $45 million head office building.

Mr. Reid: But Kelly wouldn't like that.

Mr. Breithaupt: Of course, that is presuming it's needed in the first place. But if you thought so, Mr. Speaker, you would be right—a lot of money could be saved.

My leader has shown how much money Gerhardt Moog and his organization will make on this deal. For an initial investment of some $6 million, Gerhardt Moog will be rewarded with a rental income of $6.1 million each and every year for 30 years. And even as he goes around his home in Ontario—if he has one—turning down the lights and wearing a sweater, he will have benefited greatly from the people of this province.

Further, if I may be allowed to straighten out the Premier's earlier comments on this point, after expenses and after mortgage payments, Mr. Moog would still recoup his initial investment in less than two years, he will double his money in less than four years, triple his money in a little over six years and so on and on—

Mr. Good: That's not bad.

Mr. Breithaupt: —and the profits will pile up over the 30-year life of the lease.

If I may further illuminate the earlier comments of the Premier—and I won't charge him seven per cent tax on that illumination—I would refer to his comments concerning the concept of present value. In our view, Gerhardt Moog's annual discounted rate of return on his investment will be a shocking 38.7

per cent, and Mr. Speaker, this 38.7 per cent is after expenses and after mortgage payments for a guaranteed first class tenant for 30 years.

Mr. R. F. Nixon: Thirty-eight per cent profit.

Mr. Breithaupt: What investment could be safer? What investment could be more lucrative?

Mr. Lawlor: Where is the entrepreneurship?

Mr. Breithaupt: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that if this building had been tendered it would have been cheaper and it would have eliminated all suspicion that has gone on with respect to the view that this contract was awarded because of friendship with this administration.

These suspicions have arisen in the mind of the public for two reasons. The first reason is because of the extremely high profit accruing to Mr. Moog. The second is that Hydro had intended to build this new head office on its own. Hydro has built its other buildings and it started out to build this one by itself. Hydro had architectural drawings worth $1.5 million made up and was prepared to go ahead, then all of a sudden all of this was set aside.

An hon. member: Here comes Moog!

Mr. Breithaupt: The end result was that Mr. Moog was going to build this building no matter what the cost—and that is exactly what he is doing now.

So, Mr. Speaker, given these kinds of goings on, is it any wonder that many of Ontario's citizens are suspicious of this deal and of how and why Mr. Moog got into a position to make so much money? And, Mr. Speaker, isn't it curious that all of this mess could have been cleaned up simply by abandoning this proposal system immediately for all government agencies and invariably moving to use the tender system? This is a further and another example of government waste and inefficiency.

Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer has made much about his comments concerning the changes which will result to the benefit of municipalities because of the proposals in this budget. When we think of areas in which this government has with no good reason, or with poor results, flushed taxpayers' money down the sewers of mismanagement, we must obviously think of this government's regional municipalities.

The point has been made by many observers of this mad scheme and by every poor citizen who has been "regionalized": Regionalization makes municipal government more remote from the citizens. It makes it less responsive to their needs and their requirements and it makes it more impersonal. In fact, a municipal copy of the unmoving and unmovable bureaucracy of Queen's Park seems to be imposed upon all of the areas when they become regionalized.

If this is the effect of regional government, why does the government press ahead with its plans for further regionalization? The government speaks of regional planning as the benefit of regional government, but surely planning can be done on a regional basis without meddling with the existing local governments?

All that is needed to make regional planning work is a programme of assessment equalization, and the Treasurer has shown in this budget that even he can devise such a programme. Well, if regional planning can be done without regional government, the only possible reason for imposing regional municipalities on a vigorously resisting citizenry is that it is a more financially efficient means of local administration.

Mr. Speaker, the data on regional government so far does not bear this view out. Quite to the contrary, the data shows that regional government increases cost.

For instance, the total expenditure of the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton went up 88 per cent in the four years since it was formed. Niagara's total expenditures have risen 85 per cent, in the three years since it was formed—and its costs for general administration are 164 per cent higher. The regional municipality of Yorks total expenditures are up 180 per cent in the three years since it was formed—and its general administrative costs are up 250 per cent.

The evidence is clear. These regional governments are caught up in their own administrative Queen's Park-type bureaucracy. This is evident and it brings the usual financially disastrous results for the average citizen. The province has pumped $90 million into these sad ventures and the annual injection of money is not declining. Quite the reverse; it is in fact escalating at a terrifying rate.

When these so-called transitional grants run out, local taxes will skyrocket. I'm sure the member for Waterloo North and I share that view within our own region of Waterloo.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is no excuse for the imposition of these municipal catastrophes. I reiterate now our party's call for a moratorium on further regionalization pending a full review of the whole programme. We must see the true facts and figures that emerge from the sad mess which has been created. And I point to the $90 million of provincial moneys poured into the regional municipalities to help them stay afloat. That $90 million may well prove to have been moneys which have had no benefit for our citizens but only increased burdens upon them.

The Treasurer has made much of his presumed attempt to co-operate with the federal authorities in not imposing a greater income tax on the people of this province. While he denies that any commitment was undertaken with the federal Minister of Finance in this matter, he does say that there was an understanding by which the moneys granted through a reduction of federal income tax would not be taxed away by the various provincial authorities.

But the end result of this budget does not prove these statements. It is true that there is no increase in personal income taxes, but a net increase in revenues of well over $200 million will still result. This will be the net result of the rise in retail sales taxes from five per cent to seven per cent and the further extension of these taxes to household energy sources, less, of course, the reductions resulting from the establishment of the two new tax credit schemes and other minor reductions in taxes.

The federal Minister of Finance has pointed out that the equivalent of this additional $200 million of increased revenue by sales tax is an income tax increase of about 16 per cent.

Hon. Mr. White: That's completely incorrect.

Mr. Breithaupt: Now, this of course does not take in account the expiry of the temporary three per cent personal income tax reduction at the end of 1972, which matched the federal three per cent cut.

Certainly if the Treasurer of Ontario accepts the logic of his federal friends in Ottawa, this would represent a further increase in taxation of Ontario residents of approximately $35 million.

Mr. Good: My friend is confusing the Treasurer with facts.

Mr. Breithaupt: As a result, as I have said, Mr. Speaker, the effect is to increase Ontario's taxation by the equivalent of an increase in personal income tax of roughly 19 per cent on the present total figures.

The Treasurer of Ontario argues at some length that neither the federal budget of 1973 nor previous budgets have provided sufficient economic stimulus to Canada. I think we should recall, Mr. Speaker, that the reduction of personal income taxes which had been proposed by the federal authorities would be equivalent to an across-the-board reduction of from 12 per cent to 13 per cent. This surely must be compared with the gross reduction which the Treasurer himself proposed in Ottawa of some nine per cent and a net reduction of only five per cent, after making allowance for the four percentage points which the Treasurer wanted the provinces to acquire.

It is curious, Mr. Speaker, for us to see the federal Conservative Party complaining that the federal budget has been insufficiently expansionary, and especially to look at that in the light of the fact that the Ontario budget is far less expansionary this year than it was last year.

Hon. Mr. White: Why, our deficit is larger than theirs per capita.

Mr. Singer: Oh, is that the test of expansion, the bigger the deficit? Or is that the test of good management?

Mr. Breithaupt: While the federal Conservatives—

Hon. Mr. White: Ours is 12 per cent of revenue and theirs is 11 per cent; so ours is slackening.

Mr. Singer: The bigger the deficit, the better we're doing. That's a good theory; the Treasurer must tell us more about that some time.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet): It is, with that kind of government up there.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Good: If we ran our businesses the way this government is run, we'd have been bankrupt years ago.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, while the federal Conservatives have been calling for the abolition of the federal sales tax on building materials, the effect of the present Ontario Conservative budget will be to increase the Ontario retail sales tax on those materials from the present five per cent to seven per cent.

Mr. Ruston: That's great logic, isn't it?

An hon. member: At the retail level, a tax on tax.

Mr. Breithaupt: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the hike in provincial sales taxes and their extension to household energy consumption is of course highly inflationary.

Mr. Good: Shameful!

Mr. Breithaupt: It is inflationary because it will act directly in increasing the prices of a wide range of consumer goods.

Mr. Reid: Especially in northern Ontario.

Mr. Good: It will blow up in the government's face.

Mr. Breithaupt: Surely we must contrast the approach taken by this Conservative administration in Ontario with the avowed concern of the Conservatives in Ottawa over inflation, and all the attendant problems that come from it.

It will remain to be seen whether the economic optimism that is predicted by the Treasurer of Ontario, in effect, takes place in 1973. He predicts real growth in the province of six per cent. We shall see whether in fact he is successful.

We can note as well that he states that employment grew strongly in 1972 and is expected to continue doing so in 1973. He fails to mention the benefits of any federal initiatives in these areas, but I presume that is to be expected.

Hon. Mr. White: Well, I knew the members opposite would look after that over the last weekend.

Mr. Breithaupt: There is another area in which the federal Conservative friends of this government have once again been let down by their colleagues. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the federal Conservatives criticized strongly the fact that the temporary reduction in corporate tax generally of seven per cent was allowed to expire last year. Here we note that the five per cent investment tax credit provided by Ontario as a companion measure to stimulate, was also allowed to expire at the end of the last fiscal year. While one group sees merit in the actions of Ontario, the other wing of the party sees disarray and problems at the federal level. When the left wing doesn't know what the right wing is doing it must indeed be a difficult situation for those who are in the middle of the bird.

Mr. Reid: It's all chicken in between.

Mr. Good: It will never get off the ground.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, there are many other areas with respect to specific tax proposals in this budget on which my colleagues will comment. I am certain that as this debate continues many other inadequacies of the present administration, especially through this budget, will be brought to light.

There is, however, one further point that I should bring to the attention of the House. I note that much consideration is now being given to the naming of unorganized and unopened township areas within the northern part of this province. As the Treasurer reminds us, we are living in times of provincial stress when all of us are required to turn down our lights and, to use the words of that old song, "put on our old White sweaters."

Mr. Ruston: And Stanfield underwear!

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Stanfield will be happy about that.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is only fitting that we give some thanks and consideration to a small group of martyrs who are struggling to keep the expenses of this government as low as possible. I am referring, of course, Mr. Speaker, to the seven government supporters who are not receiving any benefits from this Legislature beyond their sessional indemnity.

This happy band of brothers seems to be taking upon itself all the sins of commission of the other 69 government supporters. I do suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in the naming of these townships some mention might be made in the history of the province of the sacrifices which these members have all made and are making. I do look forward to seeing it announced in the next short period of time that new townships will bear the following names: Belanger; Lane; MacBeth; Morrow; Parrott; Timbrell; and Turner.

Mr. Singer: Good fellows. They should have townships named after them,

Mr. Breithaupt: Now it may be, Mr. Speaker, that some of the detailed information that has led me to make this suggestion may not be entirely accurate. I have accordingly prepared the information to the best of the knowledge we have been able to gain as to the benefits received by all of the other supporters of the government. If any of them wish to advise me of any inaccuracies, I shall be more than happy to correct the list.

Of course, if any of them would rather have a township named after them than receive these benefits, I am sure the Treasurer would be happy to make the arrangements if the additional funds are returned to the Treasury of the province.

Mr. Singer: A very good suggestion.

Mr. Breithaupt: Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Robert Nixon, that all of the words after "that" be struck out and the following added:

This House regrets the regressive and inflationary increases in the retail sales tax and the inadequacy of the tax credit to offset the regressive nature of this tax;

This House regrets the extension of the retail sales tax to include energy which will work a particular hardship on families with low or fixed incomes, as energy consumption is as much a necessity of life as food;

This House regrets the imposition of tax increases of any kind which counteract the initiatives taken by the federal government to spur the economy through the reduction of taxes;

This House regrets the inability of this government to control costs, particularly in the field of health services, and the failure of this government to adopt the tender method for the granting of government contracts for building construction which could save millions of dollars annually;

And this House regrets the failure of the government once again to provide adequate proposals to assist in the economic development of northern Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 14th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. Hodgson in the chair.

ESTIMATES OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARIAT FOR JUSTICE

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): On Friday, when we adjourned, I was answering a question from the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) regarding the figure of $54,000 indicated as services in the estimates. I believe I had given him about seven items which totalled $49,000. here is just one more item of $5,000, which deals with a transfer from the Ministry of Natural Resources, entitled the use of government aircraft. This is a journal entry. Rather than have all these set out in the Ministry of Natural Resources, any charges from this secretariat will be billed directly to this secretariat.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I think on Friday we might have got started a wee bit in trying to find out what the secretary really does. Notwithstanding a few, I thought most pertinent remarks from several of the members here, we weren't able to elicit any information.

For instance, I asked the minister, I would say three or four times, what this $358,000 is really going to do, and he didn't answer. It was only when the hon. member for Lakeshore picked specifically the $54,000 item that finally we have got the beginning of an answer.

Before I ask the question about what the $242,000 is going to do, there are three other topics at least on which I want to hear the minister's views.

His predecessor, who was equally a great thinker as the Provincial Secretary for Justice, after two years and some odd months finally thought out a policy on offtrack betting and eventually it became, apparently, an item of government policy. I would like to hear the views of this Provincial Secretary for Justice as to whether or not he adopts or rejects his predecessor's opinions about off-track betting and if he still goes along with them; the extent to which there have been conferences with the federal justice people, particularly Mr. Lang, the Minister of Justice; when we can anticipate that there will be a plan for the taking over by the government of Ontario of offtrack betting and the extent to which an administrative setup has been prepared, anticipating a review to the Criminal Code. In other words, when are we going to get at it?

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I would have thought that the provincial Treasurer (Mr. White), had he really believed that what Al Lawrence used to tell us about offtrack betting was going to come about, could have indicated how he was going to save us all money just by collecting more taxes from offtrack betting.

I've seen some estimates along this line, and I would think that there is probably a billion dollars available annually across Canada if an offtrack betting scheme—somewhat along the lines outlined by Al Lawrence—came into effect in the province of Ontario.

Not all of that money would come here; but a substantial number of millions of dollars would have been available to the Treasurer if the province had been able to move into this field; and perhaps the minister could have avoided some of the horrible incidence of increased taxation that he's gone along with at this point in time.

But I would like to hear a complete statement from the Provincial Secretary for Justice about his views on offtrack betting; the extent to which he is having success, if at all, with the people in Ottawa; and a summary of what has been doing in government circles to get ready for the day when it comes. Has he got computers, has he got key personnel trained, has he got draft legislation available; has he perhaps got sites in mind—either by the proposal system or by tender system—just how is he going to do it? Has he got a whole bunch of people available to go in and manage these shops as government employees—who might or might not have been active in the last provincial campaign?

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): They've got Charlie MacNaughton.

Mr. Singer: Yes; what is the minister going to do about offtrack betting?

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Point of order, Mr. Chairman, before we go on. On Friday the minister was surrounded by his coterie of pari passu advisers. Now this has completely dissipated.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Is committee going on?

Mr. Lawlor: Where might they be?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, there is another committee—a legislative committee.

Mr. Lawlor: Isn't a single one left?

Mr. Chairman: I don't think there is a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) is—

Mr. Chairman: The minister is responsible; so he will have to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The Attorney General is chairing a legislation committee. If I'm not mistaken, with the exception of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps) the other ministers are members of that committee.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I think a very valid point of order was made. I would certainly like to have the House leader's view on it.

When the House leader made his statement on April 9 about the revised method of introducing the estimates, he indicated quite clearly at that time that it was the proposed procedure that we would deal with the policy questions, to the extent that that was possible when the policy minister's estimates were before the assembly.

Now if that is the case, then it would appear to me that there is no way that this one minister can deal with the policy question in the absence of the other ministers who support it.

I rise to support my colleague's point of order simply because in this initial stage of this new way of dealing with estimates, if we're going to evolve a meaningful way of dealing with estimates then we've got to start off in the correct manner.

I was, unfortunately, due to the delays in the court system administered by the minister's colleague, the Attorney General, unable to be here on Friday. But I had the benefit of reading what the minister said and what my colleague, the member for Lakeshore and my friend the member for Downsview had to say. It was quite clear that we were not making any progress in evolving a significantly new way of dealing with this question of estimates, if the debate on Friday was of any consequence or of any significance in that evolution.

I would like to hear from the House leader, and I would like to hear from this minister as to what his conception is of what we are now engaged in doing in this committee meeting.

Mr. Singer: Good question!

Mr. Chairman: I think the member's point is well taken; but it is still out of order—

Mr. Singer: Hodgson for Speaker!

Mr. Chairman: —asking the House leader to reply during the estimates of the Justice policy secretary.

Mr. Renwick: As far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Chairman, in the sense that I tried to involve the House leader in explaining what we are trying to do, I will now direct my remarks to the minister whose estimates are before the assembly.

Mr. Lawlor: Because the House leader doesn't have a clue.

Mr. Renwick: Does the minister agree that what we are doing in this particular meeting of the committee is affording him an opportunity, in the words of the House leader, to elaborate on various aspects in the broad field of justice policy? Is that what we're doing at this particular meeting of the committee?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, the main purpose, I would think, of supply, is to deal with the estimates and whatever moneys are set out in the estimates and to approve those.

Mr. Singer: Ever heard it said, "don't pay any attention"?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I realize that during the estimates we do get into a very broad discussion of the ramifications and the duties and the functions of the various ministries. I would say that the hon. member's statement is a very fair one.

As the member for Lakeshore said, on Friday the four ministers were here. We did have a quite thorough discussion at that time, for about two hours. It's quite possible that they are otherwise engaged at the present time.

Mr. Singer: We didn't have a thorough discussion. We had thorough questions but no answers.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I really can't vouch for them at this point nor require them to be here.

Mr. Singer: They don't vouch for you either.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It was our understanding that I would be going on right after the orders of the day were called, at approximately 3 o'clock. However, that was changed to allow the Liberal critic of the budget to make his presentation. It's quite possible that the other ministers are therefore otherwise engaged at this point.

Mr. Chairman: Does the minister care to answer the comments of the member for Downsview at this time?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lawlor: Didn't your colleagues hear what the House leader said? I don't understand that. Maybe we need another committee to get them together and to decide what we are supposed to be doing.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, the member for Downsview referred to the question of offtrack betting. As the member knows, there was a task force set up by my predecessor to study this whole area. That task force has reported to the government and made certain recommendations. One of the recommendations was that the Criminal Code be amended to provide that all offtrack betting would be unlawful except as authorized by the province or by provincial law.

The bill that was introduced last year by the Minister of Justice in Ottawa did not, in fact, do that. That bill died on the order paper. Fortunately, we have made representations to the Minister of Justice and as a result of a meeting that was held in January, he has agreed that that particular prohibition would be put in.

Mr. Singer: Yes. That is what he told me on the weekend. I wonder what you are doing about it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: If there is any hold up, it's all very well to tell us that they are going to do that, but we'd like to see the bill. We'd like to see the federal government introduce the bill doing what he says he will do.

In the meantime, there are one or two other areas in the old legislation which we were not happy about and which the federal Attorney General (Mr. Lang) has indicated he may not change. That concerns us.

One other area is the role of the Department of Agriculture and the fact that the federal government, in the bill, would in fact be imposing regulations and really running, or telling us how to run, an offtrack betting system in Ontario. In view of the role of Ontario and in view of the size of horse racing in this province compared to other provinces—it's all very well to have such regulations for other provinces in the country—with the sophistication we have here we don't feel it's necessary. We don't feel that the federal Department of Agriculture should share in the offtrack betting tote as it does in the parimutuel. I think this is the same objection that my predecessor had, and we are still hoping that when the new bill is introduced there may be some adjustment or compromise in that area.

Another area is the suggestion that we would like to have an offtrack betting pool on racers other than in Ontario. The bet would be made here, with the odds based on the amount of betting in Ontario, but that we could in fact bet on a race in New York or some other jurisdiction. The indication from the federal government is that this won't be allowed.

As far as what we are doing; we haven't, as the hon. member suggests, acquired sites for shops. We are proceeding to establish a board of commissioners as recommended by the task force.

We have, during the past couple of months, been meeting various organizations which are opposed to offtrack betting—such as the harness people—trying to indicate to them that their concerns are not as legitimate or as serious as they seem to think, that the system of offtrack betting in Ontario operated by a government agency will not appreciably affect the attendance at B and C tracks and that the betting will be confined mainly to this part of the province. I think if we can convince them, for example, that what we intend to do is not what has happened in New York, where it has been a serious failure, they will, we hope, see the advantages of an offtrack betting system to not only the government but to the racing industry as a whole.

So that's basically what's going on. We are proceeding to set up the structure, but we are concerned that we go too far until the federal government carries through with its intention of introducing new legislation and until we have satisfied whatever legitimate objection there is in this province at the present time to an offtrack betting system.

One of the things the task force did reveal, and I am sure the hon. member is aware of this, is that the income from an offtrack betting system will not be quite as great as we anticipated and what the hon. member implies. It would be a good source of income, but in the early years certainly not what had been anticipated by the people in the industry and by the government.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I found the remarks of the secretary very interesting. You are proceeding to think about setting up a board of commissioners, in advance of course of any statute, which is only prudent. I was wondering which defeated Tories or resigned Tories you have in mind for that job. Elmer Bell already has a job. So has Charlie MacNaughton. Perry Ryan has a job. Have you got some other defeated Tories in mind to be the board of commissioners of the off-track betting?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Chairman Management Board of Cabinet): We are going to make you an offer, it's all right.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is either the bench or the board of commissioners!

Mr. Singer: Well, it all depends. All right!

I couldn't understand either, Mr. Chairman, whether, when the minister spoke about the opposition to this, this means that he is something less than firm in his resolve about carrying through his predecessor's statement of policy. Does that mean you are marking time until you see whether or not the opposition will disappear, or that you are still committed to the policy laid down by your predecessor, Al Lawrence? Are you backing away from the offtrack betting proposal if you cannot convince the people who have expressed opposition to it, or do you continue firm and resolute in your determination to carry this out?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Was that hypothetical, facetious, or legitimate?

Mr. Singer: Well I just want to pause to let you keep up with the questions.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, certainly I am not bound by any statements that my predecessor made regarding this whole area. Most of the statements made by my predecessor were made prior to the issuance of the report from the task force on offtrack betting.

Mr. Singer: And subsequent; the policy statement came subsequent!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I don't believe it did.

Mr. Singer: Well, he certainly formed it at the time the report came forth.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The last few remarks by my predecessor that I was aware of were in respect to the bill that had been introduced in the House of Commons, particularly when Mr. Lang said the bill is exactly what Ontario wants. Then I believe Al lost his cool on that one and tried to correct him.

Mr. Singer: Yes; and he said that Ontario doesn't need that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That also gives an idea, as I have indicated, of the influence of the federal government.

I must say I am really not sure whether or not my predecessor did in fact comment on the task force report and whether he agreed entirely with it or not. But I certainly agree with the recommendations in that report. So, if he did, we are ad idem.

Mr. Singer: Whoever might have agreed or didn't disagree, apparently the minister now agrees. Could I ask him a further question: Is this still government policy and does he intend to implement it when he gets the necessary amendments to the Criminal Code?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As far as we can see now, Mr. Chairman, this is our plan. Based on the amendments we want to the Criminal Code and the recommendations in the task force report, we hope to be able to proceed and implement a system of offtrack betting.

Mr. Singer: I was interested, too, Mr. Chairman, in the secretary's comment about the serious failure of the system in New York. The reading I have done about it indicates that Mr. Samuels, I think it is he who runs the system down there, has run a very successful system. He has made a lot of money for the city of New York out of this system. I hadn't noticed anybody saying at any length it was a serious failure, although I did notice some opposition from some of the bookies and so on. I hadn't noticed anyone concerned with the increasing revenue that was pouring into government who felt it was a serious failure. There were some administrative difficulties. Perhaps the minister could tell us of the breakdown and the reason he called this a serious failure.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, there has been a report issued from the New York Racing Commission which held an inquiry into the system because of complaints and as an anniversary inquiry, after a certain number of months, to review the system and make some comments and changes if necessary. The inquiry indicates that it hasn't been working because, as the hon. member says, these are being run by cities in the United States. The attendance at tracks, particularly at upstate tracks, has fallen tremendously as a result of betting shops that were available, mainly on the big tracks, around New York City.

Mr. F. Drea (Scarborough Centre): Downstate ones!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: So what the inquiry of that state racing commission is now recommending is a system somewhat similar to what is recommended for Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is interesting. Has the minister spelled out, for instance, in draft legislation, the method by which we are going to proceed, because I noted in the minister's comments that he had a promise from Ottawa last January that it is going to implement the necessary amendments, and I think one could presume that that is probably so. I have talked to a few people up there over this past weekend and that was the indication I got as well.

I would think that there is a sufficient commitment there that the minister at least can have in mind a skeleton outline for the system as it might come into being. At least he could have in mind what his target date might be within X months after he gets the enabling legislation. How soon will the government be in business?

Is it going to have it in many locations? Are there going to be 10 shops in Toronto and a couple in Owen Sound and one or two in London? What sort of system does the minister envisage he is going to bring into being? How is it going to be run? Are the commissioners going to be given complete control over the thing? Is it going to be taken entirely out of the Legislature's hands? Is the minister or one of his colleagues going to be responsible to the House for it? What kind of thinking has he done about it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I can say that there is a skeleton proposal or skeleton legislation; it is by no means in the area of draft legislation at this time. Our target date is some time this year, depending on the introduction of new federal legislation. At first, I would assume there would be shops in the larger urban centres, probably in those areas where there were the offtrack messenger shops—Burlington, Oakville, Milton and places like that; probably the same sites. Who knows?

Mr. Singer: We might even make arrangements to take over their leases. Some of them aren't doing so well.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right. I would assume that we would move fairly slowly because we won't be completely mechanical, shall we say? We won't have computerization of the whole system at first by any means. We will move gradually and open shops in that way. If you read the recommendations indicating the makeup of the board of commissions, I would assume that there will be, as the report says, representatives of all facets of the industry.

Mr. Singer: You could probably work Southcott and McMurtry in now.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Again, as the recommendation says, the system would initially employ manual ticket selling procedures. There will be a central computer which will be used for collecting bets. You can envisage them a little bit like our liquor stores in Ontario, as far as the milieu or environment is concerned of these government-operated or controlled outlets in the various communities.

As I say, I think it won't take that long, really, to implement a system once we have the skeleton or the framework we want in light of whatever changes are made in federal legislation.

Mr. Singer: I have a couple of other fields apart from this that I want to explore but I don't want to monopolize the time.

Mr. Lawlor: I have a question in this one field.

Mr. Singer: Okay.

Mr. Lawlor: What do you see as the role of the Jockey Club in all this? I trust, from your analogy, that it won't be like brewers' warehouses run by the beer companies. Have they any role?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I don't believe they do have, not in the recommendations. No; there's a representative of the Canadian Standardbred Horse Society; the Horsemen's Benevolent Protective Association; Ontario Harness Horsemen's Association. It could be that in one section—for example, they are recommending three members appointed by the government of Ontario upon the recommendation of the racetrack operators, with one member nominated by the largest operator—the Ontario Jockey Club—one member nominated by the rest of the A class tracks and one member nominated by the B class tracks. They would nominate one member.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask the minister about the small track operators, who are very concerned about offtrack betting in this province. If I understood you correctly you are meeting with them at the present time. We know in this province there are some very fine small tracks operating and they've spent thousands and thousands of dollars to build up their small racetracks.

I would like to ask the minister—in the United States where offtrack betting is permitted, are these small tracks going out of business? Do you think that—I understand you are in favour of bringing in offtrack betting here when the legislation is passed by the federal government—this will affect these small tracks more than the larger tracks?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, that is a concern of all the horsemen in the harness racing area of the sport in Ontario. The correspondence that I'm getting from their association, for example, always points to New York as an example where attendance at the smaller tracks has gone down substantially.

As I indicated to the hon. member for Downsview, this was because of their system, which was not entirely operated on a state-wide basis but at the city level. Because of the very large purse, many of the upstate people were staying away from the smaller tracks and betting on the offtrack system, where outlets were available pretty well all over the state.

I don't think that would be the case here. I think a great number of people, particularly north of southern Ontario, still enjoy going to the tracks, and can easily reach some of these B and C tracks where offtrack betting services won't be available. I feel that under our proposed system the concern as to attendance shouldn't be as serious.

I think, for example, that the revenue we can generate with a system of offtrack betting will not only help the thoroughbreds and the larger tracks, but will also help the harness racing people. With the split we may be proposing, everybody will get a reasonable share of the tote.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to turn to another topic briefly.

Mr. Chairman: Just a minute. Are you still on this same question?

The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, on the question of offtrack betting, I would hope that we would be extremely wary of having anything to do with the OTB from New York State.

First of all, it's a matter of record that one of their ploys—and I presume they're going to try to do it again this year—is to try to steal the revenue this province obtains from the two meets at Fort Erie and the two harness track meets at Garden City in the Niagara Peninsula. I presume Erie county will be given the go-ahead again to try to siphon off our revenue by having offtrack betting on those races.

It is not the goodwill of New York State or its offtrack betting authorities that has stopped this. The only reason it has been stopped is because of the Jockey Club in this province. The way in which the Jockey Club do it—and I don't know whether it's common knowledge or not—is that if Erie county or other offtrack places in New York State try to siphon off revenue from this province, they will not release the names of the horses that are running prior to five minutes before the race. They have the right to do so, and of course this would foul up the attempts of Erie and Niagara counties to siphon off our funds.

Secondly, the fundamental reason that New York State has failed, Mr. Chairman, and I suggest this is a moral consideration that is not confined to our party but certainly for the House as a whole—I know the member for Kent would be very interested in this particular one—

Mr. Lawlor: How can anybody bet if they only get the names of the horses five minutes ahead of time, whether in Erie, here or at the race track?

Mr. Drea: Just a moment now, we'll get to the member for Lakeshore in a minute.

The particular problem is that New York State books its own bets—

Mr. Lawlor: The member is explaining things to us—well explain!

Mr. Drea: Well just a moment!

New York State books its own bets. They were tempted, very early on, not to work through the parimutuel operation or to give track odds; they started booking their own bets, and on races that were not held in New York State. They started booking bets on particular horses in the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness, the Belmont and other affairs. This became very widespread; in other words, they were running a service where they were taking revenue from what was done by other states.

They also have a system of credit. I think one of the things we have to be very careful of in this province—and I hope you'll be very cognizant of it—is that offtrack betting may be a source of revenue—I agree with you, I think it should be tapped—but at the same time it is also a danger. There are certain considerations on which I think we have to be extremely careful, particularly in regard to Class B tracks and the ability of country people to function in the harness field as they have done for a great number of years.

I think this brings us around to the particular point that this is why your ministry is there. It seems foolhardy to me to divert it to the Attorney General, who is charged with the responsibility of making sure there is no offtrack betting at the moment under the Criminal Code, for the Solicitor General (Mr. Yaremko), who is charged with making sure the police enforce the Criminal Code, for the Minister of Correctional Services, who is there to try and reform the bookmakers when they become guests, and for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement), who has the lottery field under his jurisdiction.

I think that in this one area alone—offtrack betting—this seems to answer the great many perplexing questions that were revolving through the mind of my friend from Lakeshore the other day when he wondered why you were there at all. I suggest that even on a thing as basic—and I think it is government policy—as offtrack betting your ministry is performing an excellent function, because without you we would be unable, at the cabinet level, to discuss the implications of offtrack betting, because the other members of the Justice Secretariat, the other ministries, are specifically charged with responsibilities to curtail that at the moment.

Mr. J. F. Foulds (Port Arthur): They should be charged with irresponsibility.

Mr. Drea: Well I think they have done a very excellent job. I think that if you looked, Mr. Minister, at the number of offtrack locations this year as compared to last year—and I can assure you that while I am fairly well known at racetracks I have never placed a bet with a bookie or a messenger service yet—you will find that for every 10 that were operating last year there are less than one-half operating today; and I think the other ministers are to be commended for that.

Mr. Singer: You are aware of how long it took until the police started to go into those places? A year and a half. I think it was a year before they looked into them at all.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if I could turn to another topic, if the discussion on offtrack betting is completed for the moment, are the minister and his colleagues able at this time to give a considered view of the government of Ontario on the question of the effect of the retention or abolition of capital punishment on the enforcement of law in the Province of Ontario, or alternatively the prevention of violent crime in Ontario? I take the position at the present time to be that since the end of 1972 capital punishment may be awarded as the ultimate punishment for certain offences and that the moratorium is now past. The minister will be aware, as I'm certain his colleague the Solicitor General is aware and others engaged in the administration of justice are aware, that there is substantial pressure from the police associations in the Province of Ontario to maintain capital punishment in certain limited areas.

I'm not asking the minister to express his particular, individual moral viewpoint on the question. I'm asking whether or not it is the considered judgement of those charged with the enforcement of the laws in the Province of Ontario that the enforcement of law is enhanced or affected in any way by the question of the presence or non-presence of capital punishment in certain areas?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, first of all, as the hon. member knows, although the federal government in 1968 amended the law to provide capital and non-capital degrees of murder, and indicated that capital murder was in fact killing of a police officer or guards, there have in fact been no executions for these charged and convicted of capital murder since 1968. So this makes it very difficult to in any way assess this so-called trial period. Because there is no question that those who are embarking on a life of crime, or professional criminals, are aware of the fact that all convictions of capital murder will be commuted.

So this sort of clouds the issue; this makes it impossible to have a fair analysis as to whether or not capital punishment is in fact a deterrent; and what effect it would have on the rate of crime in this province.

There are figures that the Centre of Criminology will make available which will indicate that up until the end of 1972 there has not been a marked percentage increase in the number of capital crimes.

But then you can get another set of figures. I believe these have been presented by the police association and retentionists and show in effect that in spite of the increase in population there has been even a substantial increase in the rate of murder in Ontario; and in the rate of what would be classified as capital murder.

So, really, without sort of revealing a personal position here, there has probably been more evidence to support the retentionists than the abolitionists. But at the same time we have to be aware of really the uselessness, I think, of the so-called trial period and any figures that relate to that trial period, in view of the number of commutations.

I think there has been an increase in the rate of violent crime—for example muggings and armed robberies and victim crimes. Many of these, of course, are attributed to the increase in drug trafficking, particularly in hard drugs and narcotics. In this way, of course, there is a certain number of people involved in this whole milieu who end up committing a capital or a non-capital offense—such as the case with the Toronto policemen and their deaths.

But this is a debate which, in my opinion, will rage on. You'll have abolitionists and you'll have retentionists; you won't really change the minds of either one. There is the argument, of course, of the police association in line with the idea of swift arrest and sure punishment; that this would be a sufficient deterrent to cut down on the increasing violent crime rate.

Mr. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I may suggest to the minister, the question is not one which can be allowed to simply rage on—to adopt the minister's phrase—as a continuing debate among the abolitionists and the retentionists. It is, as everyone knows, a sensitive and very highly emotional topic.

What I am suggesting to the minister, Mr. Chairman, is that it would be important from the point of view of law enforcement in the Province of Ontario if, in whatever objective way it were possible to do so, that the resources of this government be directed toward evaluating—with all of the qualifications and assumptions and corrections that need to be made—of evaluating the various positions which are put forward; the statistical information, with again whatever qualifications or presumptions have got to be used, related to the Ontario experience over the period of the last 10 years so that there will be some effort made, objectively, to provide this information.

Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly clear that for those who are concerned with abolition as well as those who are concerned with retention, the legitimacy of their motives is not the matter which is under consideration. All of the people who speak for representative organizations speak in good faith and for specific interests. It is very important, because of that, that this ministry, and particularly the minister in charge of this area of development, should direct attention toward the development of some adequate method of evaluating the arguments pro and con, to the extent that they are based upon police experience in the Province of Ontario. I used the particular example of capital punishment because it is one which is paramount in many people's minds when one speaks of law enforcement.

I might say that I noticed that the minister fell into the same habit that most of us do of making unqualified statements about the relation, for example, of robbery and the drug trade; the relation of violent crime to the drug trade. All of these areas of police statistical information, which is provided on a non-qualitatively assessed basis, lend themselves in my view to the kind of study which this ministry and this secretariat should undertake.

If there is one thing which is lacking in the Province of Ontario it's any real responsible assessment of crime statistics and the extent to which they can be classified in varying and different ways. For every classification which is put forward to support one view, criminologists and others who are concerned about this question are able to evaluate the statistics on a much sounder basis and to put them forward as, at least, either trends or as alternative methods of assessing the information.

It seems to me that if we are going to come to grips with the question of the protection of society, and on the other hand the rehabilitation of the offender and the process by which those two goals are achieved, one of the most valuable tools available to us—away from the emotional context in which most of these discussions take place—is for sound evaluation techniques to be applied in this field.

I would suggest, with great respect for the limited statistics which are available and which one looks at from time to time, that there is a great field of study which, with the resources of this government, could be carried out and help and assist the consideration being given by us, in the fashionable language of the day, to the arguments in favour of law and order as against the arguments in favour of individual rights, procedural protections of accused persons and other such essential elements in the criminal process, right from the very inception to the end of the course in which one person or groups of persons are involved in that system.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I find myself in substantial agreement with the remarks of the member for Riverdale. I had hoped when we had first heard about the new kind of organization—because some of us did read COGP No. 3—that there was an opportunity, particularly in the justice field, for some new thinking or some leadership on behalf of one minister, who is not going to be bogged down with the day-to-day detail of running the police or the day-to-day detail of looking after the jails or looking after the Crown attorneys or looking after the grab bag of Consumer and Commercial Relations; an opportunity at least for one minister to sit down and do some thinking and to have some opinions.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of these estimates, I was so disappointed in the nine pages of pap that the minister brought forward. I read it again after I left the House on Friday just to see if my quick assessment was faulty. I kept returning again and again to the quote from Jeremiah, which certainly impressed me no end. Now I have tried, the member for Lakeshore has tried, the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) has tried, and the member for Riverdale has tried, to draw the minister out on some of his ideas.

I think it would have been very helpful to the current raging debate about capital punishment that it rage as little time longer as possible. I thought, Mr. Chairman, it would not have been unreasonable to expect that the Provincial Secretary for Justice of the Province of Ontario, with all of the resources at his command, could have given us some idea of whether or not his colleagues and he have done any thinking about this.

Unfortunately, again we get another five or 10 minutes of the same thing. He says it is a difficult problem. Certainly it is a difficult problem; no one disagrees with this.

If you want my personal opinion, I will be very happy to tell you I do not believe in capital punishment; but I would like to hear the government's opinion, if there is one. I would like to hear the minister's personal opinion, if he hasn't yet discussed it with his colleagues. What does he think about it?

It is an important debate and a lot of people feel very strongly about this for a variety of reasons; and I don't question any of their motives. But surely, Mr. Chairman, at this time, when we get the Provincial Secretary of Justice here, he can and should have an opinion on everything.

Let me try a different subject. Let me talk about the constitutional question. I addressed some questions to him about the constitutionality of the suggested action of the government of Alberta in fixing two-tier price levels for natural gas. We got one of those convoluted answers from the Provincial Secretary which said: "Well, yes, it is an important question; and yes, we might have thought about it. It should warrant looking into. It is difficult, and certainly we will have it under consideration."

I found great difficulty in rationalizing that kind of an answer, which was a non-answer, with what the Premier (Mr. Davis) told us a few days later. I don't know if the Provincial Secretary for Justice listens to what the Premier says or reads what the Premier says. I suspect that the Premier knew far more about the constitutional aspects of it, as did the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough), and neither one of them had bothered to take him into their confidence. My suspicion is, and if he will go back to Hansard I think he will find it in the Premier's words, that they had given very serious consideration to the constitutionality of the proposed measures that Premier Lougheed is thinking of taking, or probably is about to take.

Now let me ask the minister again, and as politely as I can, what studies has he done in the Justice galaxy about constitutionality? Has he done any? Has he been invited to share in the discussions about energy from a legal aspect? Has he been there? Have any of his colleagues been there? Have any of his senior civil servants been there? Does there exist in the Justice ministries—any one of them—a written opinion by one of the competent people who might write such an opinion about what might happen and the effect, I think it is of section 121 of the BNA Act, on what Mr. Lougheed is proposing to do?

Or is my suspicion correct that for some reason best known to the Premier and best known to the member for Chatham-Kent, they have chosen to bypass the Provincial Secretary. And that while they may have their own opinion, they haven't sought an opinion of the Justice ministry or the Justice Secretary or the Attorney General?

If that in fact is so, which is my suspicion, I wonder why? In the Throne Speech there was some strong indication at long last of a principle that many of us have been espousing in this House for a long period of time, that the Attorney General—or you can transpose it as the Secretary of Justice—should be all the law for the Province of Ontario. Those words in the Throne Speech were completely meaningless.

If we take at face value what you said in answer to my questions about constitutionality in this natural gas dispute, and compare it at face value with what the Premier said, and my interpretation of the nods of the member from Chatham-Kent, then I suggest you were bypassed. Could you elucidate on that, tell us if you played any role in this and perhaps what your opinion is about the constitutionality of Mr. Lougheed's proposed action?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, if I remember the question that the hon. member for Downsview asked me, it was more than had we looked at that or had we an opinion on this, but whether in fact we were going to make representations at that time, immediately, on the constitutional matters with the Premier of Alberta. And I had indicated to him that, yes, our policy field was in fact involved in discussions with the Resources Development policy field and, I would assume, with the parliamentary assistant to the Premier, on the ramifications of the two-price system as enunciated by the Alberta government. An opinion had in fact been given by a senior civil servant of the Attorney General's department—

Mr. Singer: You didn't tell us that. That's not what you said.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, I didn't say that. That's right; I didn't say that. But I said that we were involved in this area—

Mr. Singer: You thought that perhaps you should get involved; that's what you said.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I said we were involved in the consideration of the constitutional aspect but, the hon. members know, I believe the question was asked when the Premier of Ontario was in Alberta discussing this with the Premier of Alberta; it was a question simply calculated to embarrass the government in some way.

Mr. Singer: Oh come on!

Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The idea that—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order; the hon. minister is attributing motives to me, that I ask questions simply calculated to embarrass the government of Ontario. As you know, I wouldn't do that, Mr. Chairman; besides, it's against the rules that he should impute motives to me.

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead, Mr. Minister. He has no point of order.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Hear, hear!

Mr. Singer: Calculated to embarrass, I believe, is a motive; I wouldn't do that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, the question was asked when the two Premiers were discussing this; there was no intent at that time to issue a writ of summons or mandamus or anything else, because it was hoped this could be settled on a high plane, as two provinces should settle it.

Mr. Singer: Who is the issuer of mandamus this week?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There is no question that the constitutional question is something that has been and will be discussed between the two provinces. However, even at this stage there is a question of whether or not the two-price system is a matter of rebate or whether in fact there is a dual charge in two different areas. And I assume that the Alberta government, in withholding fuel from its customers or in some way not doing business with its contractual customers, is acting in some legal way under legislation that has been passed and approved by the government of Alberta—for example in respect to the conservation of its resources. This may be one of the reasons why there is some claim of right to propose a two-price system and the negotiations that are going on at this time.

Mr. Singer: Well Mr. Chairman, I am glad the hon. secretary has thrown so much light on the situation. I wonder who is the issuer of mandamus? Do you have an officer down there? Is he the same one who stamps things "obscene"?

It has always been my impression that a mandamus is an equitable remedy, which the courts might or might not grant on an application. I don't think the Provincial Secretary for Justice should be so loose with his legal phraseology as to talk about the issuing of mandamus as though you just picked up the right form of paper and sent it out. He should be aware that there are procedures.

He might even be aware that the divisional court has certain procedures—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: As usual the hon. member for Downsview is misinterpreting the remarks attributed to some member of the government. All I said was, by way of a very broad example, particularly in reference to people in transmission companies that happen to have contracts with the government of Ontario, that maybe mandamus could be a remedy.

Mr. Singer: No! Mr. Chairman, I think that it is incumbent upon the Provincial Secretary for Justice, of all people in this House, to be sufficiently familiar with legal procedures that he could use the correct legal terminology. And he should know, if he doesn't, that you don't issue a mandamus like issuing a new stamp—that you go to court and ask for an equitable remedy. And if you happen to go to the right court, and your argument is reasonable, the court might, in fact, issue an order of mandamus; but the Provincial Secretary for Justice doesn't.

I would commend to him, a brief study of certain legal tomes that will familiarize him with what processes there are available.

But let's get back to the real point at issue. I don't deliberately want to embarrass this minister.

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): You don't have to!

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): He is convicted out of his own mouth on that.

Mr. Singer: If he embarrasses himself, I can't help it. I can't help it, and I'm sorry.

But I still would like to know, Mr. Chairman, what their approach is. Does the minister really mean what he is saying—if Loughheed is acting in a certain way one presumes he is acting legally and that's the end of it?

Did the minister know, at the time I asked him the question, that a senior official had been asked for an opinion and had given it without the knowledge of the minister? Because that's what the Premier told us and that's what you've now admitted; and you said you didn't know because the Premier was away.

Well, if senior officials of yours are giving opinions to people in government, one would presume that you knew. And if he knew, Mr. Chairman, if the Provincial Secretary knew, then he misled the House. I wouldn't use the other word that goes with it, because I've had to withdraw that on another occasion. But if he knew that there had been an opinion—

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member for Downsview get back to the vote?

Mr. Singer: Oh, I am. I am on the question of the role of the Provincial Secretary for Justice, and so far—

Mr. Chairman: Is there any information you want about his role?

Mr. Singer: Yes there is; there is indeed.

I want to know, Mr. Chairman, what is happening about the constitutional problem relating to natural gas; what this minister is doing about it; what kind of opinions there are; and what effect, in his department's opinion and in his opinion, section 121 of the BNA Act has on what Mr. Lougheed is suggesting he is going to do. I think that's simple.

And when I take that, and try to put it into context with what the minister said to us a few weeks ago in answer to questions, and what the Premier said, and what the minister now says to us, it leaves the whole thing up in the air.

Is it worthwhile at all, Mr. Chairman—and this is really the thrust of my question—asking this minister anything about constitutional questions? Does he know how they get before the courts? Does he know how they are resolved? And what are you doing about this particular constitutional question? Can you tell us?

Mr. Chairman: Well, I think the minister just answered—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: No he didn't. He didn't at all. He didn't at all and he doesn't need your help.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): You don't need to be an apologist.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: He doesn't need your help at all.

Mr. Chairman: Well, that's all right.

Mr. Singer: All right, let him try.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, in spite of the danger of having my words further twisted, I will just simply say, and reiterate, that an opinion has been submitted, by a senior law officer of the Crown, to the Premier and to his parliamentary assistant with respect to constitutionality of the proposals of the Alberta government in respect to the two-price system that is being studied by the Premier and by those people who are involved in negotiations with the Province of Alberta.

I would think that until these negotiations are completed, that would be sufficient for me to say, as far as my interpretation of the constitutional position of the Province of Alberta is concerned, or whether or not the stand of the Province of Alberta is unconstitutional and whether or not we should take action in light of those facts.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I guess we have got to the stage now where there is an opinion. I presume the minister isn't going to tell us what that opinion is. Would you care to table that opinion? Would you let us have a look at it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would suggest you ask the Premier for that. It was given to the Premier.

Mr. Singer: Well, it came out of your office. Surely you have control over what goes on in your office, or one would think you do.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, the person who gets the opinion has control.

Mr. Singer: Oh! All right, if you won't tell us what is in the opinion, could you tell us if the government, or the Provincial Secretary, is satisfied with that opinion and whether or not you sought outside opinions in addition to whatever opinion came out of your office?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We haven't sought outside opinion. The opinion we were asked for has been supplied to the Premier's office. We don't have any reason to disagree with that opinion. There is a consensus and if the Premier or his parliamentary assistant feels that another opinion is required, I would assume he will get one.

Mr. Singer: Without consulting you?

Mr. Chairman: There is an amendment to the—

Mr. Singer: No, we are not ready for that for a long time yet.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, I am asking for a bit of advice from you or from the Provincial Secretary for Justice. Would this be the proper place to take up something about the grand jury?

Mr. Chairman: At the present time I think we should adjourn this debate.

Hon. Mr. Winkler moves the committee rise and report.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR:

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. Kennedy moves second reading of Bill 12, An Act to amend the Highway Act.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy: (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, in 1971 in Ontario there were 1,282 drivers and passengers fatally injured in collisions and 71,455 were injured, so said a Star editorial of March 7 of this year.

The editorial went on:

Australia has shown that compulsory safety-belt wearing can bring about a dramatic reduction in road deaths and injuries. In two years, traffic deaths were decreased by 20.2 per cent the first year and 23 per cent the second. Seatbelt usage increased from one-third to about two-thirds by passengers and drivers.

Lap belts have been fitted to all new motor vehicles for quite a number of years; first in the front seats, then in other seats and now in all seating positions. Shoulder harnesses have been fitted for the two outside front positions in addition to the lap belts since 1968.

In Ontario, at least two-thirds of the drivers and passengers in motor vehicles equipped with seatbelts don't use them. In the year following the introduction of legislation making seatbelt use mandatory in the state of Victoria, Australia, seatbelt usage reached 75 per cent in metropolitan areas and 64.1 in the rural areas.

This information states the number of fatalities dropped by 14 per cent as against the Star comments I made earlier. There is some disparity in these figures. They go on to say that there was an increase of three per cent in other Australian states that did not have the legislation. Now, all Australian states have accepted the mandatory seatbelt-use legislation.

I might say that as this programme developed which resulted in the legislation, a select committee was established in the State of Victoria. It held hearings over a number of years. I have a great deal of material that has been sent forward to me from this state and also from the national capital, Canberra.

A few other general statistics, Mr. Speaker. I mentioned initially that in 1971, in Ontario, there were 1,282 deaths. In addition, one out of every 4,300 deaths in Ontario resulted from a motor vehicle accident. One person out of 94 of the population was injured in a motor vehicle accident. This is fairly simple mathematics. I was astonished by the figure of 71,455 injured that was contained in that Star editorial. So we can see that our chances are about 1 in 100; that is not very big odds.

One passenger vehicle out of each 1,325 registered in Ontario was involved in a fatal collision. One out of 15 passenger vehicles was involved in a reportable collision. In the United States, one new passenger vehicle in every 200 built will be involved in a fatal accident in its lifetime. Another projection: One new passenger vehicle in six will be involved in a disabling injury accident in its lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. members might ask how my interest in this subject developed. I can state that I went to Australia and landed in Sydney on the day that mandatory seatbelt usage came into effect in the state of New South Wales, which is equivalent to a province. I rented a car. As I started to drive away, with some irritation at the buzzer on the belt, which everyone suffers, I was reminded that it was necessary as of that time to fasten the seatbelt, which I did. After two or three days it became as automatic as turning the key on.

This car had not only the lap belt but the shoulder harness as well. There was a little discomfort initially, but it didn't last.

This was two years or so ago. Why didn't we do something then? I don't know, but in January we were over with our select committee at Dearborn to the Ford safety laboratory, and there we saw some demonstrations of the tremendous damage that can be done in a collision. They had a vehicle that moved, if I recall correctly, at 5 mph and hit an immovable wall. The devastation, the damage to the car and the shock to the model that was inside were just unbelievable—at 5 mph. It would give anyone quite a jolt.

As additional evidence of seatbelt effectiveness, Cornell automotive crash injury research programme established that there were 50 per cent fewer dangerous and fatal injuries to the belt wearer compared to the non-belt wearer. Again the statistics don't always jibe, but on balance the members can see there are many pluses. A study at the University of North Carolina of 8,822 cases of 1967- and 1969-model cars involved in accidents shows that through the use of lap belts an overall reduction of 43 per cent in serious and fatal injuries was observed. Serious and fatal injuries in frontal collisions were reduced 32 per cent and serious and fatal injuries in single-car, off-the-road accidents were reduced 49.5 per cent, just about half, through the use of the lap belt.

The American Medical Journal of March, 1968, has an article, "Causes of Deaths in Automobile Accidents," and in summary states:

One hundred and thirty-nine automobile accidents in which 177 occupants died were studied over a four-year period. Ejection of the occupant from the car was found to be the leading cause of death. At least 50 per cent of the drivers at fault had been drinking prior to the collision.

Collisions at the door caused a significant number of fatalities by collapsing and compromising the passenger compartment. Impacts with the steering assembly and instrument panel ranked high as causes.

It is postulated that 40 per cent of those killed could have survived had seatbelts been worn and an additional 13 per cent if seatbelts and shoulder belts had been used.

And this should appeal to my hon. friends opposite; In Sweden, a study was made by Volvo of 28,000—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): They're so far ahead of Ontario, it is not even funny.

Mr. Kennedy: The member is listening, I see.

Mr. Martel: Right!

Mr. F. Laughren (Nickel Belt): All of us are.

Mr. Kennedy: A study was made by Volvo of 28,000 accident cases involving pre-1967 cars.

Mr. Martel: It is the member's government that won't let us vote on his bill.

Mr. Kennedy: In the 6,870 cases where the driver or right front passenger was wearing both the lap and shoulder belts, there were no fatalities at speeds below 60 mph. In contrast, where the occupants were not wearing seatbelts fatalities occurred at speeds as low as 15 miles per hour. So I think our impressions of the exhibit at Dearborn were pretty accurate—there are fatalities at 15 mph; you can get quite a jolt at 5 mph.

Another American report on lap-shoulder restraint effectiveness in the US lists 160 cases where lap and shoulder belts were worn in passenger cars. There were only two fatalities in the 160 cases, and both were as the result of intrusion into the passenger-occupied space—a tree in one case and a part of a colliding vehicle in the other.

Mr. Speaker, there are other studies; two from Cornell. There's a statement on a 30-mph head-on crash:

The passenger in a vehicle travelling at 30 miles an hour, if unrestrained by a seatbelt, is not likely to survive in that his head may experience forces of approximately 120 times the force of gravity on impact.

There's a Chrysler Corp. study with respect to multiple impacts.

In about 50 per cent of the multiple impact accidents, the subsequent object struck is another motor vehicle or a pedestrian.

Now there were some debates and discussions that I read with respect to this. The seatbelt not only enables the driver presumably not to be so severely injured, but it enables him—or could enable him—to keep control of the car. Thus, there is a significant feeling that were he able to keep control of the car, this could probably or possibly prevent multiple impacts.

In estimates of the use of seatbelts, I mentioned 30 per cent in Ontario; in the US they range from 2.5 to five per cent. The Journal of Safety Research reports that 81.5 per cent of children use seatbelts when both parents use seatbelts and both parents are highly educated, whereas 3.1 per cent of children use seatbelts if the parent is neither highly educated nor uses seatbelts.

I've had several letters come to my attention since the introduction of the bill, Mr. Speaker. I would like to quote two or three of these which are in support. They weren't all in support; some were violently opposed, for some reasons I'll go into later.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Did the member send them to the minister?

Mr. Kennedy: Pardon?

Mr. Stokes: Did the member send them to the minister?

Mr. Kennedy: I haven't yet. I'm accumulating them, then I'm going to turn the whole thing over to the minister.

This letter is from a Mr. and Mrs. Sherk of Mississauga, in support of it. They refer to something that has been mentioned before: "There are three elements involved—the road, the car and the driver." The driver is the one we're speaking about. They quite rightly say that if education won't work, which it won't, then they support mandatory use.

Mr. Webb writes, to register support for the bill: "In my opinion, it's long overdue and would reduce crash fatalities overnight."

I mentioned the availability of seatbelts, Mr. Speaker, and this has evolved since 1962. In my car, which is a 1971 model, there are six belts.

Mr. Martel: That's just one of the member's six cars.

Mr. Kennedy: Pardon?

Mr. Martel: That's just one of his six cars.

Mr. Kennedy: Restraint systems are now available or installable in nine out of every 10 cars on the road. I might mention too that if the buzzer bothers people now, in September, 1973, a starter interlock and sequential warning system will be installed in all new cars. This requires every front seat occupant to latch his seatbelt in order that the driver can start the engine. Also, each belt must be unlatched when the occupant leaves the car in order to repeat the starter sequence the next time the seat is occupied.

When the lap belt is worn, the shoulder belt automatically must be worn. There is a Globe and Mail clipping—I don't have the date on it but I think it's fairly recent—where a U of T study tested 10 cars and mentioned the danger in shoulder belts. That's the heading on it anyway. But it seems to refer to persons other than average who are driving cars, like short people or tall people, and I think the item can be challenged, or perhaps the news article isn't quite complete. It's by a Prof. Patrick Foley. He said some women would not even be able to start their cars. Well, if you can't start a car with a seatbelt on I think you shouldn't be driving with or without a belt.

There is some claim that the seatbelt doesn't prevent death, it causes death. I've heard this and I think we all have. But I think on balance you've got to say that there's just unrestricted argument in favour of support for belts.

I want to touch for a moment on the matter of the idea of people using belts on a voluntary basis. As we know, it's 30 per cent here and something less in the States apparently. But in the States a recent campaign was conducted at a cost of $51 million by the National Safety Council and no appreciable result was obtained.

In all fairness—I've read two letters in favour — I've had some correspondence against and some leave it optional "If we want to kill ourselves or injure ourselves we can." Incidentally, the minister himself has taken a survey in his riding and the response isn't all that good for the legislation. I'm not sure of the terminology he's using in his questions, but many people apparently want to leave it on the optional basis. The Canada Safety Council is on record as being in favour of total use while the Ontario Safety League and the Motor League encourage the use.

We have this argument against the use—it is my life. Driving licences now are not obtained as originally they were when it was one's right to get one. Now it is defined as being a privilege. There are implied consent laws with respect to alcohol and drugs—to use them or not to use them—but there is a law against their use. Attempted suicide is illegal and may lead to arrest and confinement.

Workmen are required to wear protective clothing and safety helmets on the job. We have to put them on if we go around to look at construction sites. I think we have all experienced this. There are safety steel-capped shoes required in some factories and I suppose one could object to that as being an intrusion into one's privacy.

There is a reference here, too—and I wanted to touch on it—to the burden imposed on society by persons who are killed or injured in auto accidents. The Consumer Association speaks of this because if victims of car accidents go into hospital, of course it's a public charge. A lot of these confinements in hospital are lengthy, and some persons are then forever on a public pension. I don't accept the validity of the comment that it is my life and it's up to me. We must think of the suffering of the families and, as I say, the burden on society.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other items I could touch on, but perhaps other members will speak on them.

The matter of enforcement, again, is a difficult thing. Somehow or other the State of Victoria, since the inception of its legislation, has laid 800 charges in nine months.

I would hope that the matter of compulsion and compliance and applying the law would not become an issue. I hope that there will be enough public support that everyone would buckle up and wear his seatbelt.

I'm grateful to the coroner's office which provided some material for me. I think if everyone could see and become familiar with some of the evidence we have in support of this, all the traffic out on the street would stop right now while those who didn't have their seatbelts affixed would do them up, because there are so many advantages. We could save something in the order of 250 lives in Ontario if we had this legislation, Mr. Speaker. I hope other members will support it, that the public will take it up and accept it as being a very excellent and worthwhile bill.

I can add that the States of Georgia and Colorado are seeking this legislation and that it's called for in Ohio. It is something that we are going to hear more about. As I say I hope the members here will take this up and, of course, the government; and that the public support which is so necessary will be forthcoming.

Mr. Stokes: Not much enthusiasm over there.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I rise to take part in the discussion of Bill 12, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act, one dealing with making the wearing of seatbelts mandatory, I support the bill with mixed reservations.

Were you, Mr. Speaker, giving the bill an opportunity to come up for discussion in the committee, we would ask that certain amendments be introduced to the legislation. It does not go far enough especially when we deal with individuals under eight years of age and the tiny tots.

It's nice to hear the member introduce a bill like this but we wonder—this is supposed to be a government that listens. It doesn't even listen to its own members, Mr. Speaker. Here we have had the member from the government side who is only 15 or 20 ft away from the minister involved; he could very easily whisper to the minister some sweet nothings plus the comments here and we would have this legislation. But, apparently, members over there aren't even on speaking terms with one another.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Plus listening terms.

Mr. B. Newman: Back in March 12, 1963, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview, (Mr. Singer) in his discussions of the estimates of that time, asked the minister of the day the following question. I am quoting now from page 1681 of Hansard, March 12, 1963. The minister will note that that is 10 years ago. A government that listens but doesn't act!

Mrs. M. Campbell (St. George): It listens but doesn't hear.

Mr. B. Newman: The member for Downsview said:

The other point I wanted to ask—and I don't know whether I am under the appropriate vote—was about seatbelts. Insofar as seatbelts are concerned, I think the hon. minister said during his main remarks this afternoon that he would answer later whether or not they would be made compulsory. Is the "later" now, or does he want it under another estimate?

The minister of the day, Mr. Speaker, made the following comment:

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think it is late enough now. As far as I am concerned, I would not want to make the installation and use of seatbelts compulsory for the very good reason that it would be impossible to make people use them.

So, you can see, Mr. Speaker, that the government is not interested in acting. You will find likewise that, even though we are discussing this bill here today, there will be no action whatsoever on the part of the government.

The bill does attempt to legislate safety and, as the member had made mention in his remarks, we do legislate safety. We do legislate safety when it comes to employment; we do legislate safety by means of inspection when it comes to construction; we even legislate safety when it comes to entertainment as far as the amusement rides on a carnival are concerned. Likewise, the member made mention of a series of statistics in an attempt to prove the validity of the making of the wearing of seatbelts compulsory.

We have heard those statistics time and time again in the past, Mr. Speaker, so I don't intend to repeat them. We know that the wearing of seatbelts can have a beneficial effect.

The big difficulty in automobile accidents is not so much that the individual flies out of the vehicle, as it's the fact that he hits some part of the vehicle. The internal accident in the vehicle comes from the fact that he is not strapped down, either by means of a lap belt or by a combination shoulder belt and lap belt. As a result of not wearing these, being thrown around the inside of a car, he is confronted with a series of injuries that very often are fatal.

All one will have to do will be to listen to the radio on Friday of this week and we will hear a series of statistics as to the number of people who are going to be killed this weekend, being a holiday weekend. It does send chills down one's spine when we can avoid a lot of these deaths, accidents and injuries, or avoid a large number of them, by mandating the wearing of seatbelts. But I don't foresee any action whatsoever on the part of this government.

Some people always say that the wearing of seatbelts is one's own business, if he wishes to wear them or not. That's not true, Mr. Speaker, because when the individual doesn't wear a seatbelt and gets involved in an accident, then you and I have to pay for his injuries by increased premiums to the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): And higher car insurance.

Mr. B. Newman: Plus the fact that we have a higher car insurance premium to pay. So the individual, who says he doesn't have to wear a seatbelt and that we're taking away his rights by forcing him to wear a seatbelt, does not take into consideration that he is likewise penalizing us by not wearing the seatbelt and by not taking necessary safety precautions.

I would like to read a short excerpt from a letter by a John A. Kany, an engineering consultant in Dearborn, who wrote to the Detroit Sunday newspaper concerning the wearing of seatbelts. He says:

With seatbelts, the heart-breaking tasks of emergency crews and medical staffs who must patch up the maimed bodies brought in from the wrecks would be greatly reduced.

No [and he is replying to a previous individual], you are not alone in that driver's seat without your belt. A lot of other people are sitting on your lap, and we will all suffer if your selfishness results in a needless injury to your person.

Mr. Speaker, one of the amendments that we would have made in the bill if it had come up for discussion in a clause-by-clause study, would concern the fact that the legislation excludes those under eight years of age. This is discriminatory because buses carry a lot of students under eight years of age, and they would not have to provide seatbelts for the students riding in those buses. Likewise, even in a car an individual under eight years of age would not have to wear a seatbelt. If we are going to make it compulsory, I think we have to make it compulsory throughout the spectrum of the years.

Consumer Reports published quite an elaborate article in its August, 1972, issue concerning safety restraints for children. I don't intend to read their report, but they make a very good case for the compulsory use of this type of a restraint, even for children only a month old. One of the unfortunate things was that up until the time this article came out there were only three safe seatbelts available for children—and I'm referring to tots, not older children.

However, we in Canada don't let that stop use from working; and, as a result, we have a company in Weston, Donlee Plastics, which manufactures the Guardwell child safety seat. This company has been able to do something that even the American companies couldn't do: it has developed a safety restraint for children that meets all US specifications and surpasses most of them; and it is looking forward to being able to get into the US market to provide that type of belt to the Americans.

Another problem in the wearing of seatbelts is today's new shoe styles. Women wearing big platform shoes, some of them 4 to 6 in thick, find it extremely difficult to drive cars; they find their knees practically under their chins when they remove their feet from the pedals—

Mrs. Campbell: Has the member seen the men's shoes?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, I shouldn't discriminate against the women. Even the men have gone from the ridiculous to the sublime in the wearing of the platform or elevator types of shoes. That type of shoe is a real hazard when it comes to driving a car. Some consideration has to be given to that.

The hon. member mentioned the study undertaken at the University of Toronto. That study was called "A Human Factor Study of the Man-Machine Interface in Automobiles." It was conducted by a Miss Nancy Ireland, a Miss Steffan Herrnsdorf and a Mr. Malcolm Norman, students who presented the thesis in conformity with the requirement for a degree of Bachelor of Applied Science from the University of Toronto. The supervisor of the study was Professor P. J. Folley.

They conducted an extremely elaborate study and found that there is a vehicle—it happens to be Japanese—that can accommodate any size of individual. But the Canadian auto makers don't do this: for some unknown reason they do not design the car with safety as one of their prime objectives.

I hope the members of the House get an opportunity to read this report. Likewise, I hope that the manufacturers read the report presented by these three people. Once they do, they should be more than pleased to design their cars with safety in mind, so that an individual wearing a lap belt or shoulder belt still is able to reach all of the controls. One of the problems with the shoulder belt is that with the physical structure of some individuals, it acts as a garotte and tends to choke.

Mr. Speaker, I have used a little more than my time, and I would like at this time to conclude by saying that we will support the legislation introduced by the member, and hope that the government will take it to heart and follow through with the recommendation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, sometimes in this House we get glimmers of hope. When I look back over the past several Parliaments and realize the struggle that some of the members of this House have put up to get even some consciousness of safety, as far as the motor car industry is concerned, coming from that side of the House, then I say that today is a monumental event when a member of that party, if not that government, has introduced a bill relating to the safety of people who are driving motor cars.

I know that the member who has introduced this bill has been interested, as a person, in safety for some time. I grant him that. But somehow it has never got through to the members of the Treasury benches over there who primarily deal with legislation. So this is hopeful, and all I can say is that we wish this member well in his new crusade in the whole safety field, because it is desperately needed.

Going back over the years, many of us were talking of seat belts, then introduced by the State of New York because the United States government wouldn't touch the issue. The enlightened members in the State of New York decided they were going to pass the legislation and they did, making the placing of seatbelts mandatory in all motor cars. That was a revolutionary step at that time, Mr. Speaker, and because the motor car industry finally had to make cars this way for the State of New York, and because it was such a very large market, it was very easy then to extend it, particularly when California began to demand standards. Then it spread across the United States.

But as far as Canada was concerned, when we talked safety in this House, in all its aspects, the answer we got from the minister was, "Well, we are not sure where the responsibility lies, whether it is here or in Ottawa."

We got along with that for some years and we kept pounding away at it, and finally Ottawa did accept the responsibility for setting safety standards in the motor vehicle industry. But unfortunately all Ottawa did—and this I draw to the attention of the member who has just spoken—was sort of look to Washington and say, "What is Washington going to do? What has Washington done?" and then slavishly follow the standards that Washington set.

Instead of giving leadership in Canada in field after field after field, leadership that would have been followed south of the border, we waited until they made a little stroke of the pen and then we followed them in making our own little stroke of the pen.

Of course, that has been a slow process and it is still a slow process. So I say to the hon. member who has just spoken that the primary responsibility for setting safety standards is now in Ottawa, and so Ottawa ought to be acting in this field, and ought to be mandating that seatbelts should be worn right across this country, rather than leaving it to provincial governments to have to set those standards.

So I say to my hon. friend, let him go to Ottawa and talk to the minister there, because I think that is where the first action ought to come, since that has been the pattern in the years gone by and still is. But failing Ottawa action—and I agree that we are not likely to get it there—then this province ought to be moving, and moving quickly, to do the job.

I am in the position today, Mr. Speaker, of being the third speaker on a subject on which I think there is very little disagreement in this House, and also of having the documents that I have here on my desk already used so that I have very little left to say.

Mr. Stokes: The member says it much better.

Mr. Young: But members of the Legislature generally find no difficulty in filling up the time allotted to them. I want to say this to the member who introduced this bill; When he pointed out that 80 per cent of children use seatbelts if their parents use them, the document which was quoted a moment ago by my friend from—where is it?

Mr. Gaunt: Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Young: Windsor-Walkerville—my hon. friend quoted from a document which is put out by the Consumers' Union—Consumer Reports—August, 1972. This document points out this fact, that according to medical experts, children under the age of four or weighing less than 40 lb should not wear the conventional lap belt, and this my hon. friend stressed. Also, children shorter than 55 in. should not wear a shoulder belt because of the obvious danger of choking from that belt. The webbing would ride too high and could injure the child's neck and, of course, choke him.

Facing that fact and facing the reality of the situation which my hon. friend pointed out—that we can't afford to incorporate in this bill that children under eight should be excused. Facing those facts, we should add to this bill compulsory wearing of devices designed to protect children. And those standards have been set.

My hon. friend mentioned certain devices which are now known and I call the attention of the House to a recent publication by Washington, "What to buy in Child Restraint Systems". It outlines what kind of systems should be used for children, infants, for smaller children, and children up to four years of age. They are different because the needs of these children are different.

I'm not going to put on the record today what this pamphlet says, but it points out a fact which is backed up by Canadian figures, that about 10 per cent of the people killed in automobile accidents are children; and 10 per cent of the people injured in automobile accidents are children.

That points out the defect in the bill which we are discussing here today. We cannot afford to leave a gap which has reference to 10 per cent of the casualties in automobile accidents. My friend should amend this bill before it comes to the next stage in the House, to include the devices which are designed for the protection of children.

I mention this booklet because I don't know of any similar one issued by Canadian governments although I have articles here written by Canadians. Since we so slavishly take our lead from Washington in this whole field of automobile standards, I think it is perfectly right for me to call the attention of the House to this document, and to say that it is one of the best things which I've seen in the whole field. In detail, it gives the standards which should be set out for the restraints used for babies, for very small children and children up to the size which I have already mentioned.

The member should, of course, lead this House in making that amendment. Even though government members seem to be very averse to doing that kind of thing, I think this member should do that before he brings this bill to the next stage in the House, of clause-by clause examination. Since he is interested and the government is interested in this we hope it will reach that stage before too long, and that he should make that kind of amendment to protect the children in automobile accidents.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time is out, but I say here today that this province, since Ottawa will not give us a lead, should lead Canada. Just as the State of New York led the United States in the installation of seatbelts and making their installation mandatory, so this province should lead this country of ours in making it mandatory that effective seatbelts for all ages of passengers should be installed and should be worn by every passenger in motor cars in this province and in this country. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Middlesex South.

Mr. R. G. Eaton (Middlesex South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the bill put forth by my colleague from Peel South. I think it is of extreme importance to us to see this safety step taken in the Province of Ontario. I think we just have to be on the highways from day to day to come across accidents and see situations where, if a driver had been wearing a seatbelt perhaps his life would have been saved, or perhaps he would have been saved from serious injury.

It is interesting to note that there is a project going on in car safety research in Saskatchewan at the Regina campus of the university there. It's a joint project between the federal Ministry of Transport and the University of Saskatchewan. They have written to the member for Peel South to get a copy of his bill, to see what steps he is suggesting be taken in safety.

An hon. member: The member should send Hansard along too.

Mr. Eaton: I think we will send copies of Hansard out to them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Eaton: I think it's interesting to note that in many parts of the country they are taking a serious look at trying to bring about some type of compulsion that will make people wear their seatbelts. It's great to go out on a campaign of education to try to encourage people to wear seatbelts, but it's another thing to really get them to do it.

I had an experience of working for an organization and spent a lot of time on the road for them, and it was mandatory that when you drove your company car, you wore a seatbelt. Otherwise you weren't covered for several things and you could get quite a reprimand from the company. You got in the habit, because you knew you were supposed to do it.

It's a habit that certainly has stuck with me because of that. And it's one that I think you can get people to develop, if they know they have to do it, then they'll do it. It's much a case of carelessness when they don't put the seatbelt on.

It's interesting to note that in many other parts of the country they are pushing legislation to do the same thing. I have an article here from the Toronto Star:

LAWYERS ASK LEGISLATION TO ENFORCE USE OF SEATBELTS

An organization of US lawyers has called on Congress to pass a law requiring motorists to wear seatbelts and shoulder harnesses while they are driving. "When our drivers are forced by law to use these devices," said an editorial in the Journal of American Trial Lawyers Associations, "they may demand the further improvements which could be made available now." The 23,000-member association is outranked by the 150,000-member bar association.

The article set out a four-point programme to reduce murder by motorists, in which it demanded that drunk drivers be banished from the nation's highways. Perhaps this is something that could proceed on from this member's bill and which might be another bill that could be introduced.

Fifty thousand people were killed in automobile accidents in the US last year, 10 times more than in Canada. I think that if the members look at the statistics on the accidents—whether the drivers were wearing seatbelts or not—they will find that in numerous cases they were not wearing seatbelts. Yet many other accidents happened where people were wearing their seatbelts, and were saved.

Here is an article on some researchers from Ann Arbor, Mich., investigating causes of death in automobile accidents. They point out the statistics of lives that were saved by seatbelts. With seatbelts, 63 per cent were saved, who quite likely would have been killed in the same accident if they had not been wearing their seatbelts. With shoulder harnesses as well, another eight per cent were saved. I think these statistics certainly speak for themselves when you see the number of lives being saved.

I believe there is another article—and I don't know whether this was quoted before or not, but it states in Ontario alone it could have meant 250 lives saved if the occupants of the vehicles had been wearing their seatbelts in accidents in the past year.

Mr. Young: If this government had acted sooner.

Mr. Eaton: Well, I'm not sure that it's the kind of thing that we should have to act on. It's the kind of thing that—

Mr. Stokes: What is the member talking about it for, then?

Mr. Eaton:—we should be able to do without compulsion. But because the public won't react, sometimes you have to move to these things.

Mr. Young: Well, let's move a little.

Mr. Eaton: It is a shame when we have to enforce these things all the time by legislation—by doing it by force. But when we see the deaths and we see the need for it, then the far-sightedness of the member in bringing this bill in, as he has done today to suggest that it takes place, is evident.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would support the bill the member has introduced here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Eaton: I think it's easy for the members on the other side to sit there and say the government should have done this or done that, but they would probably be the first to criticize when we tried to do something like that. They would fight against the compulsion.

Mr. Stokes: We are on the record.

Mr. Eaton: You know, it is easy to speak out of one side of your mouth at one time—

Mr. Stokes: We are on the record!

Mr. Eaton:—but when the government tries to do it, they speak out of the opposite side of their mouths.

Mr. Young: The member should have been around a few years ago.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that in this case they are supporting the bill. I hope that if we get an opportunity to bring it in as a government they will show the same support for it.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the bill of the member for Peel South.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. member for York-Forest Hill.

Mr. P. G. Givens (York-Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, the reasons for supporting this concept are so obvious and manifest that it's a shame to have to spend a whole hour—whether it's a charade or whatever it is, I really don't know. This is another indication of a private member's bill being brought in by a member of the Conservative Party where the government itself should have acted and should act right now.

It seems to me the motor car appears to be the last vestige of rugged individualism there is, for even your home isn't your castle today. You have to abide by certain zoning bylaws, certain regulations and certain land uses and a certain standard of building bylaws; but when it comes to your motor car, outside of the external thing such as driving at a proper rate of speed or not being drunk or not being impaired, they are still manufacturing cars that have defects and we are still reluctant to inhibit drivers who cause accidents and drivers who put themselves in positions of danger and become public charges. Even with respect to liquor—we won't get into that now because that in itself would be a subject that one could talk about for hours.

It seems to me governments are afraid to act because they feel that a man, in driving a car, is still a rugged individualist until the last. I feel that unless the carnage becomes absolutely tremendous, 72,000 being injured and a few thousand being killed doesn't seem to mean a thing and governments won't act. And they should act!

We keep on talking about statistics of people who get killed. You know, I never concern myself about the guy who gets killed. That probably sounds awful; but the person who gets killed in a car accident is through with his troubles. He may have imposed troubles on others. His death may be a burden to his widow and his children and his family and his associates, but as far as he is concerned he is through with it.

I am more concerned about the person who is injured and the person who contributes to somebody else's injury. As a matter of fact, when I get my car insurance, and I have done this for all the years that I have been driving, my first concern about my insurance policy is what happens in a public liability accident rather than what happens if I get killed. I am more concerned in that regard.

And that's not because I feel I am my brother's keeper, but I feel that you create more damage by injuring a person than by killing him; because in the latter instance his life is over and the loss that's incumbent on the person who has been killed is minimal compared to that in the person you injure and whom you harm for the rest of his life. I am more concerned about the over 70,000 people who are injured because of the fact they hadn't their seatbelts on when they were driving.

There is no question in my mind that seatbelts are effective. There have been judicial decisions. There was one recently in the Supreme Court of Ontario when Mr. Justice J. H. Osler reduced damages by 10 per cent because the person who was injured did not have a seatbelt buckled on at the time of the accident. It was the first time such a decision has been made. Undoubtedly this would be an important precedent, that failure to wear a seatbelt was considered to constitute negligence on the part of the driver by the Ontario Supreme Court. If it isn't negligence it can also be contributory negligence on the part of somebody else.

Everybody in this chamber knows that courts are very small-c conservative. Courts are reluctant to act in the absence of legislative enactments because they feel that they shouldn't be imposing their will on legislatures. When a judge feels that it has been proven to him, to the extent that this judge does, that seatbelts are that effective and that if the seatbelt isn't used it should constitute contributory negligence, then there is only a step that a legislature can take and that is, make it mandatory.

We have a lot of ornate cars today. People are driving big cars and smaller cars with all kinds of chrome and all kinds of fancy accoutrements connected with them. I think that we should force manufacturers to see to it that more safety devices are put in, and make it mandatory that people who have these safety devices should use them, otherwise they are no good.

We do so, not because we are trying to prevent the loss of life and not because we are trying to prevent injuries, as much as for the fact that these injuries involve public funds and the expenditure of public funds with respect to people who are injured. There is the cost factor with respect to hospital care, health, family welfare, police costs, and property damage, in which I and the other members and all the citizens and taxpayers of the province are involved whenever there is an accident.

Because of this tremendous cost which has been escalating by virtue of the fact that there have been so many accidents, we have a right as public officials to pass a law to say—this will be the 11th commandment—thou shalt not be able to get into a car and thou shalt not be able to drive without putting on your seatbelt and without wearing your seatbelt properly as it was meant to be worn.

I say that there is another salutary effect with respect to wearing a seatbelt, or using other safety devices in the car. That is, I find when I get into my car and I put on my seatbelt it makes me feel safety conscious, from the moment that I fasten that seatbelt around my girth. It brings to my attention that I just don't get into that car, put the thing into drive and—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Revenue): Must be quite a job.

An hon. member: A long way round.

Mr. Givens: Yes, it is quite a job because they don't make these seatbelts as long as they used to, Mr. Speaker. But it makes a person think when he gets into that car, before he drives hell bent for leather down the road, that he has taken this precaution and it makes him think of the other fellow. It has a salutary effect. Even if for this reason alone, it would be worthwhile to make it mandatory to wear seatbelts, with failure punishable by a fine.

Not only that, but on finding that a driver hasn't worn his seatbelt, it should be considered an element of negligence or an element of contributory negligence in any civil case, where he should be punished, even if he is awarded damages, by loss of 10 or 15 per cent of the damages awarded to him.

Another thing: A lot of people feel inconvenienced when they get into their car and the buzzer sounds. Another thing manufacturers should be forced to do—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. On my list we have another speaker as well. Would the member please keep that in mind.

Mr. Givens: All right, I'll just wind up.

I would see to it that this buzzer, or a light, should go on outside the car to embarrass that particular driver who refuses to put on a seatbelt. The buzzer noise should be sounded from outside, or a light outside should indicate that he has refused to put the safety belt on.

I could talk on for another half hour, Mr. Speaker, but at your request I shall take my seat in order to enable another one of my colleagues to speak in favour of this bill that is before us.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. M. C. Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand up and say a few words on this topic.

The question has been asked, why has this government been reluctant to bring in such legislation when it appears to have such unanimous consent? It appears that it is the motherhood resolution.

But I think the facts are in and this government is very well capable of smelling out political strength, and I don't think that the general public as a whole has accepted the theory that seatbelts should be used. I think this has been what has hindered the government in introducing this legislation, because this government's idea of leadership is to find out which way the public is going and then run like hell and get in front of it and then say, "Follow me, this is the way we are going to go." That is the kind of leadership that we have been getting from this government.

I have some statistics here which will encourage the government and will tell them which way the population is going. They will encourage them to run out in front of the crowd and ask the crowd to follow them.

In a safety-belt survey conducted by the Nickel Belt Auto Club in Parry Sound, Nipissing, Timiskaming, Cochrane, Sudbury and Manitoulin Island, which is part of the area that I represent, by a club which has a membership of 40,000, 55 per cent of that organized automobile club membership was in favour of seatbelts. They said that drivers should be required by law to wear safety belts. Now that is the driver. In the survey 78 per cent of them indicated that passengers should also be required by law to wear safety belts.

I think the government has nothing to fear. There will not be any political backlash. They have the majority with them. So let's go ahead and have it done. Certainly we know that this private members' bill is not going to be enacted into legislation; it has to be done by a government official.

There is certain other support that I think I should bring to the attention of the ministry. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Automobile Association has representatives right across this land from the Alberta Motor Association, to associations in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec, and so on. It represents a pretty wide body of public opinion in our country. This association did pass a couple of resolutions in 1972. This report is for the year ending June 30, 1973, so its recommendations are new. I will read policy 3.3 of the report;

The Canadian Automobile Association endorses and encourages the use of safety belts and other restraining devices complying with established standards for both front-seat and back-seat passengers and calls for a continuous public education programme on their value.

So there is nothing to fear there; there is no political backlash there.

Mr. Speaker: Could the hon. member conclude his remarks, please.

Mr. Germa: I'm very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker: This concludes this order of business.

Clerk of the House: The 14th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. Hodgson in the chair.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 16, 1973

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, PROVINCIAL SECRETARIAT FOR JUSTICE

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. A. Renwick (Riverdale): It looks as though we are going to have a little private time together. Mr. Chairman, could the Provincial Secretary for Justice give the House the benefit of the current thinking of the government on what it plans to do about the checkerboarding of lots, as a result of the answers to the various questions which were posed by the government under the Constitutional Questions Act to the court of appeal of Ontario?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Provincial Secretary for Justice): Mr. Chairman, there was a number of hypothetical questions dealt with by the court of appeal regarding certain situations, which indicated that an intent to avoid the application of the Planning Act was not in itself wrong, that that in itself didn't invalidate the title. At the present time the Attorney General (Mr. Bales) and his senior counsel are studying the report and the decision of the court of appeal.

There is a possibility—and I'm saying only that there is a possibility—of some sort of legislation validating titles that as the result of checkerboarding are now in trouble, and conveyances and mortgages that were made under this scheme and are deficient in some way. That is one of the considerations. There is a concern by the secretariat and by the Attorney General when certain solicitors who act for people and who are aware of the legislation—for example, the Planning Act—who are aware of the objectives of the Ontario government, particularly from the point of view of land development and planning, intentionally try to circumvent existing legislation.

There are two situations, of course. There is one dealing with those cases and conveyances that took place prior to the 1971 amendment, and those subsequent to it. However, as I say, because of the difficulty and the hardships suffered by many people—particularly in one area east of Toronto—as a result of this checkerboarding, and the fact that mortgages have been judged invalid from the point of view of foreclosure proceedings, some type of provincial legislation will be necessary.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my colleague the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) raised with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Clement) a day or two ago—and then by redirection to the Attorney General—the question of Pellegrini Enterprises, of 3019A Dufferin St. in North York, and the lots being sold by that company in the township of Nottawasaga to unsuspecting buyers. There was a reply made at that time that, for practical purposes, there was no one in the government who had any jurisdiction to deal with the matter in such a way that would override the traditional view of caveat emptor.

Now if my understanding is correct—and it's difficult when one reads the decision of the court of appeal to believe that one has a fair grasp of exactly what they were trying to say—in substance what they are saying is that unless the legislative draftsmen in this assembly can match their wits with the conveyancers in downtown Toronto and elsewhere we are never going to be able successfully to implement the intention of the Legislature with respect to the policies set out in the Planning Act.

I think that's a fair interpretation because the court still seems to think that, when the overall planning of the government of Ontario is announced in the Legislature of the Province of Ontario through an Act of the Legislature, we are back in the feudal times when it's permissible for conveyancers, by the exercise of what is called ingenuity, to circumvent the policy of the Province of Ontario.

Frankly, I don't understand that. Is it a fact of life that the courts in the Province of Ontario are so far behind in their capacity to decide what is the intention of this Legislature that they have got to resort to this language about "recognizing the legitimate ingenuity of conveyancers operating under 20th century conditions, as their ingenuity was recognized in much earlier periods before statutory reform began"?

Is that the game which we still must play in terms of statutory interpretation? I don't think that there was any question in the minds of the members of the Legislature when the statute was enacted as to what we were trying to do both in the 1960s and then, with the amendments which were forced upon us by this ingenuity, in the early part of the 1970s. We cannot, in this assembly, sit here, attempting to enact statutes of the Province of Ontario drafted on the advice of legislative counsel and then find the very disruptive and unsettling conditions which have resulted in the Province of Ontario, and continue to exist.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the government is sadly in default if it allows these leisurely processes of the courts to perpetuate, as they have now done for about four years, the whole question of check-boarding and whether people do or do not have valid title to their lands. The part of the decision of the court which bothers me immensely is not so much the specific and delightful answers to the particular questions which were posed to them. Anyone can play the little game and draw his little chart of Green acre, divide it up and make up his little chart and think what a fine, lovely, pleasant little game this is that the court and those select people who appear before it can become engaged in.

What does concern me is when the courts appear to be unable to answer question No. 9 which was put to them. The only answer which they give to question No. 9 is that that's the best they can do in the circumstances. Their answer simply is that the transaction would be voided if its validity was dependant upon alleged good faith and want of notice in a purchaser for value, for his knowing participation in such a scheme would destroy any defence based on those circumstances.

I don't think it requires any genius to work out that, if a person alleges he is a bona fide purchaser for value and he is not a bona fide purchaser for value, the scheme would be voided. I don't think that there is anything which requires the exercise of legal ingenuity to come to that conclusion. Again to say that a distortion of the facts with the object of deceiving the public administration would likewise avoid the transaction, doesn't seem to me to advance one iota the cause of clarity with respect to the ownership of land in the Province of Ontario.

There is the one matter, and the crucial matter, Mr. Chairman, which the court of appeal refused to answer. They didn't say they refused to answer it. They said in their own way: "As indicated at the outset in our answer to question No. 9, we are unable to answer this question in more specific terms." What they said was that they were not prepared to give even the benefit of the doubt to the Legislature as to what its intentions were. I am quite certain that anybody in this Legislature who was concerned about the problem had no doubt whatsoever what the intentions were.

We're not back now playing some latter day game of court supremacy over the Legislature of the Province of Ontario. If we have to go back to preambles in the recitals to all of the statutes in order to make our intentions clear, I think it is about time that we did that. Anybody who would read—anybody but a lawyer constrained within the framework of his own legal education and warped into the system—if he were to read this judgement affecting titles to the land in the Province of Ontario would say that they can't be talking about land in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton):
Right on!

Mr. Renwick: I am suggesting to you, Mr. Chairman, and I am suggesting to the Provincial Secretary that there is something seriously wrong with the whole question of the way in which titles to land are registered in the Province of Ontario, and the way in which land is sold in the Province of Ontario, if we are going to live in a continuous state of unsettlement because of what took place in these developments in rural Ontario in direct contravention to what everybody in this assembly knew was the intention of the assembly.

I am saying to the minister, Mr. Chairman, what we have said before, that there are going to have to be prospectuses, if necessary, given to every single buyer of land; that if the prospectus does not clearly set out all of the terms and conditions and if it turns out to be false in any material respect or fails to contain the kind of information which is required, then the person can have a right of rescission and get out of the contract.

I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that in the case which was put before the House in the question of my colleague, the member for Yorkview, and we can do it again when we go downstairs into estimates in the Attorney General's branch—on the general policy question there is a serious default in the government, when we stand up session after session to ask about the title to land in the Province of Ontario and all the answer that the government can give is, "We are considering it."

I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that the lawyers who are advising the government and the lawyers who are members of the government are hypnotized by the mythology of a court which doesn't understand what the statutory intention of this Legislature is with respect to planning in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. J. M. Turner (Peterborough): How about the lawyers in private practice?

Mr. Renwick: I am saying, Mr. Chairman, let's go right back to the problems that this government is going to face. It's going to move into the area of controlled land use on a scale which has never yet been seen in the province. If the legislative intention of this assembly is to be hamstrung by interpretations of the court of appeal in the Province of Ontario, I am saying that you will never be able to implement an effective land-use plan in the Province of Ontario. Why, just think of the problems which will occur when you get around to zoning land for agricultural purposes, and you then have persons trying to circumvent that legislation. The value to persons circumventing that will mean that they will be able to pay the highest priced conveyancers in the Province of Ontario, who within the traditions of the legal system dealing with land in the Province of Ontario will deal with the problem as if we were in feudal times.

I wanted to make the point to the Provincial Secretary for Justice. Since the Minister for Consumer and Commercial Relations indicated that he can't do anything about the case that my colleague the member for Yorkview raised, and since the only reply that the Attorney General can give is that the matter is now being considered in the light of the decision of the court of appeal, I am saying—and I am going to say it for the last time, Mr. Chairman, and then I will sit down and wait for the secretary to respond—if we join in that game it will not be this Legislature that is enacting laws, it will be whether the skill and ingenuity of the legislative counsel sitting under the gallery and advising the government can be matched by the skill and ingenuity of the lawyers downtown.

I suggest to you that if we have reached that sorry pass in providing for the orderly and effective development of the land-use programmes of this province, there is something seriously wrong. We don't need to have a great deal of meticulous study now on the questions which were answered by the court of appeal. The answer is perfectly clear. The interpretation statute of this province with respect to how the courts will deal with the legislative intent of this assembly, and the ancient rules governing the decisions of the court about statutory interpretation, have got to be amended in such a way that the courts have the kind of leeway which will permit them, in the language of the courts, to give the assembly the benefit of the doubt and not to give the benefit of the doubt to the ingenuity of the conveyancer downtown.

I am saying, Mr. Chairman, that in the absence of adequate reform of the land law system of the Province of Ontario with respect to the registry offices and to land titles in the absence of some kind of prospectus requirements for the exploitation of rural lands for development purposes, in the absence of some clear redefinition of what the courts are required to do in interpreting the intention of this Legislature as enacted in statutes, this government is in serious trouble with respect to any effective land-use programme.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member for Riverdale mind if the Chairman broke in for a minute to allow the introduction of some guests in the west gallery?

Mr. Renwick: Well, you stopped me in full flight, but that's okay.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member for Peel South introduce our guests?

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Chairman, if I may, estimates come and go each year, but we have with us tonight three groups who will perhaps come just once. I would like to introduce to the hon. members the 214th Cub pack. They are from the riding of the member for York West (Mr. MacBeth); the 158th Boy Scout troop from the riding of the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick (Mr. Grossman); and last, but not least, five scouts from the great riding of Peel South, the 44th Mississauga Boy Scouts. We welcome them here tonight.

Mr. Chairman: We all appreciate very much the member for Riverdale allowing this interruption; he may now proceed.

Mr. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say to my friends in the east gallery up here is, let them be careful before they buy land in the Province of Ontario under this government Planning Act.

Mr. M. Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): There is more wisdom up there than there is over there.

Mr. Turner: This is west, not east.

Mr. Renwick: West. I am sorry.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. We interrupted the member for Riverdale and he was very gracious in conceding the time to introduce our guests. Please carry on.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, let me speak again to the Provincial Secretary on this point. It is very interesting that in England as long ago as 1926, after a considerable amount of study—although it only took them about 2½ years under the leadership of Lord Birkenhead to do it—they effected a complete renovation of the land-owning system in England. Now there are great differences, and I'm not suggesting that that system can be transplanted here, but I would guess that as long as any person has been sitting in this assembly we have been talking about reforming the land registration system, to clear it up, but I would guess that as long as any person has been sitting in this Assembly we have been talking about some of the ancient language, ancient concepts and ancient ideas which are still embodied in our land laws. I am suggesting that this is a top priority of this particular Provincial Secretary for Justice in the Province of Ontario.

He talked in his opening remarks about concepts and principles as being matters which were near and dear to his heart. Well, I am suggesting to him that he has got to break out of the legal trap that this mythology has put us in. I am not going to recite at length any of the provisions of the statute—perhaps we can deal with it in more detail before the Attorney General.

We are in serious trouble. There are not only the persons who do not know whether they have good titles to their land at the present time but persons who now don't even know whether, having bought the land, they will be in a position to build on it at any time. In addition to being in that unsettled condition, the province is talking about embarking on the land-use programme which will plan out the use of land in the Province of Ontario for a long period of time.

The lesson is perfectly clear from the court of appeal in the quaint legalese of that decision that the Interpretation Act of the province is going to have to be amended; and the other matters to which I have referred are going to have to be dealt with.

I have taken up some time in the House on this particular question simply because I wanted to emphasize to the Provincial Secretary for Justice that this is a matter which can no longer be allowed simply to go on in limbo the way it has for so many years; and that the ministry is obligated to stand up in the House and say we are going to correct any defective titles by legislation if that is necessary—because, mark my words, the point has arrived where legislation is necessary.

The court of appeal has said in substance that if it is a fraudulent device for the purpose of riding through the statute, they will knock it down, but they have left it open to indicate that if a lawful scheme is worked out that will avoid the intention of the Legislature, that it will be upheld. We can't afford the luxury of having the intention of the assembly thwarted by the ancient mythology of the court.

There are probably other members that want to comment about that; but I feel very strongly about it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Very well said.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I do not want to comment on that, but I give full marks in veracity to my colleague.

There are three matters; I will try to be brief. I don't think we want to unduly prolong these particular estimates this year, but rather get on with the Attorney General's estimates downstairs on perhaps a more nitty-gritty basis, as far as I am concerned; although Lord knows this has been little philosophically done.

There are three areas; one of them is looking at your department. And let me reiterate a bit what I said on Friday. Coming into the minister's portfolio, if I were in his role, I would look at it as an enormous challenge with almost unending possibilities, a number of which—and only a very few, a handful—have been pointed out to the minister in his job. I don't know why the minister, sitting in this particular designation and post, doesn't give various types of papers—call them Green papers if you will—on any number of subjects. You don't have to take governmental stands and you don't have to commit your government to any particular position. They can be matters, which simply under the burden and duress of this House, we are not up to date on. Again, I could mention just one area—criminology. Why couldn't you give a purple paper on criminology telling us what the newest—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Purple?

Mr. Lawlor: You have got the whole university community and your ministry contributes vast sums to the Centre of Criminology. What utilization do you make of it? What benefit or what feed-in to this particular body derives from that particular source? You could give a black and blue paper, if you will, upon the policy of policing; the philosophy of the police that we have previously mentioned in these remarks.

Mr. Stokes: How about red, blue and white?

Mr. Lawlor: There are a number of things you could do through your office if you would seize the gauntlet, if you would make it meaningful and not let the thing fall into desuetude, as the man who formerly occupied this post permitted it to do through sheer lack of imagination and through not being forthright enough about his office.

The second area I want to just mention briefly has to do with that kind of publication, that kind of desideratum over a wide number of topics having to do with the law, not just necessarily confined to Ontario, but having rapport and immediate impact to the Province of Ontario.

The Attorney General of this Province, for instance, publishes nothing, he gives us nothing, he brings forward no desiderata. But on occasion the poor, impoverished devils from the Civil Liberties Association—such a publication as this — the Canadian Civil Liberties Education Trust, who have no money, who latch on to people like me to contribute five bucks a year to maintain and keep them, do try to make an interrogation of the courts, do try to provide statistics and data upon which to give some insight as to which way the courts are going, how the judges are handling bail, what is the incidence of committals with respect to preliminary inquiries, with respect to any aspect of the system, and its inherent inequities.

But this Attorney General last year in the House pooh-poohed and denigrated this particular document. He said, "Oh, the range of sampling is so small as to hardly give any semblance. You can't rely upon a document like that, full of loopholes. Well, maybe you can't, and I shut up. But it's over a year and it has obviously ground in my groin and I am back here to say tonight that if their document is not adequate then let somebody else do it. Let you who have the where-withal dedicate a few dollars to studies, objective studies, that are available to all sides of this House as to how too closely safeguards are safeguarded within the criminal justice system of the Province of Ontario. We have nothing like that.

As I say, these people put themselves out to try to do some kind of a haphazard job with the funds available and then they are placed in the pillory. If this is the best we can do and this is the best we get, then I will rely upon it, and let this ministry and let all the ministries over there accost it in detail, point by point, and bring it under disregard. But they simply shrug their shoulders and say that, "It is of little worth as far as I'm concerned," on their side of the fence.

There is another matter that I wanted to mention and I just wonder if you would take it under consideration. Our judiciary really are held under wraps. Oh, you get the odd maverick like Edson Haines or somebody like that speaking up before groups or even from the bench on occasion, about various defects and loopholes in our law. While Lang up in Ottawa takes issue with people of that kind, I don't; quite on the contrary, we need more. But they do exercise a certain circumspect skill in this regard; they are very delicate about it and reserved, as they well should be, as members of the judiciary.

The people who are not reserved, and the people who ought to be called to account to some great extent, are the chiefs of police of the Province of Ontario. By which divine right, by what inherent gesture are they able to speak out on every occasion and sundry, condemning the Legislature, condemning the law, saying that they find this unworkable, that they won't co-operate, that they won't do this and that they don't like that?

These people are public servants as much as the rest of us—far more, really, than the autonomous judiciary. They are paid civil servants, and they have the effrontery and gall on many occasions to spit in the face of those who employ them.

I don't think they should be kept under wraps; at the same time, I don't think they should be given the area of free-wheeling freebootery in terms of language that they presently use. I say to the Provincial Secretary of Justice that we have never moved in on that area. Nobody ever says anything; we all grin and bear it. Invariably, the most vocal of them are also the most atrocious, the ones who wish to impose the full vigours of the law, in all its plenitude and majesty, upon the head of some poor devil of a citizen. They want hanging—they're all for it. There's the odd chief of police across the country who may have a more enlightened opinion, but by and large—I suppose it is a constitutional hazard and an occupational disease—they have to defend their own particular forces. They take what they regard as the vein of the matter instead of giving leadership in this particular regard.

I just want to bring to your attention under this head an article in the Globe and Mail which talked about a chief of police and the role of the police in Calgary, Alberta. There the man, being a new chief of police out there, said it was far more to their task that they were more beholden to the public in the direction of giving leadership and of giving some direction to the kindly things, and to be suave in the community, than to be forever lambasting the citizenry as being somehow predilected to the criminal, under suspicion somehow that we might commit an offence the hour after next, which is the basic way in which the jaundiced vision of most chiefs of police look upon each one of us, poor devils, as we try to exist in the community. This is a very widespread phenomenon, and I think you should exercise, now that you have the leisure—and you certainly have the effrontery—to watch the situation carefully and give some direction.

It is your responsibility, Mr. Solicitor General, far more than that of this minister, to give this some thought at least. I don't think you're likely to seize the bull by the horns. Some of those chiefs of police are pretty tough hombres. I wouldn't want to meet them at sundown on the main street—and I'm sure that you wouldn't either. As a matter of fact, I don't have to and you do.

I suspect that at high noon on some Thursday you might have to do the duties of your office and place them under some form of discipline with respect to the criticism meted out, not only to your ministry, but to the highly opiated versions of the Criminal Code and, to a degree, subversions of the Bail Act. There's nothing wrong with the Bail Act, it's been said over and over again; it's the way in which it has been administered. The administration of the Act doesn't seem to be that far out. If you don't like it, it's a new thing, it weighs heavily upon you, you find this business of weak-kneed, bleeding-hearted legislators giving in to every form of human complacency and guile.

Well, you could take the beggars down to the police station and lock them up for the night. Nothing would be a better cure. They won't be back in the entanglements of the law for a good long time. This business of spoonfeeding and giving milk to the public, letting them go home and giving them a summons, we find that terribly unpalatable. How will you ever get an ordered society and disciplined citizenry treating people with that particular form of kindness? No sir.

I never heard any member of this House speak out in this particular direction in this wise, and I wonder if it isn't the truth of the matter nevertheless, and just what you think as to what suzerainty should be enjoyed by these particular men inside the demesne of Ontario.

Finally, I have been asked by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) to ask a very specific question to which we insist on knowing the answer: To what degree have you made official use of Ontario airplanes? The air force over here has put a blanch in the cheek of Cambodia. We want to know a few details. What use have you made of government aircraft in the last year? Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for St. George.

Mr. Lawlor: Can't I get a few answers?

Mr. Chairman: It'll come, it'll come. Just wait.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Do you want to answer now, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Chairman, just very briefly, I know that both the hon. member for Riverdale and the hon. member for Lakeshore don't expect all of their queries to be answered—

Mr. Renwick: We do.

Mr. Cassidy: They do, and quite rightly.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: However, dealing with the problems with the Planning Act, and the conveyancing under the Planning Act, and the court of appeal's decisions in respect to questions put to it by the Attorney General—as the members know, the court of appeal indicated, basically, that if there isn't a fraudulent device used in a conveyance and the conveyancer has successfully avoided the application of the particular legislation, this could be considered a valid title.

I think the member for Riverdale questions the court of appeal for applying this rather narrow interpretation of the legislation, particularly when the intent of the Legislature, in fact, is known. The only thing I would say about that is that there is no doubt about the question that legislation must express, in the law, what it means; for that, of course, is what the person who is involved in the interpretation of that legislation must be able to rely on.

I realize that in the whole area of land law and conveyancing the public is involved; the government is involved, probably in these areas more so than, for example, the area of income tax. It has been a fact since we had the first application of income tax that it was quite proper for the citizen and for his counsel or for his tax expert to save what he could from the payment of taxes as long as he obeyed the law. In other words, if he found loopholes, if he was able successfully to avoid the application of the Income Tax Act, this was all quite all right. This was expected and this is why we have legislation; this is why we have lawyers.
